Where the discoverable origins of property show it to be trust property, the onus of establishing that it must have illegitimately come into the trustee's own right does not rest upon the beneficiaries. The onus lies heavily on the trustee to show by the clearest and most unimpeachable evidence the legitimacy of his personal acquisition. [p. 5, col. 1.].

In the absence of unique circumstances, a property discovered to be originally trust property, cannot be allowed to be converted into the private property of the trustee. [p. 8, col. 1.]

The position of a dharmakartha is not that of a shebait of a religious institution, or of a mahant of a mutt, which functionaries have a much higher right with larger power of disposal and administration and have a personal interest of a beneficial character. [p. 7, col. 2.]

A dharmakartha is literally and no more than the manager of a charity and his rights are never in a higher legal category than that of a mere trustee. [p. 7, col. 2.]

A trustee who is guilty of seriously reprehensible conduct by setting up an assertion of private ownership in himself and a powerful resistance to the recovery of the properties for the trust which he administers, and seeks to maintain his assertion by concocting accounts ought not, on any sound principles of law or of administration, to be permitted to continue in his office, and it is open to the true beneficiaries of the trust, as also to the Court before whom such delinquencies are established, to insist upon the first step towards trustworthiness in administration being taken by the removal of the trustee. JUDGMENT.

LORD SHAW.—This is an appeal against the judgment and decree of the High Court of Judicature at Madras, dated the 6th March 1917, which varied a decree of the District Judge of Chingleput, dated the 11th December 1914.

The suit was instituted by the present appellant and another, under the Civil Procedure Code, section 92. The prayer of the plaint was for an account of the respondent's management of a temple in the district of Chingleput since his assumption of office, and that he "be made accountable for all losses occasioned to this temple by his breaches of trust, for his removal from office, and for the settlement of a scheme for the management of the Devastanom and its properties." Incidentally, the judgment for accounts made in the suit has raised a question of complexity and importance as to th ownership of lands of considerable extent and value. The issue upon that topic is the principal one raised in this appeal. It is, whether these lands belonged to the temple or are the private property of the respondent, who, in point of fact, is its Dharmakartha or hereditary trustee.

The grounds for the removal of the respondent from the position of Dharmakartha have been added to by the conduct of the respondent in the course of the suit, and now include not only misfeasance and breach of trust, but the proved falsification of the temple accounts.

This question of removal from the position of trustee will be afterwards dealt with, but it may here be mentioned that the former question, viz., the question of the true ownership of the temple properties, so keenly contested by the respondent has not only to be determined on its merits, but may turn out to have a bearing upon the question of his removal from office.

The case is very involved, and their Lordships have to acknowledge the care which has been manifested with regard to it in the Courts below, and in particular the elaborate investigations of the history of this property made by the District Judge.

As it is desirable that the Board should endeavour to exclude from this judgment all such details as might obscure the question of principle dealt with, it may be well to consider the respective positions of parties in the clear language adopted by the District Judge. His narrative of the plaintiff's case is this:—

"2. The plaintiffs allege that they are the tirthom mirasidars and ubhoyakars of the said temple, that the defendant is its trustee, that its management since 1842, when the Government handed over the same, has been in the family of the defendant, that the endowments to the temple consist of mirs from the Government, income from lands and contribution from ubhayakars, that the administration of the temple by the defendant has been unsatisfactory and that he is guilty of various acts of misfeasance, malfeasance, nonfeasance, breach of trust and neglect of duty. The instances of misconduct are set forth in paragraph 9 of the plaint, the main item being with reference to the lands, wet and dry, and manyams described in A 1 to A 8 schedules of the plaint which it is alleged to belong to the temple, and the defendant is charged with misappropriation of the income from them without bringing the same into the temple accounts, and it is alleged that these accounts are not regularly and correctly kept".

His narrative of the defendant's case is as follows:—

"3. The defendant contends that he is the hereditary trustee of the temple and that his ancestors were the trustees even before the Government assumed management thereof, and denies that he is guilty of any act of misfeasance, etc., alleged in the plaint. He further states that the plaint temple never owned or enjoyed any of plaint A1 or A2 schedule lands, that item No. 1 of A3 schedule is enjoyed by the temple, and that, in item No. 2 of A3 schedule and in the first seven items of A 5 schedule, the Melwaram right alone belongs to the temple, that lands in A1, A2, A7, A8, were always exclusively owned and enjoyed by the defendant and his ancestors as their absolute property. The defendant further states that all the incomes arising from the lands belonging to the temple have been regularly entered in the temple accounts and duly accounted for, that the said income is not sufficient for the upkeep of the temple, and that the defendant has been meeting the deficit from his private funds, and that the accounts filed in Court were regularly maintained by the temple Karnams."

These statements show broadly and correctly the attitude of the parties to this litigation.

The temple in question is an endowment or institution for the worship of the God Vishnu. It is dedicated to a Saint or Incarnation called Tirumushi Alwar. The temple lands are at Madavilagam and other villages in the district of Chingleput, in the vicinity of the City of Madras. As the plaintiff in Head 3 of the plaint avers:—

"There is a Public Vishnu Temple at Madavilagam, a hamlet of Tirumushi, in Poonamalle Division, Saidapet Taluk, dedicated to Sri Jagannatha Perumal and Tirumushi Alwar."

That, in point of fact, a temple did exist there from ancient times, and that it was in possession of certain endowments in the shape of lands, seem to be undoubted,

The Board has had a reference to various historical authorities upon the subject of the Chingleput District, and upon the mirasi tenure therein. These records are voluminous. It is too much to expect that anything definite can be obtained prior to the devastation of the district by Hyder Ali in the latter half of the eighteenth century. The most valuable document is the Fifth Report of the Select Committee on the Affairs of the East India Company of the year 1812. Says the Report:—

"The jagheer (Chingleput) appears to have been obtained in the year 1760 and 1763, from the Nabob of Arcot, in return for the services rendered him and his father, by the Company....The jagheer was twice invaded by Hyder Ali, in 1768, and in the war of 1780, when he entered it with fire and sword. On the termination of the latter war, in 1784, hardly any other signs were left in many parts of the country of its having been inhabited by human beings than the bones of the bodies that had been massacred or the naked walls of the houses, choultries, and temples, which had been burnt. To the havoc of war succeeded the affliction of famine; and the emigrations arising from these successive calamities nearly depopulated the district.

"The system of management in the jagheer, while it was rented by the Nabob, was of the same oppressive and unjust character which marked the administration of affairs in his own territory, the Carnatic."

A period of no little confusion ensued even after the Company Government assumed the jagheer in the years previous to 1730, the confusion being much relieved in 1794 when the country was placed under the management of Mr. Lionel Place, who continued as administrator until 1798, and whose Final Report respecting the jagheer is dated the 6th June 1799. Mr. Place's views with regard to mirasi are stated to have undergone a material change, and, in the language of the Report:—

"He had become convinced that the mirasidar had an undoubted hereditary property in the soil, that he derived this right originally from the Sovereign to whom he acknowledged obedience, and the rendering of a stated proportion of the produce, as the tenure by which he held it; that he sold, mortgaged, gave away and left his lands to his posterity."

It would not elucidate the points at issue in this suit to enter further into the development, historically, of the adjustments of the rights regarding the land and its tenure and cultivation. This following excerpt, however, may be made from Mr. Place's Final Report:—

"702. The following definition, therefore, of mirasi or property in land seems to be deducible from the discussions that have passed on it,

"703. That it is a right to the use and substance of the soil vested in the present proprietor, his heirs and successors so long as he does or can cultivate it and pays the dues of Government and is obedient to its authority; and that when he does not or cannot cultivate his lands, when he withholds the dues of Government, or is disobedient to its authority, such part as he neglects, or, in the latter case, the whole, escheats to Government, who may confer it on whom it pleases."

These excerpts have been given because the fact has been acknowledged that the villages, afterwards referred to, with the lands in suit in the present case, are held under the mirasi tenure. Nor, secondly, is it disputed that Vishnu as a juristic entity, and, as such, owner of the temple dedicated to and appearing under the following names: Sri Jagannatha Peramal and Tirumushi Alwar, can, according to law, and must, if it accord with fact, be reckoned as a mirasidar holding a village mirasi. The point in the case is, was the property in suit held under mirasi tenure by this mirasidar in the interests of the institution and worshippers of Vishnu attached to it, or was it held by the respondent personally?

The respondent founds, and strongly founds, upon the state of the records of this property as for the year 1825. He maintains that there is sufficient indication from this record that the property in suit had wholly belonged, not to the temple as part of its endowments, but to Evalappa, his grandfather, as his own personal property.

The date of the origin of this temple is not apparently now ascertainable, but the first broad and fundamental fact appearing from the record founded upon is that in 1825 de facto such a temple did exist;

secondly, that the institution was at that date managed by a Dharmakartha; and, thirdly, that it was the owner of some lands. What were those lands, and, in particular, did they include those in suit in the present case? On that point the singularity of the position is that it appears to be, and that very rightly, assumed in the judgment of the Courts below, that originally the temple did own the lands, but that the state of affairs crystallized in the paimash of 1825 left it at least doubtful whether some change had not been effected under which a personal acquisition by the Dharmakartha had taken place.

And it is the fact, with regard to the large majority of the items composing the village lands, that the plots and portions are set out in detail in the name of Evalappa Mudaliar, without describing him as trustee, and without giving any indication contrary to that of personal ownership. It is this circumstance upon which the respondent in the appeal strongly relies.

It may be said of the 1825 paimash or record, taken as a whole, that it does involve certain self-contradictions which contribute to leaving the point at issue in considerable doubt.

It will serve no useful purpose to load this opinion with details, although all these details have been carefully considered. It may suffice to say as follows: The paimash Jariff Taram chitta for Madavilagam village dated the 31st August 1825, forms the Exhibit A, and its headings and general preliminary statements must be attended to. It states the "persons who are present at the Jariff," mentioning by name the Government Officer. Then follows this entry; "Alwar temple village miras." This appears to describe in general terms the ownership by the temple of all the village miras. Then there appears this entry: "Appasami Mudali and Arunachala Mudali, gumasthas of Evalappa Mudali, Dharmakartha of the aforesaid temple—total, two persons." Up to this point it seems plain enough that the lands are owned by the temple, and that Evalappa is its Dharmakartha. When the specific entries begin there occur the following "remarks": "Village miras—Sri Tirumushi Alwar", and a little further down, "No. 1 miras. Tirumushi Alwar Devastanom Dharmakartha Nattu Evalappa Mudali." Then still another: "Alwar Mantapam tope No. 1 miras Tirumushi Alwar Devastanom." Up to this point the doubt as to the lands being temple lands—it being admitted that they are part of the village miras—has not arisen. When these items came to be entered, the column of remarks shows "village miras", and by far the most important of the entries are those referring to the miras itself, viz., "No. 1 miras", and one of the most important pieces of the property is a tope or grove, which is entered as punja, and in the remarks is stated to be Alwar Mantapam tope. So far all is clear.

The confusion arises, however, from another document, Exhibit A-1, called "Register of lands as per paimash or mamul account". It is to be observed that in it again occurs "No. 1 village miras, Tirumushi Alwar", and in No. 83, "No. 1 miras Tirumushi Alwar Devastanom", there being added the words "Dharmakartha Nattu Evalappa Mudali".

While this is so, the remarkable thing is that all the other entries, with perhaps one or two exceptions, are stated to be "No. 1 patta, Evalappa Mudali," with no indication that those particular items are temple lands or that Evalappa holds them as Dharmakartha. This fact, and practically this fact alone, forms the foundation of the respondent's claim that he is personal owner of these numerous items. The inconsistency of this with the other entries above referred to is unexplained, and in particular it is unexplained how property originally temple property ever came into his private ownership. No express grant is produced; no legal authority for a conversion so singular is suggested.

In these circumstances, their Lordships are not prepared to say that if the records had stopped here they would have agreed with the judgments of the Courts below, and would have attributed the entries opposite Evalappa's own name as entries asserting private property. It is unlikely; but, for the reasons to be hereafter stated, it is not necessary to decide the question. Let it be assumed, however, that the point of ownership stands doubtful upon the 1825 records. To such a situation it is conceivable that the observation of the learned Chief Justice would apply. He says:—

"It is, of course, impossible at this distance of time to say exactly how it was that these properties passed from the temple into the hands of the trustee's family, and the case may undoubtedly appear to be one of suspicion. But we cannot say, at this distance of time and in view of this long enjoyment, that the title of the temple has been sufficiently established in the present suit as to the great bulk of those properties, that is to say, in respect of those properties which, in the paimash, are not entered as temple properties. Where we find in the paimash properties entered as temple properties, that is sufficient to throw the onus on to the trustee of showing how these properties ceased to belong to the temple."

Their Lordships must dissent entirely from the view that, where the discoverable origins of property show it to be trust property the onus of establishing that it must have illegitimately come into the trustee's own right rests upon the beneficiaries. Upon the contrary, the onus is, and is heavily, upon the trustee to show by the clearest and most unimpeachable evidence the legitimacy of his personal acquisition. Even upon the records of 1825 their Lordships would have inclined to this view.

But the records did not end here. In their Lordships' opinion it is necessary in a case of this kind to view the records, transactions and proceedings as a whole. And in their view the greatest weight must be attached to the elaborate proceedings of 1876, and, in particular to the Survey and Settlement Register of the Village of Madavilagam. That Register contains 169 items, including, among other particulars, an identification, so far as possible, of each item with the old number or name of fields, and, in particular, the extent and assessment of each plot of land in the whole list. The Register is signed by Major C. J. Stuart, Acting Deputy-Director of Revenue Settlement, and is dated from the Revenue Settlement Office. It cannot be too clearly premised, however, that the Board would not hold any such record to be conclusive evidence of ownership; but, upon the other hand, their Lordships cannot be blind to the importance of such a document which appears, de facto, to have settled the bounds of the possessions of these plots for a period of thirty-five years, that is to say, from 1876 to 1910. This is especially important in any case where the personal as against the trust claim is supported also, and alone, by a reference to an earlier record of a similar character, marred as that record happens to be by the contradictions to which reference has been made.

It is, however, unnecessary, it may again be said, to enter into details. But the facts as to the 1876 records are outstanding and make the position much clearer. Evalappa had been succeeded by Varadappa, and numerous cases, including those in which in 1825 the entries of the owner had only been in the name of Evalappa Mudaliar, with nothing added thereto, now appear, with the point as to the character of the ownership, cleared up.

The Survey is headed "Descriptive Memoir of Madavilagam of the Saidapet taluk." Extracts from it form Exhibit B of the present proceedings. Their Lordships have, however, seen a print of the Descriptive Memoir itself, bearing to be signed by Major Stuart, "Acting Deputy-Director of Revenue Settlement." The following entries are important:—

"Mirasi Tenure. As the Government have recognized the Mirasidar's claim to a percentage fee (swatantram) on the Taram assessment, the following arrangements are made for its future collection and payment."

This entry speaks for itself. The tenure was mirasi tenure, and there was one mirasidar. Then occurs the following:—

"The fee is fixed at 2-annas in the rupee of assessment of both dry and wet lands for which the lands are divided into (1) Pangu (II) Durkast and (III) Waste."

The word "Pangu" refers to the original cultivated land—that is to say, land cultivated by persons or a person, or institution, belonging to the village. "Durkast "refers to lands granted by the Government for cultivation not by villagers, but by outsiders. "Waste" refers to jungle or uncultivated land

The main point to be kept in view is the form of the entries of the lands, the issue as to which is whether they are temple lands or are private property or Pangu lands. The importance, accordingly, of special reference to Pangu lands is clear. That entry is as follows:—

SRINIVASA CHARIAR v. EVALAPPA MUDALIAR.

"Pangu Lands. This is an Ekabogam village and the lands have hitherto been held by one pattadar. The fee registered against these lands is at present a mere matter of account and need not be collected, as the mirasidar himself holds the lands. But if these lands hereafter become waste by relinquishment and are taken up again by a stranger, they will be chargeable with the fee, plus the Taram assessment, and the fee thus collected will be payable to the mirasidar."

The village is spoken of as an Ekabogam village. "Ekabogam" according to Wilson is:—

"The possession or tenure of village land by one person or family without any co-sharer. The appellation is continued in some instances where other parties have been admitted to hold portions under the original tenure as long as that remains unaltered."

It is stated that the lands have been hitherto held by one pattadar, and that the mirasidar himself holds the lands. The extreme importance of this entry arises from the events which had taken place in and about the early sixties of last century.

It seems fairly plain that by the middle of the nineteenth century various demands were being made to obtain a statement of the rights of mirasidars in this part of India. In the volume named "Chingleput, late Madras District," compiled under the orders of the Madras Government by Mr. Charles Stewart Crole, the position is thus described.—

"In 1834 it began to induct outsiders into the permanent possession of lands, and issued pattas to such persons. In 1859 it compelled the mirasidars to declare once for all the extent of their individual holdings, and proceeded to issue pattas accordingly, which it at first styled mirasi pattas.

"In the same and following years it warned mirasidars that they would have to pay the assessment on all lands in their holdings, whether they cultivated or not, and limited by new rules, which have since increased in stringency, the occasions on which, and then only as a matter of grace, remissions would be given.

"In 1863 the Government directed the abolition of the words 'mirasi patta' and "payikari patta" which had previously appeared as a heading on those documents in order to distinguish mirasi from ordinary tenure, and it ordered the name of the 'pattadar' merely to be inserted, thus distinctly proclaiming that it would no longer recognize any difference in tenure."

This historical circumstance gave great weight to the Settlement and Survey, about to be referred to, made in the year 1876. It is in particular noticeable that a special column of pattadars, with a demand for their names, appears in the Return, and that this coincides with the acknowledgment of the mirasi tenure. The application of this to the situation of the village, whose ownership is in suit, will be immediately seen. It would rather appear that no public document of anything like equivalent value to that of the Report of 1876, with regard to the details of any properties which were at once mirasi and patta, had ever been previously issued.

It is accordingly of special importance to know who was the mirasidar holding a patta, and, therefore, pattadar of those particular lands in suit. Appended to each entry of grants of land in the village is a column headed "pattadar's Name and No." It cannot be seriously disputed that the putta was No. 1 patta.

Who, then, was the holder of these lands, occupying the position at once of mirasidar and pattadar's No. 1? Item by item the entries under "pattadar's Name and No." are Nattu Varadappa Mudaliar, Trustee of Tirumushi Alwar Pagoda" The entries are repeated and repeated in the same sense. And, in short, there is here an official affirmation that these lands are temple lands; that they are held in No. 1 patta; and that the trustee of the temple is Varadappa.

It would accordingly appear to be clear that this official document, which it cannot be doubted was prepared after minute inspection and enquiries on the spot, sets at rest any doubt as between private and temple ownership and clearly affirms the latter. Varadappa was not the private owner; he was the Dharmakartha or trustee. It, however, must be admitted that although this was the official view, the record does not commit Varadappa himself to such an affirmation or admission.

Most fortunately, however, there are elements of probation existing, applicable to the regime of Varadappa, which greatly help to clear this difficulty away. These instances may be given : —

(1) On the 8th February 1888 Varadappa brought a suit against the Government in regard to certain lands and trees, which he alleged he was debarred from cultivating. He desired a declaration to establish his right "to the said property as absolute owner thereof." It is, however, an entire mistake to reckon this an assertion of private ownership, because Varadappa describes himself as plaintiff and a Dharmakartha of the temple at Madavilagam village, and the first three statements of his plaint are as follows : —

"1. The village No. 137 viz, Madavilagam and all its miras appertain to, and form portion of, the endowments of the temple of Tirumushi Alwar situated in the said village, Poonamalle Division, Saidapat Taluk, Chingleput District.

"2. The plaintiff above named is the hereditary Dharmakartha of the said Devastanom.

"3. Plaintiff's ancestors have, from time out of mind, been enjoying the lands under numbers described below by building choultry, cultivating the soil and raising a tope, &c., paying revenue to the Government for the said lands."

As mirasidar and as trustee of the temple his grievance against the Government was that he was not entitled to extend the rights which he asserted over certain further lands and trees, and accordingly the suit was substantially for the purpose of enabling that extension to be made, presumably for temple purposes, and accompanied with the assertion that— quoad the temple—the village of Madavilagam "and all its miras" were the endowments of the temple of which Varadappa was the Dharmakartha.

(2) A statement signed by "Nattu Varadappa Mudaliar, Dharmakartha," and made before the Deputy Tahsildar, Poonamalle Division, is also produced. This statement refers to the paimash of 1876, and is to the effect that the entire village is the Ekabogam village of the temple, viz, of Tirumushi Alwar ; that he, Varadappa, is the Dharmakartha of the temple ; and he goes on to state : "Whenever any one wants to build a house on vacant lands other than the land on which houses have been in existence from time immemorial in the village Nattam of this village, it is usual for me to grant lands to such persons, and to get deeds executed therefor."

(3) This was quite true, and various deeds of that character are referred to in the proceedings—that is to say, they are called rental agreement deeds, and are addressed to Varadappa, as on the 27th March 1876, and signed "Nattu Varadappa Mudaliar, Dharmakartha of Tirumushi Alwar Devastanom"; or, as in that of the 7th March 1904, after Varadappa's death, to Evalappa the second, his son, thus named: "S. Nattu Evalappa Mudaliar Avergal, son of S. Nattu Varadappa Mudaliar, Shrotriemdar, Kondaikatti Vellala, Vaishnavite, mirasdar of the village of Madavilagam as well as Dharmakartha of Tirumushi Alwar Devastanom."

It is of importance to observe that Varadappa is named and names himself the Dharmakartha. This is in truth the legal equipollent to trustee. The position of Dharmakartha is not that of a shebait of a religious institution, or of the Mahant of a mutt. These functionaries have a much higher right with larger power of disposal and administration, and they have a personal interest of a beneficial character.

In the very learned judgments delivered in Vidyapurna Tirtha Swami v. Vidyanidhi Tirtha Swami (1), the distinction between those functionaries is explained. But a Dharmakartha is literally and no more than the manager of a charity, and his rights, apart it may be in certain circumstances from the question of personal support, are never in a higher legal category than that of a mere trustee.

The details need not further be entered upon as to these deeds, which appear to be numerous, and to assert clearly the fiduciary position in which Varadappa and even his successor, the present respondent, stand. They are by no means confined to a period subsequent to Major Stuart's report in 1876; one, for instance, is dated the 22nd January 1870, executed to Varadappa as "Dharmakartha of Tirumushi Devastanom," and describes Madavilagam as "the miras village of the said Alwar." In fact, there are documents extending over a period of about forty years, all framed on that footing, a footing which negatives private but affirms temple ownership. Their Lordships do not doubt that that was a public fact in 1876, when the report was made; and the subsequent transactions in the life of Varadappa, and even of his successor, the present respondent, confirm that view. This was plainly the state of affairs when, on Varadappa's death, the respondent succeeded him as hereditary Dharmakartha.

A separate argument involving some detail was submitted with regard to the topes, or grover, belonging to the temple, on which their Lordships will only say that after full investigation they are convinced the topes in suit have been sufficiently traced to temple ownership.

The doubts, accordingly, which would have warranted the line of judgment indicated from the opinion of the High Court, above cited, have now disappeared. In the opinion of the Board the properties in suit are established to be temple properties. The statements and records made in the year 1910 do not substantially bring any fresh light on the situation. It must, of course, be plain that it would require circumstances unique to warrant the transfer or transformation of those endowment lands into the private property of the trustee. There is, in fact, nothing of the sort. In the present suit the respondent's right and title as personal owner have been successfully challenged, and the lands in question must, all of them, be restored as endowments of the temple.

In case it should be thought to have been omitted, their Lordships merely further observe on this head that during the period extending from 1825 there were clearly established several items of the property in dispute which could be identified as still remaining as temple lands To these items there were added, in the course of discussion, several further items which were traced from register to register, and clearly and separately identified as temple lands by name and freed from the doubt as to the personal ownership of the former mirasidar, Evalappa. They, too, have been claimed by the respondent as his own, and this is a notable circumstance. These facts might have proved obstacles to the learned Judges of the High Court in forming their conclusion and assisted in removing any doubt which they felt; but the view which has been taken by their Lordships of the larger issue, namely, of the effect of the 1876 register on the transactions to which Varadappa was a party, affects the whole of the lands in suit, and makes it unnecessary to deal with the individual items referred to.

It will now be seen how serious is the position of the respondent as a claimant for the continuance of the trusteeship of this temple and its endowments. The doubts in the minds of the Courts below on the subject of his being allowed to continue in office, are sufficiently plain. But when it is now decided that the whole of this litigation has substantially been occupied by an unfounded assertion, supported by the concoction of accounts—an assertion by the trustee of private ownership in himself and a powerful resistance to the recovery of these properties for the trust which he administers—it does not appear to their Lordships to be open to them, on any sound principles either of administration or of law, to permit the continuance of the respondent in the office of Dharmakhartha.

The conduct of the respondent, even in the course of the present suit, has been sufficiently grave to be thus noted by the Judges below. Says the District Court Judge:—

"My finding is that the Exhibit K series were got up for the purposes of this suit, and that they have been proved to contain false entries in many instances."

In the High Court the pronouncement was quite as strong. The learned Chief Justice observes:—

"The District Judge has found that the defendant failed to keep proper accounts and that the accounts which he has brought into Court in this case were written up for the purposes of this case. We have ourselves examined the accounts and we regret to say that there are very serious reasons for believing that that has been the case and that the accounts have been largely written up for the purposes of this case."

Their Lordship have considerable doubt as to whether any litigant found to have been guilty of serious reprehensible conduct of this description could ever have been retained in the office of Dharmarkartha. The worshippers of the temple, the true beneficiaries in the endowments, are entitled, at least in regard to the trusteeship thereto, as also a Court of Law before whom such delinquencies are established, to insist upon the first step towards trustworthiness in administration being taken by the removal of the trustee. Most unhappily the guarantee for that trustworthiness has been destroyed. Although the Board very willingly admits that much allowance must be made for the inaccuracy of Karnams, and of other officials who may have been anxious to fortify the trustee's personal rights by methods which were unwarranted, the respondent must, however, stand answerable for such conduct.

Their Lordships do not doubt that if the High Court had been of the opinion now delivered with regard to the merits of the suit, the trustee would have been removed from office. The Board desires that in the remit, which their Lordships will humbly recommend to His Majesty to make, the High Court shall select as trustee a person or persons of such sufficient standing in the District as will enable the transfer from the respondent of the property to be effectively made and the administration thereof purely for the purpose of the endowment effectively secured.

The scheme drawn up in the District Court, and referred to in the proceedings of the High Court, would appear to be not unsuitable for the case, but these two fundamental alterations must be taken into account. In the first place, the list of endowments must, of course, be enlarged to suit the affirmation as to the extent of the temple property made in the plaint and here affirmed, and, secondly, a new and independent trustee will be nominated to administer the scheme.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty to remit the case accordingly to the High Court, with a finding that the properties in suit belong to the endowments of the temple; that the respondent as Dharmakartha and trustee thereof be removed from office; that a scheme be framed for trust administration under a new trustee; and that the judgment of the High Court of the 6th March 1917, except as regards costs, be recalled, and that the respondent do pay the costs of this appeal.

Commission—Application by defendant asking for commission to examine himself—Discretion of Court—Appellate Court, interference by—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XVI, rr. 19, 21, O. XXVI, r. 4.

Rules 19 and 21 of O. XVI of the Code of Civil Procedure have no application to a case where a party to a suit desires to give evidence of his own motion in his own favour. A case of this description is governed by O. XXVI, r. 4 of the Code. [p. 10, col. 1.]

In cases under O. XXVI, r. 4 of the Code of Civil Procedure a distinction must be observed between an application by a plaintiff asking for a commission to examine himself and an application by a defendant asking for a commission to examine himself. Where an application is made by a defendant who lawfully resides out of the jurisdiction of the Court, according to the ordinary course of his life and business, the Court will not regard the case with the same strictness as the case of the plaintiff who has instituted his suit in a forum of his choice though he resides beyond the jurisdiction of such Court. [p. 10, col. 2]

A Court of Appeal should exercise great caution when invited to interfere with an order of the Trial Court made with jurisdiction in the exercise of its discretion as to the granting of a commission. Each case must depend upon its own circumstances and no rule as to the exercise of that discretion can be laid down [p 11, col. 1.]

In this case the suit was instituted in the Burdwan Court and the defendant resided in the Rajshahye District; the lower Court refused the application of the defendant to be examined on commission. This order was set aside by the High Court, and the defendant was allowed to be examined on commission in Calcutta on payment of Rs. 1,000 as costs to enable the plaintiff to make arrangements for his cross-examination, the sum to be retained by the plaintiff irrespective of the result of the suit. JUDGMENT.—We are invited in this Rule to set aside an order of the Trial Court in respect of two applications made by the petitioner, who is the defendant in a pending suit. His first application was to have himself examined on commission in support of his own case. His second application was for the issue of a commission to examine Babu Brojo Lal Chakravarty, a Vakil of this Court, to prove three documents which have been produced at a late stage of the proceedings.

As regards the first application, it cannot be disputed that the defendant was not entitled to the order as a matter of right under rr. 19 and 21 of O. XVI of the Code of Civil Procedure. Those rules apply to persons who are ordered to attend in person to give evidence, including persons who may be parties to a suit, but are required to give evidence as witnesses. The rules have no application to a case where a party to a suit desires to give evidence of his own motion in his own favour. A case of that description is governed by O. XXVI, r. 4 of the Civil Procedure Code which provides that any Court may in any suit issue a commission for the examination of any person resident beyond the local limits of its jurisdiction. Here the defendant resides in the District of Rajshahye, beyond the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Burdwan Court where the suit has to be tried. Consequently, the Court has a discretion in the matter and has to regard all the circumstances before the application is granted or refused. In the present case, the defendant alleged that he was indisposed. It is possible that the gravity of his ailment has been exaggerated and it may not be absolutely impossible for him to be present in the Court in Burdwan although he resides at a distance of more than 200 miles from the Court premises. It must not be overlooked, however, that in cases under O. XXVI, r. 4, a distinction has been observed between an application by a plaintiff asking for a commission to examine himself and an application by a defendant asking for a commission to examine himself. This distinction has been emphasised in connection with the corresponding rules of the Supreme Court in England, as is clear from the decisions in Ross v. Woodford (1), New v. Burns (2), Emanuel v. Soltykoff (3) and Keeley v. Wakley (4). In these cases, particularly in the judgment of Chitty, J., in Ross v. Woodford (1) and of Lindley, L. J., in New v. Burns (2), it is pointed out that where an application is made by a defendant and specially by a defendant who lawfully resides out of the jurisdiction of the Court, according to the ordinary course of his life and business, the Court will not regard the case with the same strictness as the case of the plaintiff who has instituted his suit in a forum of his choice though he resides beyond the jurisdiction of such Court. We do not overlook that in the cases mentioned the defendants resided not merely beyond the jurisdiction of the British Court but also beyond the seas, namely, in South Africa, in Canada and in Russia respectively. The principle, however, is based on good sense and there is no reason why it should not be borne in mind when a Court is called upon to consider an application under O. XXVI, r. 4 by a person residing beyond the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court though a resident in British India. To compel such a defendant to come over, at great expense, to attend the trial or to give up his case, might be oppressive and unfair, and, on this ground it was ruled in Adamji Khadi Bhai v. Issuf Ahmed Mulla (5) that it would be wrong to apply to the case of a defendant the principles that are applicable to the case of a plaintiff asking for a commission to examine himself.

It is plain, however, that a Court in the position of a Court of Appeal must exercise great caution when invited to interfere with an order of the Trial Court made with jurisdiction in the exercise of its discretion. In this connection, we may re-call the observations of Lord Esher, M. R. in Emanuel v. Soltykoff (3): "The Court had to exercise its discretion as to granting a commission, and this Court would be very unwilling to interfere with the exercise of that discretion by the Court below. Each case must depend upon its own circumstances, and no rule as to the exercise of that discretion could be laid down. If this Court saw that the discretion had been wrongly exercised, if it saw that the case in all its bearings was not laid before the Court below, if it saw that the Court below misapprehended an important part of the case, this Court would interfere. The Court below seemed to have treated the matter as if it was merely a commission to examine witnesses." In the case before us the Court below overlooked the distinction which should be observed in the treatment of an application by the defendant as distinguished from a similar application by the plaintiff. In these circumstances, we hold that the order of the Court below should be set aside and the defendant should be examined on commission. But we are clearly of opinion that such examination should not take place at his residence in the interior of the Rajshahye District. If an order of that description were made in favour of the defendant, the plaintiff might be seriously prejudiced. We consequently direct that the defendant be examined on commission in Calcutta and in order to ensure that the plaintiff may not be unduly embarrassed, we direct that the defendant do pay to the plaintiff the sum of Rs. 1,000 (rupees one thousand only) as costs in order to enable him to make adequate arrangements for the cross-examination of the defendant. The payment of this sum will be a condition precedent to the carrying out of our order, and the money will be retained by the plaintiff irrespective of the result of the suit. The other expenses in connection with the commission will be borne in the first instance by the defendant. How such costs should be ultimately dealt with, will be determined by the lower Court on the result of the suit. The petitioner undertakes to deposit the sum of Rs. 1,000 in the Court below to the credit of the plaintiff within two weeks from this date and the plaintiff will be entitled to take that money forthwith from the Court.

As regards the second point we are of opinion that Babu Brojo Lal Chakravarty also should be examined on commission in Calcutta. We do not decide the question of the admissibility of the documents which are sought to be proved by his evidence. When he has been examined on commission, the matter will be considered by the Subordinate Judge in the light of the evidence placed before him. We make this order so as to avoid possible difficulty at the appellate stage.

The result is that this Rule is made absolute and the order of the lower Court set aside in the manner directed. The petitioner must pay the costs of this Rule to the opposite party. We assess the hearing fee in this Rule at five gold mohurs.

Let the record be sent down to the Court below at once in order to enable that Court to resume the trial of the suit.

Appeal against the decree of the District Court, South Arcot, dated the 31st of March 1919, in Original Suit No. 13 of 1919.

Messrs. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar and K. Balasubramania Aiyar, for the Appellants.

Messrs. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar and S. Muthiah Mudaliar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT – In this appeal two alleged testamentary papers of one Vankatachalam Pillai, deceased, who died on 26th August 1914 are in question. They are dated, respectively, 24th January 1913 and 2nd January 1914 and are marked Exhibits A-1 and A. The latter is propounded by a minor Kailasam Pillai, son of Venkatachalam, by a concubine of his, Velliammai by name. This Kaillasam Pillai applied to the District Court of South Arcot for leave to prove A and for the issue to him of Letters of Administration with this Will annexed. A-1, the alleged earlier Will, is propounded by respondents Nos. 3 and 4, who are two of the three sons of Thillainayagam Pillai, brother of the testator, who was adopted into another family. The learned District Judge found for the genuineness of both these papers, A and A-1, and admitted them both to Probate. He also found that the earlier Will was not revoked by the later. Letters of Administration were granted jointly to the widow of deceased (respondent No. 2) and respondents Nos. 3 and 4.

Three questions are raised on this appeal.

(1) The genuineness of the Wills.

(2) The revocation of the earlier by the later.

(3) Inferential intention to revoke.

As to the first point, Mr. A. Krishnaswamy Iyer for the appellants, the divided brother of the testator and his son, frankly stated that he could not say the Wills were forgeries, i. e., were not in the handwriting of the testator. We think it sufficient to say that we are satisfied from the evidence that the Wills A 1 and A are in the handwriting of the testator. We were then asked to refuse Letters of Administration on the ground that the history of the custody of these two documents was not satisfactory and was not such as to remove all doubt as to their genuineness. The story of the concubine, who is the only witness who saw the testator write and sign the Wills, is that the two Wills were given to her. After the death she put them into a box and gave them to her servant from whom 5th respondent took the Wills. Fifth respondent is the third of the sons of Thillainayagam Pillai mentioned above. There is evidence that after cremation the 3rd and 5th defendants and one Vadivelu Pillai (P. W. No. 2) and Monigar Ratnam Pillai (P. W. No. 4) met, and opened the box and took out the Wills and read them. The Wills were actually produced by Vadivelu Pillai in the Court of the District Munsif of Mannargudi in Original Suit No. 47 of 1915 filed by Valliammai to recover these Wills and other documents. On the other hand, 1st respondent's (1st appellant here) account is that deceased gave him a box containing mortgage and other documents and that when the testator died there was no box by his side as described by the plaintiff's witnesses. The District Judge who has examined the evidence with care has come to the conclusion that the account given by 1st appellant cannot be accepted and a further examination of the evidence does not lead us to a different conclusion. We, therefore, agree with the District Judge that there is no reason why these paper writings, A and A-1, should not be received as the testamentary papers of the deceased.

The 3rd point was not argued and we are not prepared to say that inferential intention to revoke, i. e., any conclusive evidence of such intention derived from evidence of surrounding circumstances apart altogether from any inference to be derived from the provisions in the documents themselves, is in any way established. If there is in fact an intention to revoke the earlier Will by the later it must be gathered from inferences drawn from the documents themselves.

This leads us to the second point which was argued at length before us. A somewhat detailed examination of the two Wills will be necessary. The earlier one (A-1) was in favour of Ramaswami Chetty, the executor who renounced. It begins: "As I feel weak often and as the Wills previously written by me are not operative, this Will containing the following dispositions shall come into force after my lifetime." The testator sets out a list of property owing or belonging to him and aggregating Rs. 18,012. He leaves Rs. 5,000 to Kailasam Pillai, and the interest to his mother as his guardian during his minority, Rs. 500 to Valliammai and her daughter, Rs. 120 each annually to his wife and aunt and Rs. 2,000 for his funerals and for Neivedyam. Out of the balance the executor is to perform Abishekam, Neivedanam and Kulathali. To the wife is further given the house in Mannargudi for life, remainder to Muttayan (3rd respondent). Out of the balance the executor is to conduct any charity he likes. The flower-garden at Chidambaram is left to charity. The Rs. 5,000 due on Varthamanam by Vadivelu Pillai is to be recovered and used for Nataraja temple if the Tiruppany work done b : Vadivelu is not done in 4 years (Exhibit G). The testator adds that a copy of the Will has been sent to the executor. This is denied by Mr. Ramaswamy Chetty in a letter to the Vakil for Valliammai (Exhibit E).

The later Will (Exhibit A) is also executed in favour of Ramaswami Chetty and begins: "As the Wills previously executed by me have not been brought into force, all the dispositions mentioned herein shall be operative after my lifetime."

Rs. 21,504 is said to be the amount of outstanding due to the testator as detailed in the schedule. There is no schedule to the paper. This Will begins with four new legacies, viz., Rs. 5,000 for gilding the silver Mancham in Nataraja temple; Rs. 1,000 to Mottayan: Rs. 500 to Sundaramurthy (4th respondent), and Rs. 500 to Sadasivam (6th respondent). The legacy of Rs. 5,000 to Kailasam, interest to be paid to his mother during minority appears also in the Will. The legacy of Rs. 500 to Valliammai and her daughter is omitted, probably because in the interval between the two Wills the testator had endorsed 17 pro-notes in favour of the former. The legacies to his wife and aunt are the same but they are specified as to be derived from the interest on Rs. 3,000 which after their lives is to be devoted to 'any charity.' The amount of Rs. 2,000 for funerals, etc., is reduced to Rs. 1,000 and there is no disposition of the balance as in A-1. As for the disposition of the house in this Will, the wife is to have 'during her lifetime, the right only to enjoy my ancestral house.' There is no disposition of the property after this life estate and there is, therefore, an intestacy as to this.

Further, out of the balance the executor is directed to conduct a permanent charity in Nataraja temple. A certain Manai is given to the executor, on majority to Kailasam with the garden—presumbly the flower-garden given to charity in the former Will.

There is no mention of the amount due on Varathamanam.

Thus the resemblances between the bequests in the two Wills amounts to this:—

(i) The legacy of Rs. 5,000 to Kailasam is the same in both.

(ii) The legacies of Rs. 120 to the wife and aunt are the same, with this difference that they are directed to be paid out of interest on Rs. 3,000, in the later Will, and the capital is bequeathed after their lives.

(iii) The bequest of the house to the widow for life appears in both.

On this state of facts what is the law:—

Williams on Executors, 10th Edition, Volume I, page 119, approved in many cases and also by Sir J. Hannen, in Petchell, In the goods of (1), says:—

"But the mere fact of making a subsequent testamentary paper does not work a total revocation of a prior one, unless the latter expressly or in effect revoke the former, or the two be incapable of standing together; for though it be a maxim, as

(1) (1874) 3 P. & D. 153; 43 L. J. 22; 30 L. T. 74; 22 W. R. 353.

Swinburne says above, that 'no man can die with two testaments,' yet any number of instruments, whatever be their relative date, or in whatever form they may be, so as they be all clearly testamentary, may be admitted to Probate, as together containing the last Will of the deceased."

Further, Lord Penzance in Lemage v. Goodban (2) said:—"Now it was argued that in the case of more than one testamentary papers, each professing in form to be the last Will of the deceased, it is necessary for the Court, before concluding that they together constitute the Will, to be satisfied that the testator intended them to operate together as such. In one sense this is true, for the intention of the testator in the matter is the sole guide and control. But the 'intention' to be sought and discovered, relates to the disposition of the testator's property, and not to the form of his Will. What dispositions did he intend?—not, which, or what number, of papers did he desire or expect to be admitted to Probate,—is the true question"

So Dempsey v. Lawson (3) per Sir J. Hannen: "If it can be collected from the words of the testator in the later instrument that it was his intention to dispose of his property in a different manner to that in which he disposed of it by the earlier document, the earlier document will be revoked, and this, although in some particulars the later Will does not completely cover the whole subject-matter of the earlier. This is what was decided in Plenty v. West (4)."

Therefore, if we can collect from the terms of the later Will an intention to dispose of his property in a different manner from the former Will, the earlier stands revoked. The intention is to be the guide and the case last cited shows that it does not matter if the second Will does not provide for the whole subject-matter of the first, e.g., the intestacy as to the house referred to above. Now, there is here no express clause of revocation. What do the words "as the Wills previously executed by me have not been brought into force" mean? A very similar clause appears in A-1. Before answering this question we may pause for a moment to consider the arguments of Mr. A. Krishnaswamy Iyer that, if the testator intended all his prior Wills to be valid, no administration ought to go on any one paper. There is no evidence as to what happened to his prior Wills—they may have been destroyed. The concubine gives evidence that these two Wills were given to her. She does not speak as to others. It certainly looks as if A-1 was not intended to be destroyed by the testator. We must proceed on the state of things left by the testator so far as we have them in evidence. To return to the words quoted above. They may mean merely, "as a Will only operates on death and I have not yet died, my Wills have as yet had no operation." On the other hand, they may mean, "As I have not died since I made the previous Will, and, consequently, they have had no effect, they are to have none but the disposition I now make are to be operative." If the latter is the proper meaning, which appeals to us, in our opinion they point very strongly to an implied revocation in words. However, it is not necessary to stand on this ground alone. The resemblances in the two Wills have already been pointed out. It could hardly have been the intention of the testator that the legacies to Kailasam should be cumulative. The same applies to the legacies to the widow and aunt, and the repetition of the disposition of the life-estate in the house to the widow has no meaning or legal effect. As Sir F. Jeune, P. said in Chichester v. Quatrefages (5): "It appears to me that he (testator) never could have intended that the codicils should stand together, for the purpose only of doubling such legacies as a Court of construction might hold to be cumulative." In Bryan, In the Estate of (6), it was held that revocation might be implied from the terms of the last document as the funeral and testamentary expenses were provided for twice over (as in the case before us) and it was very doubtful if the legacies could possibly be held to be cumulative when they would amount to more than the value of the estate. The case in Dempsey v. Lawson (3), was quoted with approval. Here, the legacies to Kailasam if cumulative together with funeral expenses and legacies to the widow and aunt as those to the new legatees in Exhibit A would amount to over Rs. 30,000, considerably over the total value of the estate. Again, it cannot be said that there is nothing inconsistent between the terms of the Wills: the resemblances show that if these are to be read together and taken as cumulative they cannot be satisfied in full from the estate. The dispositions as to the balance and the flower-garden are clearly inconsistent with each other. Though the Court of Appeal has held that the Court "will endeavour so to read the words as to support the admissibility of both documents to Probate"—Townsend v. Moore (7) it seems to us impossible here to do so, and, moreover, the words first used in the Will and discussed above and the whole tenor of the second Will seems to us to imply that the intention of the testator was that only the later Will should be operative and the prior Will should be revoked. To this extent we allow the appeal. No argument has been addressed to us to show that the learned District Judge was wrong in the order he made respecting to whom the Letters of Administration should be issued. We, therefore, direct Letters of Administration to issue with the second Will only, dated 2nd January 1914, annexed, to 2nd, 3rd and 4th defendants on their executing the necessary security bonds within 6 weeks from this date. We think that plaintiff's costs should be paid by 1st defendant. There will be no other order as to costs.

Guardian, unauthorised, sale by—Suit for possession by minor—Compensation to vendee—Relegation of parties to original position—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), ss. 38, 41.

An unauthorised guardian sold certain property of a minor. Out of the sale-proceeds certain other property of the minor was freed from a mortgage charge. In a suit by the minor for possession of the property, the vendee contended that the sale should be set aside only on the condition of his being compensated by the minor for the money that he had expended:

Held, (1) that as the action of the unauthorised guardian was ultra vires, the sale must be regarded as void ab initio and the minor must be given a decree for possession of the land free from all payments; [p. 16, col. 2.]

(2) that, however, having regard to the provisions of sections 38 and 41 of the Specific Relief Act, the parties were to be relegated to the position which they held before the deed of sale was executed. [p. 16, col. 2.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Shahpur at Sargodha, dated the 4th December 1915, varying that of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Sargodha, dated the 16th June 1915.

Mr. Nanak Chand, for Appellants.

Mr. Mukand Lal Puri, for Langra, and Ram Chand Manchanda, for Musammat Bibi, Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—On the 13th April 1908 183 kanals 5 marlas of land were sold to Fateh Khan, Sultan Muhammad, Muhammad and Allah Yar for Rs. 1,700. The vendors were Musammat Panah Bibi and Raja who purported to be acting as guardians of Langra and Musammat Bibi. Musammat Panah Bibi was the widow of Sikandar, a brother of Langra, and Musammat Bibi was her daughter; Raja was the first cousin of Langra.

On the 15th August 1914 Langra instituted the suit which has given rise to this appeal. In it he claimed that the whole of the property sold belonged to him; Musammat Bibi's name having been entered as owner of a half incorrectly, and asked for a decree for possession of the said land or, in the alternative, possession of a half and a declaration that he would be entitled to the other half on the marriage or death of Musammat Bibi. He alleged further that inasmuch as the sale had been effected by persons not authorized to sell on his behalf, the sale should be declared void ab initio and inoperative as against him. The suit was contested by the vendees who claimed that in any event they should be compensated, if possession was taken away from them, inasmuch as the money which represented the sale price had been utilised by them in the payment of debts due by Langra's father, those debts being partly charged on the property sold as well as other immoveable property and partly due on bonds and bahi accounts. The Trial Court held that Langra's claim to be the owner of this property was correct but that Musammat Bibi was entitled to half the land in suit so long as she remained alive or unmarried. The Court further held that the money paid by the vendees to the former mortgagees was a valid charge on the property and should be paid before possession was taken by Langra. The money paid by the vendees on account of debts due on bonds, etc., was disallowed. Accordingly, a decree was passed in Langra's favour for immediate possession of a half of the land on payment of half of Rs, 689-4-0, The sale-deed in question was cancelled and it was declared that Langra could not get possession of the remaining half so long as Musammat Bibi remained alive or unmarried

The vendees preferred an appeal to the District Judge against the decree of the Trial Court who considered that the proper course was, as far as possible, to put the parties in the position which they would occupy if no sale had taken place and that Langra was to get possession of his own half share at once and of the other half share subsequently on re payment of all that the vendees gave except the expenses of the sale-deed, viz, Rs. 30. The decree of the lower Appellate Court, therefore, was that Langra was to be put in possession of half of the land in suit on payment of Rs. 835 and in reference to Musammat Bibi's half share it was declared that he had similar rights and that in the event of her death or marriage he might obtain possession of that half on payment of a further sum of Rs. 835. Against this decree the vendees as well as Langra have preferred appeals, the vendees through Mr. Nanak Chand and Langra through Mr. Mukand Lal Puri.

It is now common ground that, inasmuch as the sale was effected by Musammat Panah Bibi and Raja who were not entitled to act on behalf of Langra, the sale must be regarded as void ab initio. It is not necessary, therefore, to discuss the various authorities cited by the learned Counsel at the Bar.

Mr. Nanak Chand contended that, having regard to the provisions of sections 38 and 41 of the Specific Relief Act, we should impose such conditions on Langra as would result in his clients being compensated for the money expended by them. Mr. Ram Chand Manchanda, who argued the case on behalf of Langra, urged that, inasmuch as the sale was void ab initio, no such conditions could or should be imposed. It appears that Ghulam, the father of Langra, on his death had left some $523\frac{3}{4}$ kanals under mortgage and also was indebted on bonds, etc., to the extent of Rs. 955. By the transaction entered into by Musammat Panah Bibi and Raja the land now in suit—183 kanals 5 marlas—was sold and by this sale the larger area of $340\frac{1}{2}$ kanals was freed from the mortgage charges. As, however, their action was ultra vires, the sale must be regarded as void ab initio and Langra must therefore, be given a decree for possession of the land in suit free from all payments. We think, however, that, having regard to the provisions of sections 38 and 41 of the Specific Relief Act, the vendees are entitled to claim that the parties should be relegated to the position they were in on the 13th April 1908, and we order accordingly.

We, therefore, accept this appeal so far as to declare that the sale-deed dated 13th April 1908 is void and of no effect as against Langra and that he is entitled to possession of half immediately without any payment whatsoever so far as that deed of sale is concerned and of the other half on the same terms in the event of Musammat Bibi dying or marrying. We further declare that the parties are relegated to the position which they held on the 13th April 1908 before the deed of sale was executed.

In the circumstances we leave the parties to bear their own costs.

JUDGMENT.

LYLE, A. J. C.—(March 28, 1922).—Hinga, Brahman, has been convicted under section 302, Indian Penal Code, of the offence of murdering one Lalta Pasi on the night of the 21st September 1921 and has been sentenced to death. He appeals and the case is also before us for confirmation of the sentence.

On the evening of the 21st September 1921, just before the nightfall, a man came to Lalta Pasi as he was washing at a well in his village and told him that he was wanted by the Tahsildar (by which term, apparently, the zemindar's karinda is meant) at the village Shahjahanpur, which is about a mile-and-a-half distant from Durgapurwa, (which appears also to be known as Bhagwanpur), in which Lalta Pasi lived. Lalta's son, Narain, was at home at the time and saw his father go off with the man but he did not see the man's face. Lalta Pasi did not come back and his son, Narain, went to search for him the next morning. He found that the Tahsildar had not been to Shahjahanpur and as he could get no trace of his father he went to the Police Station on the 23rd September and reported the fact that his father had disappeared. Sub-Inspector Mahabir Singh, who was present at the Police Station when Narain made his report, went to Bhagwanpur on the morning of the 24th September. He states that on the 24th of September, the very day on which he arrived at the village, he inspected a kondon field which is four furlongs from Shahjahanpur and five furlongs from Durgapurwa and which is now stated to be the place where the murder was committed. On the 26th of September he took the statements of two persons, Panchu and Budhu, who have been produced as witnesses and who have stated that they heard shouts from the direction of this kondon field, indicating that a man was being murdered there and they both recognised the voice of Gajodhar. The Sub Inspector states that he suspected Gajodhar and yet we find that, although he had the statements of these two persons directly implicating him and Gajodhar appeared before him on the 28th, he was not arrested until the 29th. I may note that the learned Sessions Judge has refused, and I think rightly, to accept the evidence of these two witnesses against Gajodhur. The Sub-Inspector states that he received information that Gajodhar had pahi cultivation at Manona which is about 14 miles to the north of Durgapurwa and that Hinga, the appellant, who lives in Manona, was related to Gajodhar. So far as I can find from the record, the Sub-Inspector had no other reason whatsoever for requiring Hinga to attend the investigation. All we know with regard to the relationship is in the confession of Hinga himself who says "rishte men mere mausia hote hain." According to the Sub-Inspector, Hinga was brought to him in the evening of the 23th of September and on the 29th of September, Hinga made a confession and after making it took the Sub Inspector to a pond to the west of the village of Shahjahanpur and pointed out the body of Lalta which was floating in the pond. The body which was tied up in a dhoti and had one ghara tied to the neck and another to the feet, was taken out of the pond and after an inquest was held it was sent for medical examination. The medical evidence is to the effect that the body was in such an advanced stage of decomposition that the cause of death could not be ascertained, and that one of the elbow joints was dislocated but no bones were fractured. Hinga was placed before a Magistrate on the 3rd of October 1921 and his confession was recorded but he has retracted that confession both in the Court of the Committing Magistrate and before the learned Sessions Judge. As a result of his inquiry, the Sub-Inspector sent up Gajodhar and Hinga for trial and the learned Sessions Judge, while refusing to rely on any of the evidence which has been produced against Gajodhar, has convicted Hinga on the ground that his retracted confession is corrobrated by the fact that he pointed out the whereabouts of the dead body of Lalta. Hinga's confession is as follows:—

"Gajodhar, Brahman, who was related to me as my mother's sister's husband, came to me at Manona and told me that I had to kill a man and that I should accompany him to Marjha and see Behari Singh. I went with him. On return from that place on Wednesday, three days ago, Gajodhar asked me to go and fetch Lalta Pasi from his house. I brought Lalta Pasi. At that time Gajodhar's brother, Jagannath, was also present. Gajodhar and Jagannath seated themselves under a ber tree in the kondon field and told me that I should strike with a lathi when I had brought him near. Thereafter, I went to Lalta at the hamlet of village Misni and said to him: 'Come along, you have been summoned by the Tahsildar of Nilgaon at village Shahjahanpur.' Thereupon Lalta accompanied me and when he reached near the ber tree, I gave him two blows with the lathi. He screamed out and fell down and then, when he got up and attempted to run away, Gajodhar and Jagannath came up and brought Lalta to the ground by belabouring him with lathis. Then Gajodhar, sitting upon Lalta, caught hold of his throat and Jagannath seized his hands. Shortly after, Lalta Pasi expired. Gajodhar and Jagannath were saying, 'Will you again lodge a complaint against us about the cattle and implicate the whole of our family?' No one approached us. Thereafter, we tied up his dead body in a dhoti and threw it in the pond of Shahjahanpur and then we went away to our respective houses."

The first point to be noted is, that though it may be admitted that Gajodhar was on terms of enmity with Lalta Pasi, yet Hinga had never even seen Lalta Pasi before and had no reason whatsoever for joining Gajodhar in committing the murder. Hinga lives at Manona, which is 14 miles away from the village in which Lalta Pasi lived. He is not a blood relation of Gajodhar and no reasonable explanation is given why he should have been required to attend the investigation at all. It is improbable, though not impossible, that, merely at the instance of Gajodhar, he would have agreed to join in committing the crime. He says that it was he who went in the evening to fetch Lalta Pasi from his house. In an attempt to corroborate this statement one witness, Mangrey, has been produced but the learned Sessions Judge has rightly refused to place any reliance on his evidence. Mangrey, while saying that Hinga is the person who came to fetch Lalta, has at the same time said: "The Thanedar suggested to me that the man with him dressed in a black coat was the man who went to call Lalta. He told me to say so." It is noticeable that Mangrey's statement was not recorded until the 29th of September, that is, the day on which the body was recovered.

An attempt has been made to explain this away by saying that Mangrey had gone away from the village on the morning after the man came to call Lalta; but as the Sub-Inspector declares that on the 24th of September he was informed that Mangrey Ahir had seen the man who took Lalta away from the village, one would have thought that the Sub Inspector would have tried to get hold of such an important witness at the earliest possible moment. And one would also have thought that the Sub-Inspector would have tested before reliable witnesses whether Mangrey could identify Hinga out of a number of other persons as the man who had come to fetch Lalta. In this connection it is also to be noted that there is no explanation in the confession as to how Hinga found out where Lalta lived. There is merely the bald statement "I brought Lalta Pasi." The next point to be noticed is that Hinga in his confession gave the kondon field as the scene of murder. The Sub-Inspector appears to have selected this kondon field as the scene of the murder on the 24th of September for no very convincing reason. We may take it that when the man came to call Lalta to Shahjahanpur it had already been decided that he should be murdered and his body thrown into the tank at Shahjahanpur, and it seems at least unlikely that the murderers would choose a place for the commission of the crime which is not less than 4 furlongs as the crow flies, from the tank, when they could just as easily have chosen a place much nearer to the tank to commit the crime. The only reason given by the Sub-Inspector for thinking that the crime might have been committed in the kondon field is that it was beaten down in parts. In cross-examination, however, he admits that, although it had been raining on the 21st of September, he saw no foot-prints in the field. And it is very noticeable that the confession says nothing whatsoever about how the body was carried from the kondon field to the tank. All we have is: "Thereafter we tied up the dead body in a dhoti and threw it in the pond at Shahjahanpur and then we went away to our respective houses." Then, again, Hinga has stated that he gave Lalta two lathi blows and that when Lalta attempted to run away Gajodhar and Jagannath both came up and belaboured Lalta with lathis until he fell to the ground. As the intention was to murder him we may take it that the blows inflicted by Gajodhar and Jagannath were of considerable violence, yet the medical evidence is that not a single bone was broken. It is also to be noted that, according to this confession, Hinga took no part whatsoever in the actual murder. Again, although criminals do at times confess for no apparent reason, they generally do so in some vague hope of escaping from the penalty of their crime when they know or believe that there is evidence against them. In the present instance it is difficult to understand why Hinga should have made the confession at all. There was no reason whatsoever for connecting him with the crime and not a particle of evidence had, up to the time of his confession, been obtained against him. If, however, we believe that it was on his information that the body was recovered from the tank that fact would be the very strongest corroboration of his confession, and though the confession may be vague and unconvincing in itself, yet, when so corroborated it would be sufficient on which to base a conviction. I shall, therefore, now consider whether it is established beyond any reasonable doubt that it was owing to the statement made by Hinga that the body was discovered in the tank. The evidence with regard to the recovery of the body is contained in the statements of the Sub-Inspector and Chaudhri Karamat Husain. There are two very remarkable discrepancies between the statements of these two witnesses. The Sub-Inspector declares that Hinga gave some information to him sometime after 12 o'clock on the 29th September, that he proceeded to record his statement and he finished taking down the statement at about 4 P. M., and that after he had done so Hinga took him to the pond between 4 and 5 P. M. and pointed out the body lying on the water among the reeds and that the body was taken out of the water about 5 P. M. On the other hand, Chaudhri Karamat Husain before the Committing Magistrate said that he reached the place where the investigation was being held before 12 noon and the discovery of the body took place within an hour afterwards. Before the learned Sessions Judge the Sub-Inspector stated that Chaudhri Karamat Husain arrived some time between 10 and 11 A. M. so that, according to the Chaudhri, the body must have been discovered at any rate before 1 P. M., while, according to the Sub Inspector, it was not discovered until after 4 P. M. And after it was discovered it was taken out and examined and an inquest was held and the body was sent off to Sitapur. All this was done according to Chaudhri Karamat Husain in his presence, yet he says that he left the place at about 4 P. M. What is the reason for this extraordinary discrepancy. Both the Sub-Inspector and Chaudhri Karamat Husain stated that the body could not be seen from the bank of the pond but it is very noticeable that they give different explanations of how it was hidden. The Sub-Inspector says that it could not be seen because of reeds (narai) and he says "narai ke andar upar utrati hui lash baramad hui." On the other hand, Chaudhri Karamat Husain does not mention the existence of reeds at all. He says that "there are trees in the pond at the place where the body was found. The body was among the low-growing parts of those trees. The trees stood out a little above the surface of the water." How can this discrepancy be explained? Again, the Sub Inspector states that it was after the statement of Hinga had been fully recorded that Hinga took them to the tank. Chaudhri Karamat Husain states that Hinga's statement was recorded in his presence and that he was questioned about the gharas. This is a clear indication that the statement was taken not before but after the body was recovered. It is in the evidence of the Sub-Inspector that other persons were present at the time of the recovery of the body, yet not one of them has been produced to give evidence on a point which is absolutely vital to the case. The discrepancies between the statements of Chaudhri Karamat Husain and the Sub-Inspector cannot but raise a reasonable doubt as to whether Hinga did in fact give information leading to the discovery of the body. The pond is quite close to the village site and it is difficult to avoid the suspicion that the body which had come to the surface owing to decomposition and was floating on the water may have been seen by one of the villagers and information of the fact given to the Sub-Inspector. If the confession was properly obtained, it was necessary to stick to the kondon field as the scene of the crime in spite of the improbability of the crime having been committed there, as that place had been selected by the Sub Inspector at the very beginning of his investigation and he was pinned down to it by the statements which he had already recorded of Panchu and Buddhu. And suspicion is strengthened by the fact that evidence of more than a doubtful nature has been produced in an attempt to strengthen the case against Hinga. I refer to the statements of Mohkam and Panchan who live $1\frac{1}{2}$ and 3 miles respectively from Manona and have been produced to say that they saw Hinga and Gajodhar together on a Wednesday, presumably on the day of the murder.

Though I am not prepared to say that Hinga did not give the information which led to the recovery of the body, yet I consider that there is at least a reasonable doubt whether he did so, and I think that in the circumstances it would not be safe to rely on his confession.

I would, therefore, allow the appeal, set aside the conviction and sentence, acquit the appellant and direct that he be immediately released from custody.

ASHWORTH, A. J. C.—(March 28, 1922).—In this case Hinga, Brahman, appeals from his conviction under section 302, Indian Penal Code, by the Sessions Judge of Sitapur on a charge of murdering one Lalta Pasi on the night of the 21st September 1921. The Sessions Judge has sentenced the appellant to death and this sentence is before us for confirmation.

The deceased Lalta Pasi on the evening of the 21st September 1921 had just returned to his house from washing at a well when a man came for him and said that he was wanted by the "Tahsildar" (by which term is meant the zemindar's karinda) at the village of Shahjahanpur about a mile away. At the time when the message reached the deceased, his son, Narain, P. W. No. 1, was at home and he saw his father go off with the man, though he did not see the man's face. As his father did not return that night, the son, Narain, searched for him next morning. He found that the Tahsildar had never been to Shahjahanpur and continued the search for his father throughout the 22nd and 23rd. At 6 P. M. on the evening of the 23rd September he reported the fact of his father not returning at the Thana. The Sub-Inspector Thakur Mahabir Singh, got to the village of Bhagwanpur, where the deceased man lived, at 7 A.M. on the morning of the 24th and then went to Shahjahanpur. He suggests that he suspected one Gajodhar, because he ascertained from two persons, Panchu and Buddhu, that they had heard shouts in a certain kondon field near their threshing-floor, that the shouts indicated that some one was being murdered and, lastly, that they both recognised the voice of Gajodhar. These witnesses have come into Court and corroborated this statement of the Sub-Inspector, but the Sessions Judge has disbelieved their evidence as to the recognition of the voice of Gajodhar and we think rightly. It appears that the real reason why the Sub Inspector suspected this Gajodhar was that Gajodhar had been ejected from a certain holding which had been given to the deceased man and, again, the deceased had brought a criminal complaint against one Jagannath, Gajodhar's brother, in respect of the rescue of some cattle which the deceased had been impounding. Accordingly, the Sub-Inspector on the 28th managed to procure the attendance of Gajodhar and took his statement. He says that he let him go. The same evening the appellant, Hinga, was brought before the Sub-Inspector. The reason for his being suspected, as given by the Sub-Inspector, is merely that Hinga was related to Gajodhar. He also was questioned and something or other in his demeanour must have excited the suspicion of the Sub-Inspector as he kept him under arrest. The next day he says that Hinga made a long statement, which he recorded between the hours of 2 and 4 P. M. on the 29th, and afterwards went with the Sub-Inspector to a pond at Shahjahanpur where the body of Lalta was discovered floating in some deep water amid the reeds. In consequence of this statement of Hinga, both Gajodhar and Jagannath were taken under arrest. Hinga made a confession before M. Muzaffar Muhammad Khan, Magistrate of the First Class, who subsequently committed the case on the 3rd of October. It is not explained why he was not put before the Magistrate earlier. In this confession he stated that Gajodhar was his mother's sister's husband and that he had asked him to assist in getting Lalta murdered. At his suggestion he went to Lalta and fetched him on the excuse that the Tahsildar of Nilgaon at village Shahjahanpur required his presence. On bringing him to a certain spot agreed upon the appellant struck the deceased twice with a lathi whereupon the deceased was attacked by Gajodhar and Jagannath and throttled. All three of them subsequently tied up the body and threw it into the pond at Shahjahanpur. Jagannath was discharged by the Committing Magistrate and Gajodhar was acquitted by the Sessions Judge on the ground that there was no sufficient evidence to corroborate their implication by Hinga the accused. Hinga has been convicted by the Sessions Judge on the basis of his own confession of the 3rd October (which he retracted both in the Court of the Committing Magistrate and that of the Sessions Judge) on the ground that it is sufficiently corroborated by the fact of his having pointed out the whereabouts of the body in the pond at Shahjahanpur.

The Sub-Inspector has attempted to make out that the appellant Hinga had made a long statement to him between 2 and 4 P. M. on the afternoon of the 29th previous to his pointing out the whereabouts of the body. There are, however, strong grounds for believing that whatever statement was made by Hinga to the Sub-Inspector was subsequent and not previous to his pointing out the whereabouts of the body. Chaudhri Karamat Husain, zamindar, who is a prosecution witness and who associated with the Sub-Inspector in his investigation into the disappearance of Lalta, is stated by the Sub-Inspector to have come to him on September the 29th between 10 and 11 A. M. while the Sub-Inspector was in bagh. The Sub-Inspector goes on to say: "It was sometime after 12 o'clock when Hinga accused, gave me certain information. I finished taking down what he stated at about 4 P. M. I went to the pond between 4 and 5 P. M." Now, Chaudhri Karamat Husain has stated explicitly that Hinga gave information leading to the discovery of the body within half an hour of his, Karamat Husain's arrival on the scene. It is impossible to resist the idea that the certain information given by Hinga at 12 o'clock was that he could point out the body. In my experience in a case of this nature a Sub-Inspector would not take down a detailed statement of a person who was in a position to give some palpable corroboration of his story without first demanding that corroboration.

It has been indeed suggested that this discrepancy between the evidence of the Sub Inspector and that of Chaudhri Karamat Hussain as to the time that the body was discovered throws a doubt on the fact of its being discovered by reason of information given by the appellant Hinga. Hinga, in the course of his examination before the Sessions Judge, has stated as follows:—

"Next day in the evening I was taken to a pond. The Chaudhri was there shooting. He brought down a bird. They said there was no bird there but a corpse. The Thanedar had it got out by means of Chamars. I was again pressed by the Thanedar. He told me to say that Jagannath, Gajodhar and I had put the body there. I refused. I was again shut up overnight and sent for trial."

There does not seem to be, however, any reason to doubt that the body was discovered on information received from Hinga. Chaudhri Karamat Hussain, the zemindar, should, I think, be believed when he states that Hinga, Brahman, the accused, gave information leading to the recovery of the body. The Sub-Inspector's placing of the time when the body was discovered as subsequent to the lengthy recording of Hinga's statement was, I am of opinion, due to the Sub-Inspector's desire to show that Hinga's statement to him was corroborated by the finding of the body subsequent to his making it. Obviously if the body was found before he made the statement the statement might be challenged as the desperate expedient of a man who had to explain how he came to know where the body was. Chaudhri Karamat Hussain's statement is open to no suspicion and it is not only in respect of the time of the finding of the body that he has differed from the Sub Inspector but also in respect of the injuries noticed on the body. The Sub-Inspector has spoken of a dent in a bone of the skull but in this he is contradicted by the evidence of the Civil Surgeon. Chaudhri Karamat Hussain states that he noticed no injury on the body and though it is mentioned in the inquest report which he signed he signed that report without reading it. It is to be observed that in his first examination by the Committing Magistrate, Hinga, the accused, never objected that the evidence of his finding the body was false nor alleged that he had been ill-treated by the Police. He set up an alibi but reserved all details of it for the Sessions Court. It was for the accused to summon some of the many witnesses of the discovery of the body, if he wished to challenge the allegation that the body was pointed out by himself Chaudhri Karamat Hussain was cross-examined as to whether he had a gun and he has denied this. If he had not a gun he could not have shot the bird as pretended by the accused before the Sessions Judge.

The Sessions Judge has stated that there is no corroboration of the confession of the accused except the fact that the accused pointed out the whereabouts of the body in the pond. It appears to us that there is considerable corroboration of this confession apart from the finding of the body on Hinga's information. The confession states that the appellant was asked to go and fetch Lalta Pasi from his house and did so. The evidence of the son of the deceased establishes that a man did fetch the deceased from his house. Again in the confession it is stated that the accused told the deceased that the Tahsildar wanted the deceased at Shahjahanpur. The evidence of the son of the deceased proves that this was what was said by the man who fetched him. The confession states that Gajodhar and Jagannath, when murdering the deceased, used the words: "Will you again lodge a complaint against us about the cattle and implicate the whole of our family?" It is proved that the deceased had lodged a complaint against Jagannath for rescuing the cattle. This complaint is Exhibit D. Again, in the confession it is stated: "Gajodhar and Jagannath seated themselves under a ber tree in the kondon field and told me that I should strike Lalta with a lathi when I had brought him near." Now the Sessions Judge has distrusted the witnesses Panchu and Buddhu, who say that they heard the sounds of an altercation in a kondon field one night at about the time of the deceased's disappearance, chiefly because he does not think that they could have recognised the voice of Gajodhar. It seems, however, impossible to doubt that the Sub Inspector did hear something about a noise in the kondon field on the night of the disappearance of the deceased. The evidence of not only Mahabir Singh, the Sub-Inspector, whose statement as to the time that he discovered the body we think untrue, but also of M. Abdul Hamid Khan, Officer incharge of Sidhauli, who was concerned in investigation of the case on the 27th and 28th September, establishes the fact that the inquiry began on the 24th September at the kondon field where there was a suspicion of foul play having taken place. The reason for this suspicion is stated by the Sub-Inspector to be that a constable had told him of there being a field showing signs of having been trampled down. This I take to mean that Panchu and Buddhu had on the 24th told people of the noise that they heard in the night before they were examined on the 26th by the Sub-

Inspector, and that this led a constable to examine the neighbourhood where they had heard the noise. M. Abdul Hamid Khan put in a map, Exhibit E, showing this field. Mahabir Singh also put in a map, Exhibit C, showing the field. Now in both these maps a tree is shown near the spot where the murder was committed. In this confession the appellant has stated that he was told to bring the deceased up to a ber tree and did so. This detail, therefore, of the confession is corroborated by the existence of a ber tree near the kondon field which fell under suspicion as the scene of foul play at a very early stage of the proceedings. Lastly, there is one most important item of the confession which receives strong corroboration. The accused has stated that on reaching near the ber tree he gave the deceased two blows with a lathi. Deceased screamed out and fell down and then when he got up and attempted to run away Gajodhar and Jagannath came up and brought the deceased to the ground by belabouring him with lathis. Then Gajodhar sitting upon Lalta deceased caught hold of his throat and Jagannath seized his hands. Shortly after Lalta expired. Now the Sub-Inspector Mahabir Singh attempted to make out a case that the deceased had received a severe injury on the head. The medical evidence makes it clear that this was not the case. Dr. Masha Allah Khan has given evidence that there was no injury to the skull, the bones of which were entire. No marks of injury were discovered on the body and the cause of death could not be ascertained. Inasmuch as the theory of Mahabir Singh was that the deceased had been killed by a blow on the skull it is impossible to hold that the appellant could have been tutored by the Police suggesting to the contrary that the deceased was killed by strangulation. In so far as the accused says this, his evidence is corroborated by the medical evidence, to this extent that the deceased was not killed by any severe blow which would break a bone or leave an impression on a bone. Later on in his evidence Dr. Masha Allah Khan says: "It is possible that the death may have been due to suffocation and all signs of it might have disappeared as a result of decomposition. Marks of violence would similarly have disappeared if they were confined only to soft tissues." This statement, especially the last few words of it, corroborates the confession and does not corroborate the statement of Mahabir Singh as to signs of a severe blow denting the skull of the deceased. As stated above, the evidence of Chaudhri Karamat Husain likewise corroborates the confession as against Mahabir Singh's evidence. We have, therefore, an important corroboration of the confession as to the method of death and this corroboration also goes to disprove the statement of the accused in Court that his confession was induced by the Police.

I am of opinion that where an accused person has pointed out the whereabouts of the body of a man who has undoubtedly been murdered and has made a confession which not only is uncontradicted by any of the facts proved in the case but indeed receives corroboration in respect of many points, then the confession should be held to be true as implicating the person making it unless he can make out a strong case to the contrary. It is not necessary that the confession of an accused should receive direct corroboration as to the fact that the accused was concerned in the offence. It is sufficient that there is such corroboration of the confession as to indicate that the accused had such knowledge of the circumstances of the offence as would suggest his taking part in it.

It seems scarcely necessary to refer to the suggestion of the Counsel for the accused that possibly there was no murder whatever. The fact that water pots were slung on to the body of the deceased in order to make it sink precludes the possibility of suicide.

It remains to state that, believing as I do the confession of Hinga, it is obviously to be regretted that the person or persons whose tool he professes to have been should escape. The Sessions Judge in stating that there was no evidence to corroborate the retracted confession of the appellant so far as it implicated Gajodhar and Jagannath is not strictly accurate. There is good evidence that these men had a motive for compassing the death of the deceased. There is also evidence that the appellant, Hinga, was a relation of Gajodhar's. Indeed it appears incidently in the evidence of the Sub-Inspector Mahabir Singh that Gajodhar had brought food for Hinga and, therefore, was present in bagh when Hinga first gave information leading to the discovery of the body. At the same time we agree with the lower Court that there is not sufficient corroboration to be found in these facts of the confession so far as Gajodhar and Jagannath are concerned.

No argument has been addressed to us as to sentence, and the part which the appellant admitted in his confession that he had played in bringing about the death of the deceased was such that we can see no ground for not inflicting the extreme penalty. The case appears to us to fall under section 114 of the Indian Penal Code. If the appellant after decoying the deceased into the clutches of his murderers had retired before the murder was committed he would have been liable to be punished as an abettor. Being present when the murder was committed, he must be deemed to have committed the murder himself.

Accordingly, I would dismiss the appeal of Hinga, uphold his conviction, and, confirming the sentence, direct that it be carried into effect in accordance with law.

LYLE, A. J. C., AND ASHWORTH, A. J. C.,—(March 28, 1922).—As we differ in opinion in this case, the case with our opinions will be laid before the Judicial Commissioner for his opinion under the provisions of section 429 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

KANHAIYA LAL, J. C.—(April 11, 1922).—This is a Reference under section 429 of the Code of Criminal Procedure in a case in which the appellant Hinga has been convicted on a charge of murdering Lalta Pasi on the night of the 21st September 1921. The learned Judges, who heard the appeal and the reference for the confirmation of the sentence of death passed on the appellant, differed in their view of the evidence adduced and the case has, therefore, been referred to me for opinion.

It appears that Lalta Pasi was living in the village Durgapurwa, a hamlet of Misni. On the southwest of it about 20 fields away stands the abadi of Nanakpur, a hamlet of the village Umra, where Gajodhar used to live. Gajodhar had some pahi cultivation in the village Manone, which is about 14 miles north of this locality. He used to stay there at times with a relation of his named Kuddi. In 1327 Fasli he was ejected from some land, which he held in the village Misni, by the proprietor of the Nilgaon estate, and the land, from which he was ejected, was given to Lalta Pasi for cultivation. It is said that Gajodhar was consequently annoyed with Lalta and allowed his cattle to graze in the fields, cultivated by the latter. On the 3rd September Lalta made a report at the Police Station Sidhauli, stating that on the previous evening at about three gharis before sunset he found 10 or 12 heads of the cattle grazing in his bajra fields, that Basu and Ram Ghulam were standing there, and that when he tried to drive those cattle and take them to the pound, they raised an alarm and two other persons, named Jagannath and Debi Nath, came up from the village and rescued the cattle by force (Exhibit D). He also filed a complaint in the Court of the Tahsildar-Magistrate of Sidhauli, for the hearing of which the 23rd September 1921 was fixed. Among the persons accused were a son and a nephew of Gajodhar.

On the evening of the 21st September 1921 at about a ghari after nightfall a person, who described himself as a sipahi of the Nilgaon estate, came to call Lalta, saying that the Tahsildar of the Nilgaon estate was at the village Shahjahanpur and wanted him there. Lalta took with him a lota, a string and a spare dhoti and accompanied him and was not thereafter seen alive. The present appellant is said to be that person. Narain, the son of Lalta, states that he did not recognise the man, who had come to call his father, or seen his face, that his father told him that a sipahi had come to call him and that he saw his father going away with him. Mangrey, a neighbour, states that he heard a man calling out and enquiring where the house of Lalta was and he told him where it was and pointed out Lalta as he came along. Mangrey admits that he did not know the man from before, but in the Court of Session he indicated the appellant, Hinga, as the man who had come to call Lalta, adding that the Thanedar had suggested to him that the man with him dressed in a black coat was the man who went to call Lalta, and told him to say so.

As Lalta did not return home that night Narain searched for him on the following morning, and finding that the Tahsildar did not come to the village Shahjahanpur and that there was no trace of his father, he made a report on the 23rd September 1921 at the Sidhauli Police Station at 6 P. M. stating the circumstances under which his father left the house and had not since returned or been traced. An investigation was started on the next day at 7 A. M. and it was ascertained that there was a kondon field, the crop of which was beaten down in parts. On the 26th September 1921 the second officer took down the statements of Panchu and Buddhu and ascertained from them that they had been present in their threshing floor on the night of the 21st September 1921 and had heard the cries of some person coming from the side of the kondon field shouting for help and saying that he was being killed. These persons profess to have gone that side to see what the matter was and to have recognised one of the assailants in the dark night by his voice as Gajodhar. A search of Gajodhar followed, and a Police constable was deputed to bring him and his relatives. On the 28th September 1921 Gajodhar was produced before him. The Officer-in-charge of the Police Station had meanwhile arrived. He took down the statement of Gajodhar and let him go and went away himself too, leaving the investigation in charge of the second officer. On the evening of the 28th September 1921 Hinga was brought from the village Manona. On the next day he is said to have made a statement and pointed out the dead body of Lalta, lying in a pond, where it was floating amid bushes, tied up in a dhoti by means of a rope to which two earthen gharas were attached. An inquest report was drawn up, in which it was stated that there was an injury on the skull 6 or 7 fingers long, disclosing a fracture of the bones (Exhibit B), but the medical evidence shows that no injury to the skull, the bones of which were entire, or to the other parts of the body, was noticeable. The body was in an advanced state of decomposition and in the opinion of the Medical Officer the cause of death was not ascertainable.

The body was identified by Narain and other persons as that of Lalta. On the 30th September 1921 Hinga was sent to a Magistrate, who recorded his confession on the 3rd October 1921. In that confession he stated that Gajodhar was his relation (mausia) and had asked him to join in the murder, that he had gone to call Lalta Pasi and had told him that the Tahsildar of the Nilgaon estate had come to Shahjahanpur and wanted him, that Lalta accompanied him up to the ber tree near the kondon field, that he attacked him from behind with a lathi, that Gajodhar and another person joined him in killing him to death, and that the body was subsequently tied up in a dhoti and thrown into the pond at Shahjahanpur. This statement was retracted before the Committing Magistrate and the Sessions Judge: and the question is what value can be attached to it and how far it is corroborated by the other evidence adduced.

If the dead body was discovered in consequence of the confession, the corroboration would be material, but the evidence produced about the time when the dead body was discovered is discrepant and it is difficult to say whether the discovery was made before the confession or afterwards. The learned Committing Magistrate observes that the confession was made after the accused had been three days in Jail; but the report on which the confession was recorded is not on the record and no order requiring his production on the 3rd October is traceable. On the 1st October an order was passed that he was to be sent to the Jail and kept apart from the other under-trial prisoners, but it does not appear why his confession was not recorded on that date and whether the delay was due to an attempt to get a conditional pardon given to him or to some other cause. The confession ascribes to the accused a leading part in the murder, though he had no possible motive for it beyond his distant relationship with Gajodhar, at whose instance the murder is said to have been committed. According to the confession the accused gave two lathi blows, and when Lalta fell down and attempted to run away, Gajodhar and another person came up and belaboured him with lathis and then throttled him, but, as has been stated already, no marks of injury to the skull or bones were found anywhere. It is surprising that accused should have been sent for from the village Manona and detained while Gajodhar was brought and let go after his statement was taken down, though Panchum and Buddhu had implicated him in their statements. It is also noticeable that though the scene of the attack had been located several days earlier the body remained undiscovered till after the arrival of the appellant. The body was found in an advanced state of decomposition and must in the ordinary course have been badly stinking. The Shahjahanpur pond in which it was situated is close to the abadi. People go there for fishing and in the ordinary course it could hardly have remained unnoticed very long. There is a striking discrepancy between the statement of the Investigating Police Officer and Chaudhri Karamat Husain, the only search witness examined. The former states that the body was discovered between 4 and 5 P. M. after Hinga had made his statement, while the latter says that he was sent for at noon and the confession made half an hour later. Before the Committing Magistrate he said that the body was pointed out within an hour of his arrival. Mohkam and Pancham, residents of the village Manona, say that they saw the accused going with Gajodhar on the evening of Wednesday, that is, on the day the murder was committed; but if what they state is true (kuch din baqi raha hoga) the accused could hardly have covered a distance of 14 miles and reached the place where the deceased lived and the murder was committed a ghari after sunset. The evidence of Panchu and Buddhu, who profess to have heard the cries of the murdered man on the night of the murder but had not mentioned the same to any person till five days later, was rightly disbelieved by the learned Sessions Judge.

On the evidence adduced the confession cannot be accepted and the conviction of the appellant cannot stand. As pointed out by Straight, J. in Queen-Empress v. Babu Lal (1) the failure of the prosecution in many cases is due to the inveterate desire of the investigating officer not to work up to the confession but to get hold of a confession first and then work from it downwards. This is a case of that kind. The case is not free from doubt and the corroboration afforded by the alleged discovery of the body after the confession was recorded is open to question. I would agree, therefore, with the learned First Additional Judicial Commissioner in giving the accused the benefit of the doubt and acquit him of the offence with which he has been charged.

LEE, A. J. C., AND ASHWORTH, A. J. C.—(April 12, 1922).—In accordance with the opinion of the learned Judicial Commissioner the appeal is allowed, the conviction and sentence are set aside, the appellant is acquitted and he will be immediately released from custody.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL MISCELLANEOUS PETITIONS NOS. 409, 410 AND 411 OF 1921.

September 19, 1921.

Present:—Mr. Justice Spencer and Mr. Justice Kumaraswamy Sastri.

In re KOCHUNNI ELAYA NAIR—PETITIONER.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss 54, 58, 60, 177, 491—Martial Law Ordinance (II of 1921), cls. 6, 16—Offence committed in Martial Law area—Arrest of offender outside area, legality of—Summary Magistrate, remand by, of offender arrested outside Martial Law area, legality of—Habeas corpus, writ of—Jurisdiction of High Court.

It is not illegal for a Summary Magistrate appointed under Martial Law Ordinance II of 1921 to remand a person arrested by the Police outside the Martial Law area but charged with the commission of cognizable offences within the said area. Nor is the arrest by the Police outside the area illegal, as the Police only purport to exercise powers vested in them under the Criminal Procedure Code. [p. 30, col. 2.]

The provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure are not abrogated or suspended by the introduction of Martial Law. The Courts constituted under the Ordinance will follow, as far as possible, the procedure laid down in the Code. [p. 28, col. 2.]

Per Spencer, J.—The ordinary rule as to jurisdiction is that it is the area within which the offence is committed and not the place where the offender may be found that determines the Court which has jurisdiction to try the offence. [p. 28, col. 2.]

Quære.—Whether the jurisdiction of the High Court to issue writs of habeas corpus is not excluded by clause 16 of Martial Law Ordinance II of 1921. [p. 29, col. 1.]

Per Kumarasawami Sastri, J.—Clause 16 of the Martial Law Ordinance does not refer to the general jurisdiction of the High Court to issue writs of habeas corpus. The section does not apply where the acts of the Martial Law Magistrates are wholly without jurisdiction. [p. 30, col. 1]

A Magistrate appointed under clause 6 of the Ordinance cannot try offences committed outside the Martial Law area or hold Court outside. But where he has powers as a Magistrate under the Criminal Procedure Code, there is nothing in the Ordinance to prevent the exercise of functions assigned to such Magistrate outside the area when the proceedings have not reached the stage of a trial but are only in the course of investigation preliminary to the offender being charged before a Magistrate. [p. 31, col. 1.]

When a Magistrate, who is vested with more than one power, under one of which only he has power to order a remand, purports to act in the exercise of another power which gives him no authority to do so, the case is one of irregularity which can be cured by the amendment of the order where there is no prejudice to the accused. [p. 31, col. 1.]

CR. M. P. No. 409 OF 1921.

Petition praying that, in the circumstances stated in the affidavit filed with Criminal Miscellaneous Petition No. 411 of 1921, on the file of the High Court, the High Court will be pleased to issue a writ of habeas corpus calling upon Mr. G. Batty, a Summary Magistrate under the Martial Law Ordinance in South Malabar to cause the body of Koshunni Elaya Nair, petitioner herein, to be produced for the purpose of determining or adjudging the legality of his detention.

CR. M. P. No. 410 OF 1921.

Petition praying that, in the circumstances stated in the affidavit filed with Criminal Miscellaneous Petition No. 411 of 1921, on the file of the High Court, the High Court will be pleased to issued a writ of certiorari removing to this Court for the purpose of being quashed the proceedings of Mr. G. Batty, a Summary Magistrate, under the Martial Law Ordinance in South Malabar, ordering the arrest and detention of the petitioner herein.

CR. M. P. No. 411 OF 1921.

Petition praying that, in the circumstances stated in the affidavit filed therewith, the High Court will be pleased to issue an order directing the release of the petitioner on bail pending trial of offences, if any, against him.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. S. Srinivasa Aiyangar, for the Petitioner.—The action of the Summary Magistrate in ordering petitioner's remand was illegal. Though the offense is alleged to have been committed in the Martial Law area, the petitioner was outside the area at the time of his arrest. The order appointing the Summary Magistrate only vests in him jurisdiction to try offenses committed inside the Martial Law area. He can neither hold Court outside the area or exercise jurisdiction over persons who are not within it. The words 'in any administration area' in clause 2 of the Ordinance means within the area and not for that area.

The Magistrate's order being clearly illegal is subject to revision by the High Court. The High Court has general power, even apart from the provisions of section 491, Criminal Procedure Code, to issue writs in the nature of habeas corpus. Nataraja Iyer, In re (1), Ameer Khan, In the matter of (2).

Mr. J. C. Adam, Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.—The Ordinance does not override the general provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code. The Police have power to pursue an offender anywhere in British India in cognizable cases. The offences were committed within the Martial Law area and petitioner's escape outside the area will neither debar the Police from arresting the offender nor the Magistrate before whom he is taken from remanding him to custody. Here the Summary Magistrate is also an ordinary First Class Magistrate under the Criminal Procedure Code.

ORDER.

CR. M. P. No. 409 OF 1921.

SPENCER, J.—This is an application for the issue of a writ of habeas corpus to cause the person of Kochunni Elaya Nair to be brought before the High Court for the purpose of determining the legality of his detention. The accompanying affidavit states that Kochunni Elaya Nair, the second Stanee of the Mannarghat Nair family, was arrested on September 3rd and imprisoned in the Palghat Sub-Jail. It is alleged that he had, at the moment of arrest, just arrived at his own residence situated within the limits of the Palghat Municipality and that, after some questions being put to him as to the Moplah outbreak at Mannarghat, the Assistant Superintendent of Police directed the Inspector to take him into the Sub-Jail, that no warrant of arrest was shown to him and that he was not told anything about the offence with which he was charged. He was accordingly taken to the Sub-Jail, and on the 6th September an application for bail was put in before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Palghat, and was summarily rejected. It is added that the Taluk of Palghat and the town of Palghat within which the petitioner's residence and the Sub-Jail are situated, are outside the Martial Law area.

The Public Prosecutor informs us that he is instructed by the District Magistrate of Malabar to say that the accused is charged with having committed offences under sections 121, 395, 431, 436 and 380, Indian Penal Code and abetment of the same committed within Martial Law area and that he will be sent up for trial by the Special Tribunal constituted under Ordinance No. III of 1921 of the Government of India published in the Gazette of India, September 5, 1921.

Mr. S. Srinivasa Iyengar, on behalf of the petitioner, contends, (1) that the accused could not be legally arrested for an offence committed inside the Martial Law area when he was at the time of arrest at a place outside it, and (2) that the Magistrate, Mr. Batty, before whom he was brought and who refused to release him on bail, was at Palghat, a place outside the Martial Law area, and had no jurisdiction to exercise his powers at the spot, seeing that clause 6 of Ordinance No. II of 1921, dated 26th August 1921, provides for the constitution of Summary Courts of criminal jurisdiction for the purposes of this Ordinance in any administration area that may be proclaimed as a Martial Law area under clause 2. He argues that "in any administration area" means "within the area" and not "for that area."

The first point for which the learned Vakil is contending is a very strange one. It amounts to this that an offender has only to slip out of the Martial Law area to be immune from arrest and trial for acts done by him inside that area. The ordinary rule as to jurisdiction is that it is the area within which the offence is committed and not the place where the offender may be found that determines the Court which has jurisdiction to try the offence—see section 177 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Section 54 of the Criminal Procedure Code authorises any Police Officer to arrest without a warrant and without an order from a Magistrate a person who has been concerned in any cognisable offence, and the offences referred to by the Public Prosecutor or some of them are cognizable offences. Section 58 authorizes a Police Officer, for the purpose of arresting without warrant any person whom he is authorised to arrest under this Chapter (V), to pursue such persons into any place in British India. Section 60 directs a Police Officer making an arrest without warrant to take the person arrested without unnecessary delay before a Magistrate having jurisdiction in the case. There is no alternation of the law in this respect in consequence of the constitution of Martial Law Courts. The provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure are not abrogated or suspended by the introduction of Martial Law. On the contrary, clause 12 and the other clauses of Ordinance No. II indicate that the Courts constituted under the Ordinance will follow, as far as possible, the procedure laid down in the Code. Presumably, the Police will, as early as possible, take the petitioner into the Martial Law area and obtain the orders of a Court constituted under that Ordinance. This they can do without any order in the nature of an extradition order seeing that the whole of the Malabar District, a portion of British India, is under the administration of the British Government. It is for the petitioner's Vakil to show that the Police acted without jurisdiction in this instance, and as he has not succeeded in doing this, the first point raised by him fails.

I now proceed to deal with the second contention raised. The powers vested in this Court to issue writs of habeas corpus in the Presidency Town are contained in section 491 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Analogous powers are given us by section 456 in respect of European British subjects in any part of our jurisdiction whether in the City of Madras or in the Mofussil. In Nataraja Iyer, In re (1) Sundara Iyer and Sadasiva Iyer, JJ., expressed an opinion, following Ameer Khan, In the matter of (2), that the High Court has, by virtue of clause 18 of the Charter Act, power to issue writs of habeas corpus even outside the City of Madras and in respect of all British subjects whatsoever. Assuming that those learned Judges were right in this view, if we attempt to issue a writ of habeas corpus in this present case, we are confronted with clause 16 of Ordinance No. II of 1921 which declares that no Court shall have authority to make any order under section 491 of the Code of Criminal Procedure or to revise any order of sentence or to transfer any case from a Summary Court or have any jurisdiction of any kind in respect of any proceedings of the Summary Court. But Mr. Srinivasa Iyengar contends that if a Magistrate vested with the powers of a Summary Court in a Martial Law area steps outside that area and attempts to exercise his functions outside the territorial jurisdiction assigned to him by the Ordinance, his acts will be illegal and subject to our control and revision. We understand that Mr. Batty is the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Palghat Division and that he ordinarily exercises the powers of a First Class Magistrate in Palghat which is outside the Martial Law area. If then the petitioner was brought before him by the Police as being the nearest Magistrate referred to in section 167 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, he would, as Sub-Divisional Magistrate, have authority to authorize the detention of the accused in such custody as he might think fit for a term not exceeding 15 days: or, if he had no jurisdiction to try the case, he might order the accused to be forwarded to a Magistrate having such jurisdiction. If, on the other hand, when the prisoner was brought before Mr. Batty, he was purporting to act as a Court of Summary jurisdiction constituted by the Martial Law Ordinance, what would be the proper order he should make upon an application being made to him? The proper course to be taken by a Magistrate who has no jurisdiction would be to decline jurisdiction and to reject the application on that ground. We must now see what is the illegal act which Mr. Batty is alleged to have committed according to the affidavit attached to the petition. This affidavit states that, when an application for bail was put in before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate on the 6th September, he summarily rejected the application without even hearing the Vakil. Now, to summarily reject an application would be the only course open to a Magistrate who finds he has no jurisdiction to deal with it, and in this view there was nothing illegal in the procedure of Mr. Batty and no act committed by him with which we could interfere, assuming that we have the power to do so. It is not stated in the affidavit that Mr. Batty ordered the petitioner to be remanded to prison but it is alleged that it was the Assistant Superintendent of Police who said "Better shove him in the Fort to-day" and directed the Inspector to take him there.

The result is that this point also fails and the application is dismissed.

There is a connected Criminal Miscellaneous Petition No. 410 of 1921 applying for the issue of a writ of certiorari which fails and must be dismissed for the same reason.

As regards Criminal Miscellaneous Petition No. 411 of 1921 which is an application to release the petitioner on bail, the information that we have is that the petitioner is arrested in connection with non-bailable offences. No further details are before us, and in the absence of such details we would not in any case exercise a discretion in petitioner's favour. That petition is also dismissed.

KUMARASWAMI SASTRI, J.—This is an application for the issue of a writ of habeas corpus by the petitioner who is charged with having committed offences under sections 121, 395, 431, 436 and 380 of the Indian Penal Code alleged to have been committed by him within the area proclaimed to be under Martial Law. He was arrested by the Police while he was in Palghat, a place outside the area and was remanded to Jail by Mr. Batty (who is the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of the Palghat Division and also a Magistrate invested with summary powers of trial under the Martial Law Ordianee) under orders of the Military Commander for the purpose of the petitioner being sent for trial before the Special Tribunal constituted under Ordinance III of 1921. The grounds urged on petitioner's behalf are, (1) that the Police had no power to arrest a person who commits an offence within the Martial Law area but is found outside, (2) that the jurisdiction of Summary Courts and of Magistrates empowered to try offences conferred by Ordinance II of 1921 is purely territorial and that consequently Mr. Batty who purported to act as a Martial Law Magistrate outside the Martial Law area was without jurisdiction thus making the detention in Jail illegal. It was also contended that the Special Tribunal constituted under Ordinance III would have no power to try offenders who are found outside the Martial Law area even though the offences were committed within the area. I do not think it necessary to go into this question which is one to be decided by the Tribunal when the petitioner is placed before it for trial.

The power of the High Court, as an abstract question of law, to issue a writ of habeas corpus in the present case is not contested by the Public Prosecutor, though he contends that the facts of the case will not justify the High Court in issuing the writ. It has been held in Nataraja Iyer, In re (1) and Ameer Khan, In the matter of (2), that the Court has jurisdiction, having inherited the power from the Supreme Court. This jurisdiction is apart from the power conferred by section 491 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and is in no way curtailed by the provisions of the section. The Martial Law Ordinance excludes powers conferred by section 491 and does not refer to the general jurisdiction to issue the writ. Moreover, section 16 cannot apply to cases where the acts of the Martial Law Magistrate are wholly without jurisdiction, for example, when he proceeds to places outside the Martial Law area and tries persons or passes sentences. It only applies to acts done within the jurisdiction and powers conferred by the Ordinance, however illegal or irregular such acts may be, and not to proceedings passed wholly without jurisdiction.

As regards the first contention, I do not see anything in the Martial Law Ordinance which prohibits the arrest of persons who commit offences inside the Martial Law area but escape outside. The Penal Code has not been abrogated within such areas and so far as the arrest of such offenders is concerned the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure will apply so far as the arrest outside is concerned. Section 54 of the Code of Criminal Procedure gives the Police power to arrest without a warrant a person who is charged with the offences with which the petitioner is charged, and it seems to me that it makes no difference where the offence was committed so long as it is within British India. Section 60 directs that the person arrested should be produced without unnecessary delay before a Magistrate having jurisdiction in the case or before the Officer-in-charge of a Police Station. Under section 167 a Magistrate, whether he has jurisdiction or not to try the case, can order detention of the accused in custody for a period not exceeding 15 days and if he has no jurisdiction to try the case he can order the accused to be taken to the Magistrate having jurisdiction. Mr. Batty as Sub-Divisional Magistrate had power to remand the petitioner.

As regards the second objection it must be borne in mind that under section 6 of the Ordinance it is only persons who are already Magistrates that are appointed under the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure to exercise the power of a Summary Court. It is a specific power conferred on one who has the other ordinary powers of a Magistrate. There can be little doubt that their powers to sit as Magistrates trying offenders brought before the Summary Courts for trial are purely territorial and that they cannot exercise their powers of trial outside the Martial Law area. Section 2 provides that Martial Law shall be in force and the provisions of the Ordinance shall apply in the area specified in the Schedule and such other areas as the Governor-General in Council may by Notification direct. Section 3 refers to the administration of Martial Law in any area in which Martial Law is in force. Section 6 provides for the establishment of Summary Courts in any administrative area. Section 7 directs that no Summary Court shall try any offence unless such offence was committed in the administration area in which the Court is constituted. These provisions make it clear that a Magistrate appointed under section 6 cannot try offences committed outside the area or hold Court outside. There is, however, nothing in the Ordinance to show that, as Magistrates appointed under the Code of Criminal Procedure, they cannot exercise the functions assigned to such Magistrates outside the area when the proceedings have not reached the stage of a trial but are only in the course of investigation preliminary to the offender being charged before a Magistrate. When a Divisional Magistrate is also appointed to try offences under section 6 there is nothing to prevent his exercising the ordinary powers of a Magistrate outside the area and arresting and remanding persons who are charged with offences inside the Martial Law area with a view to their being brought to trial inside the area or before the Special Tribunal.

Even if Mr. Batty was technically wrong in acting in his capacity of Special Magistrate, I think the defect would only be an irregularity, as his act would have been perfectly legal if he had acted as Sub-Divisional Magistrate. When a Magistrate, who is vested with more than one power, under one of which only he has power to order a remand, purports to act in the exercise of another power which gives him no authority to do so, the case is one of irregularity which can be cured by the amendment of the order where there is no prejudice to the accused. It is not shown that the accused would be in a better position if Mr. Batty had issued the order in his capacity of Sub-Divisional Magistrate.

In cases like the present when the arrest itself is not illegal and the offences are non-bailable I do not think the High Court will be exercising a proper discretion in directing the issue of a writ and directing the accused to be brought before it. Even assuming that the remand is irregular there is nothing to prevent the Police from arresting the accused the moment after his release is ordered and taking him before the nearest Magistrate and getting a remand. If it is brought to the notice of the Court that the Magistrate ordering the remand ought to have acted in one capacity rather than in another the proper course will be for the High Court to direct the Magistrate to remand the accused according to law.

There is also another reason why I do not think I ought to interfere at this stage. While the case was being argued the Government constituted the Special Tribunal before which the petitioner would be sent for trial. Section 6, clause 1 of Ordinance III of 1921 dispenses with the committal of the accused for trial and all that has to be done is for petitioner to be taken before it for trial. He can apply for bail to the Tribunal as it has all the powers of a Court of Session having original jurisdiction and as appeals from the Tribunal lie to the High Court he can move this Court if bail is wrongly refused. He has, therefore, an adequate remedy. I dismiss the petition for a habeas corpus.

The petition for the issue of a writ of certiorari is not pressed and is dismissed.

I do not think that I ought, at this stage and on the scanty materials before me, to direct the release of the petitioner on bail and I accordingly dismiss the petition without prejudice to his applying later on, if he is so advised.

Practice—Criminal revision—Case referred by Sessions Judge for enhancement of sentence—Application by accused thereafter on the merits, whether barred—Alternative charges—Complainant, whether can alter election.

The mere fact that a reference has been made to the High Court by a Sessions Judge for enhancement of sentence, has not the effect of depriving the accused of the right to apply to the High Court in revision.

It is contrary to public policy and to the recognised principles of the administration of the Criminal Law that when a charge has been launched which requires sanction by a particular authority and that authority has refused sanction, to hold that it is open to a complainant to alter his election, shift his ground and start a fresh charge on an alternative section which does not require sanction.

Criminal revision from an order of the Sessions Judge, Saharanpur.

Mr. Saila Nath Mukerji, for the Applicant.

Mr. R. Malcomson (Assistant Government Advocate), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

WALSH, J.—In our opinion this application must succeed. The fact that the matter has been in one form before another Judge of this Court is irrelevant. It was referred to this Court by the Sessions Judge for enhancement of sentence. A learned Judge of this Court looked into the matter and came to the conclusion that there was no ground for issuing notice. It would amount to a denial of justice to accept the argument of the Assistant Government Advocate that a reference by a Sessions Judge which this Court may or may not see fit in its discretion to entertain, resulted in depriving a convicted person of the right to apply to this Court in revision. It by no means follows from this view that any accused person has the right to come in revision more than once. At any rate he would come with little hope of success. The mere fact that he had failed on his first application to raise the point which he relied upon in his second, would give a discretionary power not to entertain the second application at all.

On the second point I hold a very clear view, without going into the authorities at all which have been discussed in a very able judgment by the Sessions Judge who has taken a very clear view of the matter, that there is one fact in this case which marks it off from any case which has been cited in argument. The charge might have been made against the accused under section 182 or section 211, but it seems to me to be contrary to public policy and to the recognised principles of the administration of the Criminal Law that when a charge has been launched which requires sanction by a particular authority and that authority has refused sanction, to hold that it is open to a complainant to alter his election, shift his ground and start a fresh charge on an alternative section which does not require sanction. He should have thought of that before. A useful test to my mind is to assume that the charge under section 182 had been permitted to proceed to judgment; if it had resulted in a conviction which was subsequently set aside for want of sanction, or, on the other hand, in an acquittal also for want of sanction, it seems to me that under section 403, Criminal Procedure Code, that fact would have been an answer to a subsequent charge under section 211. The point may seem technical but a question of principle is involved, and, however right the conviction in this case may have been on the merits, I think the only course is to entertain this application and quash the conviction. The conviction is, therefore, set aside. The fine, if paid, must be refunded.

RYVES, J.—I agree.

BY THE COURT.—We accept the application in revision and quash the conviction. The fine, if paid, must be refunded.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 195 (7)—Sanction to prosecute—Judge of High Court exercising Original Civil Jurisdiction, refusing to grant sanction—Appeal, forum of.

A Judge of a High Court sitting in the exercise of Original Civil Jurisdiction is a Court subject to the Appellate Jurisdiction of that High Court, so where a Judge in the exercise of such jurisdiction grants, or refuses to grant, sanction to prosecute, an appeal lies by virtue of clause (7) of section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code, to the same High Court, on the Appellate Side.

Per Shah, C. J. Quære:—Whether an order refusing to grant sanction to prosecute under section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, is a judgment within the meaning of clause 15 of the Bombay High Court Letters Patent.

Appeal from the order of Mr. Justice Kanga.

Mr. Velinkar, for the Appellant.

Mr. Coltman, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, AG. C. J.—This is an appeal from the order of Mr. Justice Kanga refusing to grant sanction which was applied for by the defendant in Suit No 2600 of 1920. The sanction to prosecute was asked for in respect of a letter dated 16th October 1920 (Exhibit E), which was said to have been forged and also in respect of a statement made by respondent No. 1 as regards the settlement of the July shipment which was a matter in dispute between the parties. It is not necessary, for the purpose of this appeal, to state in detail the facts relating to the suit. The suit was decided on the 9th August 1920, when it was conceded by the plaintiffs that there was a settlement in respect of the July shipment.

An objection has been taken on behalf of the respondents that no appeal lies because the subordinate Court contemplated by section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, is a Court other than a High Court and that, therefore, there could be no appeal under that section from the order of a Judge of the same Court. It seems to me, however, that the preliminary objection must be disallowed. Sub-section (7) of section 195 provides that, for the purpose of this section, every Court shall be deemed to be subordinate only to the Court to which appeals from the judgment of that Court ordinarily lie. In the present case there could be no doubt that under clause 15 of the Letters Patent appeals would ordinary lie from the judgments of a single Judge exercising Original Civil Jurisdiction to this Court, that is, the Court of Appeal on the Original Side. It is true that, generally speaking, the subordinate Court contemplated by section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, is a Court different from the Court to which the appeals would ordinarily lie. But, having regard to the words of the section, it seems to me clear that, for the purpose of section 195, the Court from whose order the present appeal is preferred is a Court from whose judgment an appeal would ordinarily lie to this Court and, therefore, the present appeal asking us to grant the sanction and to revoke the order refusing to grant the sanction is competent. It may be, though it has not been suggested, that sub-section (7) really provides for the three classes of cases mentioned in clauses (a), (b) and (c) of that sub-section. I do not think, however, that those specific provisions are restrictive of the general rule contained in that sub-section defining subordination for the purpose of section 195. It is not necessary for the purpose of this case to decide, whether, apart from section 195, an appeal would be competent under clause 15 of the Letters Patent. As at present advised, I doubt whether an order refusing to grant a sanction to prosecute under section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, is a judgment within the meaning of clause 15. I base my decision on the preliminary objection upon the terms of section 195, Criminal Procedure Code.

* * * *

I desire to add that we have treated the proceedings as having been taken under section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure: if the learned Judge considered the matter under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, it is clear that there would be no appeal. The Rule nisi obtained by the appellants in the Trial Court does not in terms refer to section 195. This aspect of the case was not referred to in the argument, and as both parties treated the case as falling under section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, we have dealt with it on that footing.

CRUMP, J.—As to the merits of this case I do not find it necessary to add anything to the judgment just delivered. But, so far as it concerns the question about our jurisdiction to hear this appeal, I should like to say this much. Clause (6) of section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure lays down a general rule as to appeals. In a case where a sanction has been granted by any authority, such sanction can be revoked or granted by any authority to which the authority giving or refusing it is subordinate. Clause (7) lays down a special rule as regards Courts, and the test of subordination for the purpose of that clause is whether an appeal ordinarily lies from the Court which granted the sanction to the Court which is asked to revoke it. Now, if that is the test, it is, I think, clear that, inasmuch as the Judge who heard this matter was sitting as a Court and inasmuch as the appeal ordinarily lies from his judgment by virtue of clause 15 of the Letters Patent to a Bench of two Judges sitting as a Court, therefore, we have here the jurisdiction conferred by clause (7) of section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code. That being so, it is open to us to consider whether the sanction which has been refused here should or should not be granted.

Whether, apart from the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure, an appeal lies under clause 15 of the Letters Patent from the order refusing sanction, is a question on which I express no opinion.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 144, 145—Proceedings under s. 144—District Magistrate, jurisdiction of, to direct substitution of proceedings under s. 145—Procedure.

A District Magistrate setting aside an order by a Subordinate Magistrate under section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code, has no jurisdiction to direct him to substitute therefor a proceeding under section 145 of the Code. As the Superior Court, the District Magistrate can only recommend to the Magistrate concerned to draw up a proceeding under section 145, if he is satisfied that the dispute is likely to cause a breach of the peace, and it is open to the Magistrate to look into the circumstances and to find out whether, in the circumstances of the case, a proceeding under section 145 of the Code should or should not be instituted.

Application for revision against the Order of the District Magistrate, Bhagalpur, dated the 5th October 1920.

Mr. G. C. Pal, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. A. B. Mukerjee and H. P. Sinha, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application against an order of the District Magistrate of Bhagalpur, dated the 5th October 1920, setting aside an order under section 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure passed by the Deputy Magistrate of the District, and directing that "section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, order may be substituted for it (section 144, Criminal Procedure Code) by the Sub-Divisional Officer."

Both the parties purport to have purchased the land in dispute from one Bandu Mandar, the 1st party, by a kabala dated the 5th January 1920, and the 2nd party by three kabalas with respect to different portions of the land, dated 12th November 1919, 2nd January 1920 and the 27th January 1920. The 1st party informed the Police as well as complained to the Magistrate of an interference by the 2nd party in the cultivation of the land in question. The matter was referred to the Police and the Sub-Inspector of Police reported in favour of the 1st party and prayed for orders under sections 107 and 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure on the ground that there was a serious danger to the breach of the peace.

On the 25th August 1920 the Magistrate issued a notice under section 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure against the 2nd party. However, on the 4th of September the Magistrate overruled the objection of the 2nd party and refused to revoke the order under section 144 of the Code passed on the 25th August. Aggrieved by this order, the 2nd party moved the District Magistrate.

The District Magistrate held that as the dispute was regarding land, the title and possession of either side being not clear from the record, it was a fit case for a proceeding under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. He accordingly set aside the order under section 144, and directed a proceeding under section 145 to be substituted for it by the Sub-Divisional Officer.

The view taken by the District Magistrate that this was a fit case for a proceeding under section 145 is perfectly sound. A mere statement of the case as detailed above is sufficient to indicate that the possession over the property is disputed, both parties claiming the land on the strength of recent sale-deeds from the original holder The order of the District Magistrate under section 145 is, therefore, unimpeachable and, as a matter of fact, Mr. Pal concedes that.

Mr. Pal, however, disputes the validity of the order made by the District Magistrate directing the Sub-Divisional Officer to substitute 145 proceeding for the 144 proceeding. He supports his contention by referring to the cases of Rash Behari Singh v. Emperor (1) and Kailash Chandra Pal v. Kunja Behari Poddar (2). Mr. Mukerjee, appearing on behalf of the Opposite Party (2nd Party), replies to the contention by citing the case of Sahdeb Singh v. Jumon Jolaha (3). I have considered these authorities. It appears to me plain that section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure requires the Magistrate instituting the proceeding to satisfy himself upon the material before him as to the existence of a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace. In this view the superior Court can only recommend to the Magistrate concerned to draw up the proceeding if he is satisfied that the dispute is likely to cause a breach of the peace. The order of the District Magistrate directing the Sub-Divisional Officer to substitute 145 proceeding for 144 is certainly wrong. The Sub-Divisional Officer, however, on the 29th October already drew up a proceeding under section 145. In that proceeding he distinctly refers to the Police report of the 24th August as disclosing materials for his being satisfied as to the existence of a dispute likely to disturb the public peace. The order under section 144 having been set aside, the case was sent back to him. It was certainly open to the Magistrate to look into the circumstances and to find out whether, in the circumstances of the case, a proceeding under section 145 of the Code should or should not be instituted. He has done so and there is material on the record to justify his action. As a matter of fact, the 1st party itself moved the Authorities, both the Police and the Magistrate, for an intervention in order to prevent a serious breach of the peace. It is not denied even at this stage that there is an existence of such a dispute and from the nature of the dispute there is certainly a danger to the imminent breash of the peace. Under such circumstances, I do not think that the proceeding now drawn up by the Deputy Magistrate should be set aside. It must proceed in assordance with law.

The result is that the application is rejected.

If the deposition has not been read over to the witness in the presence of the Presiding Judge, it does not prove itself under section 80 of the Evidence Act, but it may be proved in some other way. If a deposition has been interpreted by the Reader working in the same room as the Judge, even though the Judge and the Pleaders for the parties did not attend to the interpretation, there has been sufficient compliance for all purposes with the provisions of O. Revision against an order of the Sessions Judge, Akola, dated the 30th May 1922, in Criminal Appeal No. 102 of 1922.

Mr. A. V. Khare, for the Applicant.

Mr. G. P. Dick, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The facts found in this case are these. One Gani, a minor, by his next friend sued for possession of certain houses at Khamgaon in occupation of one Nura who was alleged to be plaintiff's lessee.

Nura claimed the houses as his own. The plaintiff produced an account-book said to contain entries of the payment of rent by Nura in that person's handwriting, including an entry for the sum of Rs. 22-8-0. The applicant, Mirabax, was cited as a witness for the plaintiff and examined on the 4th February 1921. Referring to this entry of Rs. 22-8-0 he stated on affirmation :—

"About 2 years ago there was a contract of lease between the plaintiff's mother and the defendant when the defendant agreed to pay Rs. 5 as rent per month. The defendant paid Rs. 22-8-0 to plaintiff's mother in my presence. The defendant made an entry in the account-book. I did not read that entry and so I do not know what he wrote there."

Later he stated : "The entry of Rs. 22-8-0 and the matter in front of them are not in my handwriting, I sometimes make the entries in this account-book. (After an examination of the book) I do not find any entry in my handwriting."

As a matter of fact the entry regarding the payment of Rs. 22-8-0 was in Mirabax's handwriting. Nura then applied for sanction to prosecute Mirabax for perjury and sanction was given. The applicant was tried and convicted. The charge in the case runs : "That you on or about the 4th day of February, 1921, at Khamgaon, stated in evidence that the entry (Exhibit P-4) was in the handwriting of complainant which statement you knew to be false." The conviction under section 193 has been affirmed, the sentence being reduced.

In this Court it is contended that accused was confused when giving his evidence and did not understand the question put him. This was the defence put forward at the trial where accused stated that the entry was in his own handwriting. There is no force in the contention urged, the remainder of the accused's statement shows that he knew what he was saying when he deposed that the entry of Rs. 22 8-0 was in Nura's handwriting. The statement forming the basis for the prosecution is admittedly false, and was false to the applicant's knowledge. It is pressed that the charge in the case is defective, not giving the accused sufficient notice of the case he had to meet, but, in my opinion, it is sufficiently clear. Accused could not have been misled in any way and the failure to enter in the charge the actual words used in the deposition is at most an irregularity cured by section 537 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Much of the argument in this Court has been on the question whether the deposition on which the conviction rests was interpreted to the accused after he had made it. It is contended that, unless it is established that it was read over and interpreted to the accused shortly after it was recorded so as to give him the opportunity of correcting it, the conviction cannot stand. It has been held that where the deposition of a witness is not read over and interpreted to him before it is signed by him he cannot be prosecuted for perjury on such deposition under section 193 of the Indian Penal Code, the omission to interpret and read over the deposition to the witness being not a mere irregularity but renders the record inadmissible in proof of the deposition under section 91 of the Evidence Act. In Nalluri Chenchiah, In re (1), where the deposition was read over by the Court Clerk in a place where neither the Judge or Vakil were present, the requirements of the law were held not complied with: Kamatchinathan Chetty v. Emperor (2). This case being followed in Mohendra Nath Misser v. Emperor (3).

On the other hand, it has been held that an accused person may be convicted of the offence of having given false evidence before a Civil Court, notwithstanding that the Court has made no note in writing to the effect that the evidence has been read out to the deponent, for, in the absence of evidence that the deposition was not read out, the Magistrate ought to assume that the Judge of the Civil Court complied with the provisions of O. XVIII, r. 5 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In Emperor v. Jagat Ram (4) and in Kahn Singh v. Empress (5) it was decided that the statement as a witness made by an accused being tried for perjury is a fact in issue and may be proved by oral evidence whether the deposition was read over to the witness or not. I am aware of the decision in Imam Din v. Niamat Ullah (6) that where the statement has not been read out, secondary evidence cannot be admitted in the trial to prove the making of the statement, but it seems to me, following Elahi Baksha Kazi v. Emperor (7), that the provisions of O. XVIII, rr 5 and 6 of the Civil Procedure Code, are directory, and non-compliance with them does not render the deposition inadmissible at a subsequent trial of the deponent for perjury. If the deposition has not been read over to the witness in the presence of the Presiding Judge, it does not prove itself under section 80 of the Evidence Act, but it may be proved in some other way. The Judge who recorded it can prove it or the accused can admit it, section 91 of the Evidence Act merely excludes the oral contents of a deposition but does not make it inadmissible in evidence. In the present case the statement was recorded in English and signed by the Judge and he testifies to it having been interpreted by his clerk to the applicant. The clerk being in the same room but at some distance: the Judge was at the time working. The Reader to the Munsif corroborates this testimony. The object of interpreting his deposition to a witness is to give him the opportunity of making corrections he deems necessary therein, and the irregularity in this case, if there is one, consists in the Judge and Pleaders not attending to the interpretation, but this procedure which is common in subordinate Courts seems to me a sufficient compliance for all purposes with the provisions of O. XVIII, r. 5, of the Civil Procedure Code. A deposition so interpreted proves itself under the provisions of section 80 of the Evidence Act. It is not as if the applicant denies the accuracy of the recorded deposition. He admits it and admits it is wrong. The defence is that it was made by mistake. RAJAMANIKKAM PILLAY—COMPLAINANT RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 522—Criminal force essential to confer jurisdiction—Appellate Court, finding of, that force not used—Possession, order for, reversal of.

The use of criminal force is an essential ingredient to give Criminal Courts jurisdiction to act under section 522 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Where, therefore, an Appellate Court reverses a conviction on the ground that no force was used, it ought also to reverse the order awarding possession, and to restore the parties to their original positions

Mr. V. Krishnamachariar, for the Petitioner.

Mr. J. C. Adam (Public Prosecutor), for the Crown.

Dr. S. Swaminathan, for the Complainant.

ORDER.—The Appellate Court reversed the conviction and has found that no criminal force was used. It ought to have reversed the order directing possession to be given, as the essential ingredient, namely, the use of criminal force, is wanting to give Criminal Courts jurisdiction to act under section 522. I need only refer to Batakala Pottiavadu, In re (1). If possession has been given, it is the duty of the Court to restore the parties to the position in which they were before possession was wrongly given. Vide Biswesswar Singh v. Bhola Nath Pathak (2).

The petitioner will be restored to possession.

GIRISH CHANDRA CHOUDHURY—COMPLAINANT—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Local inspection—Magistrate, power of, to view the locus in quo for understanding evidence taken.

It is legitimate for a Magistrate trying a case to make a local inspection at the request of the parties and in the presence of their Pleaders for the purpose of enabling him to understand the evidence which had been taken in the case. [p. 39, col. 2; p. 40, col. 1.]

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Benode Lal Mookerjee (with him Babu Purna Chandra Chandra), for the Petitioner.—I attack the judgment of the learned District Magistrate on the ground that he erred in law in not trying the case de novo and so he failed to exercise the jurisdiction vested in him by law. The learned Sub Deputy Magistrate had gone through the case to a certain extent inasmuch as several witnesses were examined and cross examined before him. When the case was transferred to Mr. Peters there should have been a fresh trial from start to finish. Mr. P. Sen clearly says, "He prays for a de novo trial," I submit that is sufficient for the purpose. The accused was not required to apply to Mr. Peters again. But, however, an application was, as a matter of fact, made. The non-compliance by the learned Magistrate with my prayer for a fresh trial has vitiated the entire proceedings.

Further, the learned Magistrate inspected the locality of occurrence and I submit that his judgment must have been influenced by the impression he received at the time of the local inspection.

Refers to Sobh Nath Singh v. Emperor (1), Habbon Shaikh v. Emperor (2), and section 350, Criminal Procedure Code.

Babu Debendra Narain Bhattcharya, for the Opposite Party, was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—This Rule called upon the District Magistrate to show cause why the conviction and sentence of the petitioner should not be set aside on the first and fifth grounds in the petition.

The first ground was that the learned Deputy Magistrate erred in not trying the case de novo and thereby failed to exercise a jurisdiction vested in him by law.

The Magistrate who tried the case was Mr. A. P. Peters. The case had, in the first instance, been before Mr. S. C. Das Gupta, a Sub-Deputy Magistrate, and on the 1st April 1921 the complainant and four prosecution witnesses were examined. The case was then adjourned to 12th April 1921, for recording the accused's statement. On the 14th April 1921, Mr. S. C. Das Gupta recorded the statement of the accused, charge was framed and three prosecution witnesses were cross examined and the case was adjourned to the 3rd May 1921. Then, apparently, there were several adjournments, and on the 25th of June 1921 the Sub-Divisional Officer, Mr. P. Sen, made the following order:—"To my file, as Babu S. C. Das Gupta has been transferred. The accused prays for a de novo trial. Summon all the prosecution witnesses and defence witnesses."

Then, on the 22nd July 1921, Mr. P. Sen, transferred the case to Mr. A. P. Peters, a Deputy Magistrate, and on the 2nd September 1921, the complainant and the prosecution witness No. 4 were cross-examined.

Now, the first ground, as I have already stated, alleges that the Magistrate who tried the case, ought to have tried the case de novo. I am not satisfied that any application was made to Mr. Peters to have the witnesses, who had already been examined, other than the complainant and P. W. No. 4, re called into the witness box to be examined again and cross-examined. On the 2nd September 1921, the complainant and one of the prosecution witnesses were, in fact, cross-examined; and, to my mind, it is clear from the petition that all the witnesses for the prosecution and defence were in Court, and I am satisfied that if the learned gentleman appearing for the defence had asked the learned Magistrate that any one of the witnesses, who had already been examined, should be put into the witness box again for the purpose of further examination and cross examination, such a course would have been adopted. There is a general allegation in the petition to this effect, that the petitioner's prayer for a de novo trial was not acceded to by the learned Magistrate. A bare statement of that kind makes little impression on my mind. It is a general allegation without any date or without any specific allegation as to the date when and the person to whom the application was made or what the order was in respect of it and, as I have already said, it carries little weight. The result is that, with regard to the first ground, I am not satisfied that the Magistrate refused to allow the examination or cross examination of any of the witnesses, who had been examined on the previous occasion. So that, in my judgment, there is no substance in the first ground.

The fifth ground was, that the learned Magistrate's judgment must have been influenced by the impressions he received at the time of the local inspection and, as such, the judgment ought to be arrested. After the evidence in the case had been finished the learned Magistrate viewed the locus in quo at the request of both parties and, as I understand, in the presence of the Pleaders who were representing the respective parties. Having read the judgment, I am satisfied that the Magistrate made and used this inspection solely for the purpose of enabling him to understand the evidence which had already been given and which was legitimate for him to do. Consequently, in my judgment, there is no foundation for the Rule in respect of the fifth ground in the petition.

For these reasons, in my judgment, the Rule should be discharged.

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 426—Mischief—Removing fruit from trees—Essential to be established—Bona fide dispute between contending parties—Magistrate, jurisdiction of, to take cognizance.

In order to invest a Magistrate with jurisdiction to summon a person charged with having committed the offence of mischief under section 426 of the Penal Code by removing the fruits of certain trees, it is essential for the complainant to make out a prima facie case in his petition of complaint or, in his statement on oath, of any deterioration caused by the accused in the value or utility of the fruit, and unless such deterioration is made out there can be no conviction for the offence of mischief. [p. 40, col. 2.]

A Magistrate has no jurisdiction to take cognizance of a case of mischief where there is a bona fide dispute between the contending parties with regard to the right in, and possession of, the property, the subject-matter of the charge. [p. 41, col. 1.]

Application against an order passed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Araria.

Messrs. P. C. Manuk and Rai T. N. Sahay, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner in this case was convicted by the Sub-Deputy Magistrate of Araria for an offence under section 426, Indian Penal Code. The charge is in respect of 100 jack fruits said to have been removed by the accused from the trees standing on plot No. 1219. The petitioner was sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 25. He appealed to the District Magistrate of Purnea, who, by his order of the 18th December 1920, dismissed the appeal. The petitioner has, therefore, come to this Court in revision.

It appears to me that the conviction of the petitioner under section 426, Indian Penal Code, cannot stand. Neither in the complaint petition, nor in the statement on oath recorded on the back of it has any offence under section 426 been disclosed. It is not stated that the fruits in question were plucked when they were not fit for plucking. The case, if any, upon the complaint petition and on the oath was that of removal of the fruits from the trees and, therefore, the offence was one under section 379, and not under section 426, Indian Penal Code. In order to give jurisdiction to the Magistrate to summon the accused under section 426, Indian Penal Code, for mischief, it was essential for complainant to make out a prima facie case in his petition or in his statement on oath of any deterioration having been caused by the accused in the value or utility of the fruits, and unless such a deterioration was made out, there was no offence disclosed under section 426 for causing mischief. Again, it was apparent on the statement on oath of the accused, which alone was the foundation for the cognizance to be taken by the Magistrate, that the accused was raising a bona fide claim of right to the fruits in question by reason of the purchase of the holding upon which the trees stood at a Civil Court auction sale. The Trial Court, as well as the lower Appellate Court, accepted the delivery of possession given by the Civil Court in favour of the landlord through whom the accused claimed. That delivery had taken place in or about the year 1910. The accused, holding under a registered patta granted by the landlord to the auction-purchaser of the holding, had every right to believe that the fruit trees belonged to the landlord and consequently to him by virtue of the aforesaid settlement. The Survey Record of Rights so strongly relied upon by the Magistrate far from helping the prosecution supports the case of the defence. Assuming that the complainant was an under-tenant, the land on which the trees are said to be standing was admittedly sub-let to Kulu, one of the accused who was not summoned but was examined as a defence witness No. 6. The complainant relies upon a reservation with respect to the trees. No documentary evidence of a settlement excluding the trees has been produced. The summary of the evidence set forth in the judgment of the Magistrate clearly shows that the case of the complainant as regards having reserved to himself the trees, depends entirely upon the oral evidence. If that is so, apart from the accused disputing the truth of the alleged sub-lease, there was nothing to apprise the accused of the existence of a settlement in favour of Kulu excluding the trees in question. They were, therefore, entitled to believe that the trees also were settled with Kulu, and that they were not in the possession directly of Sunderdeo, the complainant. A mere reading of the judgment of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, who has at more than one place dealt with the disputed rights in the case, makes it clear that there was at least a bona fide dispute with regard to the right in and possession of the contending parties, which ousted the jurisdiction of the Magistrate altogether from taking cognizance of the case.

It is needless to pursue the matter further. It will be sufficient to refer to the two cases decided by this Court, namely, Talebar Chowdhry v. Emperor (1) and Bhim Bahadur Singh v. Emperor (2). The judgments in those cases delivered by me would have been re-written for this case by simply changing the names of the parties and substituting "jack fruits" for "crops." If the Magistrate had those cases before him, perhaps he would have come to the conclusion that neither the facts in this case disclosed the offence under section 426, nor had he any jurisdiction to try the case inasmuch as the accused were entitled to raise a bona fide dispute of title. I would, therefore, recommend those cases to the Magistrate for him to read as a supplement to the present judgment and for his guidance in cases of this nature.

The application is allowed. The conviction of, and the sentence passed on, the petitioner by the Magistrate are set aside. The fine, if already realised, will be refunded.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 421—Appeal through Jail Authorities summarily rejected—Appeal subsequently through Counsel, whether entertainable.

An order dismissing an appeal under section 421 of the Criminal Procedure Code is a final order, therefore, where a petition of appeal by a prisoner in Jail is received through the Superintendent of the Jail and is summarily rejected, he is not entitled to be heard upon a petition of appeal presented subsequently on his behalf by Counsel. Criminal appeal from an order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Aligarh.

Mr. Sital Prasad Ghose, for the Appellant.

Mr. Shankar Saran (Government Pleader) for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—On the 4th of April 1922 the Court of the Additional Sessions Judge at Aligarh, sitting at Etah, convicted two men, Khiali and Hulasi, on a charge under section 395 of the Indian Penal Code, and passed upon them substantial sentences of imprisonment and fines. On the 12th of April 1922 both Khiali and Hulasi caused to be prepared in the Jail, in which they were confined, petitions of appeal against their convictions and the sentences passed upon them. These petitions of appeal reached this Court on the 15th of April 1922. Having been examined and reported upon by a ministerial officer of this Court, they were laid before a Judge of this Court on the 20th of April 1922. On the day following, the Judge in question, dealing with the petitions of appeal under section 421 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, dismissed both the appeals of Khiali and Hulasi summarily.

On the 1st of May 1922 Counsel, having been instructed on behalf of Khiali and Hulasi, brought for presentation to this Court a petition of appeal, which was submitted to a ministerial officer of this Court for report. In the report thereupon prepared, attention was drawn to the fact that petitions of appeal from Khiali and Hulasi had been received, through the Superintendent of the Jail, and summarily dismissed by a Judge of this Court Counsel for Khiali and Hulasi seems to have taken a little time to consider his position, but finally presented a fresh petition of appeal on the 8th of May 1922. The Judge, before whom this petition was presented, passed an order dated the 10th of May 1922, in which he referred to a previous decision of this Court and directed that the petition of appeal should be laid before a Bench of two Judges for consideration.

We are asked expressly to determine the question whether the second petition of appeal, on behalf of Khiali and Hulasi, is entertainable in view of the order of the 21st of April 1922 summarily dismissing the petitions of appeal received through the Superintendent of the Jail.

The earlier case of this Court is that of Emperor v. Bhawani Dihal (1). The facts of that case are clearly distinguishable from those now before us. A petition of appeal had been received by a Sessions Judge, through the Superintendent of the Jail in which the appellant was confined, and while that petition was still pending and undisposed of in the Sessions Court, the same appellant presented a second petition of appeal through Counsel. Apparently, overlooking this fact, the Sessions Judge, first of all, summarily dismissed the petition which had been received through the Superintendent of the Jail and then proceeded further, on the strength of this order, to dismiss the petition filed through Counsel without having even offered the Counsel concerned an opportunity of arguing the same. A learned Judge of this Court held that this procedure was illegal and, setting aside the order of dismissal, directed the Sessions Judge to re-admit the appeal of that particular convict and to dispose of it according to law after hearing Counsel. The point of that decision obviously is that, when once a petition of appeal has been filed through Counsel under section 419 of the Code of Criminal Procedure it is improper to dismiss the appeal summarily at all, and an order summarily dismissing an appeal while there is a petition presented through Counsel pending and undisposed of on the file of the Court, would be, nonetheless, an improper order, because it happened that another petition of appeal in the same matter from the same convict had been received through the Superintendent of the Jail. In the case now before us, the order summarily dismissing the petitions of appeal presented on behalf of Khiali and Hulasi through the Superintendent of the Jail in which they were confined was a valid and proper order, there being on the file of this Court on that day no petition of appeal other than the two petitions received through the Superintendent of the Jail. The right of appeal allowed to Khiali and Hulasi against their conviction by the Sessions Judge and sentences passed upon them has, therefore, been fully exercised according to law and their appeals have been disposed of by a proper and valid order of this Court before the petition of appeal with which we are now dealing was ever presented to the Court at all? The objection is not to the presentation of more than one petition of appeal by or on behalf of the same convict, but to the obtaining from this Court of more than one judicial determination upon the question raised by the appeal. In our opinion this application is not entertainable.

We have been referred in argument to one case, which has not found its way into any of the authorised reports, but which certainly is an authority in favour of these appellants. The case is that of Hulai v. Emperor (2). In that case Mr Justice Lindsay, then Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, had before him the order of a Sessions Judge dismissing an appeal which had been presented through Counsel, on the ground that a previous petition of appeal in the same matter received through the Superintendent of the Jail had been summarily dismissed. Mr. Lindsay set aside the order of the Sessions Judge for reasons stated in the report. He, there, refers to the case of Emperor v. Bhawani Dihal (1), but does not note the distinction in the facts to which we have referred. As regards the reference which Mr. Lindsay makes regarding his recollection of a previous decision of the same Court, we believe the facts to be that the learned Judge of the Oudh Court, who had previously summarily dismissed an appeal, found it possible under the circumstances to review and set aside his own order, before the appeal presented through Counsel was heard or permitted to be argued. There is no such question arising in the present case and we need not consider under what circumstances, if any, it would be possible for a Judge of this Court to re-consider a final judgment of his own delivered in a criminal matter. There is one case in the authorised Law Reports which is entirely in accordance with the view which we ourselves are disposed to take, and that is the case of Queen-Empress v. Bhimappa (3). It was, there, distinctly held that an order dismissing an appeal, under section 421 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, was a final order, not open to review by the Court which passed the same, and that a Sessions Judge had acted without jurisdiction when, having re-considered a question of limitation, he proceeded to hear and decide in a different sense an appeal which he had previously dismissed. In our opinion the appellants, Khiali and Hulasi, are not entitled to be heard upon a petition of appeal presented after their original petitions of appeal, received through the Superintendent of the Jail, had been finally disposed of according to law by the order of a Judge of this Court. We reject this petition of appeal accordingly.

(1) A. W. N. (1906) 303; 3 A. L. J. 693; 4 Cr. L. J. 373.

(2) 36 Ind. Cas. 133; 3 O. L. J. 328; 17 Cr. L. J. 453.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 110—Security for good behaviour—Powers when to be used.

The powers conferred by section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, ought to be exercised very sparingly and in those cases only where the evidence is very clear and precise. Evidence of general repute, or that the person proceeded against has a bad character, without any specific instances, is not sufficient to justify an order against him under section 110, nor would the fact that on three occasions the last one being sixteen years ago—he has been required to furnish security. [p. 44, col. 1.]

Petition, under section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of an order of the District Magistrate, Gujranwala, dated the 17th July 1919, affirming that of the Magistrate, First Class, Sheikhupura, District Gujranwala, dated the 17th May 1919.

Mr. Ganpat Rai, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—These are four petitions of revision filed by Jagat Ram, the father, and his three sons Wadhwa Singh, Udham Singh and Jagir Singh. An order was made against all these four to execute bonds for being of good behaviour for the sum of Rs. 500 and to find sureties for the same amount. The evidence given against them is partly of general repute and partly relating to certain instances of suspicion arising against their conduct. As against Jagat Singh there was also this evidence that on three previous occasions in 1888, 1894 and 1902 he was called upon to give security under section 110. No action appears to have been taken against him since the year 1902 under section 110. The evidence for the prosecution, if believed, goes to establish the following facts. That at most on three occasions there had been some suspicion against the accused persons.

The rest of the evidence is only as to the general repute. It is stated by the witnesses that the petitioners are of bad character and that they are habitual thieves. It is not shown by the evidence that they were ever found in possession of a stolen property or apprehended while committing theft. The evidence against the petitioners consists of witnesses who may legitimately be described as official witnesses. The powers under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code are to be exercised very sparingly and in only those cases where the evidence is very clear and precise. It was never intended by the Legislature to provide a means of punishment by enacting section 110.

As regards the sons of Jagat Singh, beyond mere suspicion nothing substantial has been established. As regards Jagat Singh there is certainly this evidence that on three previous occasions action was taken against him under section 110, but ever since 1902 nothing inculpating has been found against him. Sixteen years is a sufficient time for reform and it does appear that Jagat Singh has reformed himself. Twenty-one witnesses were called on behalf of the accused persons to show that the petitioners bear good character. On behalf of the petitioners it has been contended that the District Magistrate has not taken into consideration the evidence for the defence. I cannot say that the Magistrate has not considered the evidence for the defence, but I must say that his judgment is not as satisfactory as it ought to have been. Having regard to all the circumstances of the case I do not think that an order for security should have been made under section 110 in this case. I, therefore, set it aside.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss 145, 148—Costs in proceedings under s. 145—Jurisdiction.

In awarding costs in proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, a Magistrate is restricted to the amount awarded as Pleader's fees (if any) and costs for witnesses; any order about costs passed arbitrarily is without jurisdiction and must be set aside.

Jhaman Mahton v. Thakuri Mahton, 57 Ind. Cas. 449; 1 P. L. T. 369; 21 Cr. L. J. 625; 3 U. P. L. R. (Pat.) 192 and Udoy Narain Chakravarty v. Satish Chandra Chattaraj, 14 C. W. N. lxxiii (73) notes, referred to.

Mr. G. C. Pal, for the Petitioners.

Messrs. B. N. Mitter and Shiveshwar Dayal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The only question which arises in this application is in regard to an order for payment of costs. The Magistrate in finding possession in favour of the opposite party in proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, directed the petitioners to pay costs of Rs. 100. It is urged that this order is without jurisdiction inasmuch as under section 148, Criminal Procedure Code, the Magistrate could only include in the costs awarded the Pleader's fees and the costs for witnesses. The Magistrate has not mentioned how the sum of Rs. 100 was computed or that he has made any inquiry as to what the actual Pleader's fees and the costs of the witnesses were.

It has been decided by a Judge of this Court (Sultan Ahmad, J.) in Jhaman Mahton v. Thakuri Mahton (1) that an order such as the present one is without jurisdiction and must be set aside, and he based his finding on the case of Udoy Narain Chakravarty v. Satish Chandra Chattaraj (2). There is an unreported case of this Court (Girdhari Singh v. Bhalu Gope, Criminal Revision No. 300 of 1922) in which Sir John Bucknill, J., has set aside an order similar to the present one and directed that the case should be remanded to the Magistrate for determination of the costs according to law. It is quite clear, therefore, that the Magistrate could not in a case like this arbitrarily decide what the amount of costs to be paid should be. He must confine the costs to Pleader's fees and the costs of witnesses.

The order, therefore, directing Rs. 100 to be paid as costs must be set aside and the case must be remanded to the Magistrate for an assessment of costs according to law.

JUDGMENT.—The main ground on which this application is based is the contention that the final decision of the Civil Court under section 11 of the Oaths Act, 1873, that the money claimed was due to the plaintiff, included an equally conclusive finding that the interpolation of the word ham in the document was not a forgery. This is certainly incorrect, but, whatever finding was conclusive in that suit, it is so only "as against the person who offered to be bound" by the special oath, that is to say, Shyamlal. It is not binding against the rest of the community who are as much entitled as ever to have Ganga Prasad convicted and punished if he has committed forgery. It is further contended that, at least, that matter makes Shyamlal not a proper person to seek for sanction to prosecute and to conduct the prosecution. If it were so, the question would not be whether the prosecution should be stopped or not but whether it should be conducted by Shyamlal or by official agency. It is the duty of every Court to take action of its own motion in every apparent case of forgery or perjury which is committed before it or is brought to its notice, and to institute proceedings in all such cases if there is a reasonable probability of the prosecution resulting in a conviction, and if the Courts did their duty in this respect there would be no room left for applications from private persons for sanction to prosecute, or, at least, none for any applications which could possibly succeed.

2. In this case, therefore, if sanction to prosecute ought not to be granted to Shyamlal, the Court, having held that it is a proper case for prosecution, would be bound to take action under section 476 of the Criminal Prosedure Code. I am strongly inclined to accept the view that sanction should not have been granted to Shyamlal or any private person, but that the Court should have taken action itself under section 476, even after the making of Shyamlal's application and though it had neglected to do so before. This opinion is based not on any particular circumstances in this case but on the general principles that the Court is bound to take action itself in every proper case and neglects its duty if it leaves it to be performed by private persons who may be interested, and that prosecution by a private person opens the door to blackmail and also to the acquittal of a guilty person or the conviction of an innocent one through the production of false evidence against him. These principles are, I understand, likely to be accepted in the amendment of the Criminal Procedure Code by the Legislature in the near future. I do not, however, think it necessary at this stage to consider by what agency Ganga Prasad should be prosecuted. If he is to be prosecuted at all, it must be by Shyamlal to whom sanction to do so has already been accorded. It is too late to substitute official agency for his by means of a complaint made under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

3. In Shioshankarpuri v. Emperor (1), and Abdul Husen v. Emperor (2). I have endeavoured to make it clear that the matter of reasonable probability of the prosecution ending in a conviction is practically the only matter which a Court has to consider in proceedings under section 195 or section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code. In this case I need say no more at this stage than that such a reasonable probablity appears to me to exist. The application for cancellation of the sanction granted by the Court of the District Judge is, therefore, rejected.

Application rejected.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 195—Sanction to prosecute—Application by person not party to suit.

No Court should entertain an application for sanction to prosecute made under section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure by a person, not a public servant, who was not a party to the suit out of which the proceedings have arisen.

Petition, under sections 349/195, Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of an order of the District Judge, Jhelum, dated the 13th June 1912, affirming that of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Jhelum, dated the 28th September 1920.

Mr. Nanak Chand, for the Petitioner.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—There was litigation between Musammat Bhagwanti and Musammat Sham Piari against Gurdit Singh and others concerning the estate of one Daulat Singh, and after it had concluded, Prabh Dial, Mukhtar of the plaintiffs, applied for permission under section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, to prosecute the defendants under section 193, Indian Penal Code, etc. The permission was refused by the Senior Subordinate Judge who had tried the case. Prabh Dial presented an appeal to the District Judge of Jhelum in which he was not shown as a Mukhtar and filed no power-of-attorney. The appeal was dismissed and he now applies for revision urging that it is established by Ram Prosad Malla v. Raghubar Malla (1) and Queen-Empress v. Subbaraya Pillai (2) that it is not necessary for a person making such an application to have been a party to the previous litigation. Neither of these rulings goes so far as to lay down this general proposition. All that they say, modifying if at all Chandra Kant Ghose, In the matter of (3), is (to quote from the Calcutta ruling) that it would be an astounding proposition that sanction to prosecute for an offence against public justice should be withheld from a public officer as such. Chandra Kant Ghose, In the matter of (3) states that it is quite clear that no Court should tolerate any application to prosecute made by persons who are not parties to the case. Although, therefore, it has been established that a public servant as such is not to be treated as a third party, it has nowhere been laid down that anybody can make such an application. Apart from this, however, the so called appeal was, in my opinion, rightly dismissed by the District Judge, inasmuch as there was no appeal before him. Counsel for the petitioner concedes that only a party can appeal and Prabh Dial in his private capacity was not a party to the previous proceedings. I, therefore, find that there is no reason for interference with the order of the District Judge, which is perfectly correct.

I dismiss the application for revision.

Cattle Trespass Act (I of 1871)—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss 23, 379—Seizure and detention of cattle doing damage, whether offence—"Wrongful loss," meaning of.

Where an animal is found doing damage to a person's field, it is no offence for that person to seize and detain it for less than twenty-four hours, instead of taking it to a cattle-pound and to restore it to the owner on receipt of compensation which does not exceed the amount the owner would have to pay if the animal had been impounded, as such detention, being authorised by the Cattle Trespass Act, would not amount to causing "wrongful loss" to the owner, within the meaning of section 23 of the Penal Code. [p. 48. cols. 1 & 2.]

Criminal revision against an order of the Sessions Judge, Nimar, dated the 22nd September 1921, in Criminal Appeal No. 49 of 1921.

Mr. J. C. Ghosh, for the Applicant.

Mr. G. P. Dick, for the Crown.

ORDER.—It is necessary for the disposal of these revision applications to see exactly what are the facts that are proved and to distinguish between them and the facts that were alleged by the prosecution but not proved.

It was alleged by the prosecution that an unauthorised cattle-pound had been opened in the village Gandhwa by non-co-operators in opposition to the Government pound and that this cattle pound was kept by Chunnilal. In pursuance of this, Ramratan seized a cow belonging to Amarchandsa and took it to the unauthorised pound kept by Chunnilal. Amarchandsa recovered his cow from the unauthorised pound by paying 4 annas to Ramratan. Ramratan has been convicted of theft and Chunnilal of abetment of theft.

The learned Standing Counsel concedes that there is no case at all against Chunnilal. There is no evidence that Chunnilal had opened an unauthorised pound. There is no evidence that Chunnilal was aware that Ramratan had put Amarchandsa's cow in his bada which is not immediately adjoining Chunilal's house. There is no relevant evidence at all that an unauthorised pound had been opened by any one or that Chunnilal had any connection with the seizing of the cow by Ramratan or with the impounding of it in his bada. There being no evidence at all against Chunilal he must be acquitted.

The facts established by the evidence are simple. Ramratan found Amarchandsa's cow trespassing in his field. Amarchandsa himself says he went to inspect the alleged damage to Ramratan's field and found some tilli and tuar damaged. In face of this the remark of the Sessions Judge that he is unable to say that the cow caused any damage as the crops must have hardly come up is unjustified. Ramratan seized the cow in the evening and put it in the bada. P. W. No. 2, one of the malguzars, says that he asked Ramratan why this cow and others were put in the bada, and Ramratan replied that he would either warn the owners of the cattle or impound them the next morning. Next morning Amarchandsa saw his cow in the bada and asked Ramratan to release it. Ramratan agreed to do so if Amarchandsa paid him 4 annas as compensation for the damage caused. Amarchandsa paid the 4 annas and Ramratan gave up the cow. These are the only facts proved.

The first Court held that Ramratan seized the cow dishonestly, apparently because wrongful loss was caused to Amarchandsa. The Sessions Judge took a different view. He said: "It appears to me that where an unauthorised pound is opened to deprive the authorised pound of its revenue and not merely to recover damages for damage done to crops, wrongful loss is caused and the impounding of cattle in such a pound with such intention amounts to theft." In other words, the Sessions Judge held that the wrongful loss was suffered by the District Council but overlooked the fact that there was no evidence of an unauthorised pound being opened. It may be mentioned that 4 annas is the pound fee charged by the authorised pound, so that Amarchandsa did not have to pay anything more than if his cow had been impounded in the District Council pound.

We have next to see whether any offence has been committed by Ramratan on the above facts. The case of Ratoo Sheik v. King-Emperor (1) has not been fully reported, but the learned Judges held that, under the circumstances of the case, the accused had committed no criminal offence. The facts were that the accused and others set up a private pound and appointed a person who looked after their fields and seized cattle which damaged their crops and then kept them confined in the pound until they were released by their owners on payment of fines. Prima facie it does not appear that it is an offence lawfully to seize a cow doing damage in a field, to detain the cow less than 24 hours and, instead of taking the cow to the pound, to give it back to the owner on receipt of compensation not more than what the owner of the cow would have had to pay if it had been impounded. Section 22, Cattle Trespass Act, fully provides the remedy open to a person whose cattle have been illegally seized or illegally detained. Here the cow was legally seized and was not illegally detained for more than 24 hours. In Aradhun Mundul v. Myan Khan (2) the accused illegally seized cattle and instead of taking them to the nearest pound drove them to a distant pound. It was held that the accused could not be charged with theft as it was not intended to cause wrongful loss to the owners of the cattle. With reference to the term of section 23, Indian Penal Code, the cow was not kept wrongfully out of the possession of its owner since Ramratan was legally entitled under the Cattle Trespass Act to keep it in his own custody for 24 hours before lodging it in the pound. There can be no doubt that there would have been no prosecution in this case except for the alleged institution of an unlawful pound, and, as no such institution has been proved, we must deal with the facts as they are. Ramratan did nothing illegal and has committed no offence.

I set aside the convictions of both the applicants and acquit them. The fines, if paid, must be refunded.

Buddhist Law, Burmese—Inheritance—Succession—"Orasa," meaning and position of—Orasa son or daughter, rights of—Children of orasas, rights of.

Per Robinson, C. J., Maung Kin, J., Heald, J., and Duckworth, J.—(1) In a Burman Buddhist family consisting of both sons and daughters, any child can acquire the full status of Orasa prior to the death of either parent ; [p. 64, col. 1.]

(2) in such a family where the eldest child is a daughter no son can become Orasa ; [p. 64, col. 1.]

(3) in such a family the question which child is the Orasa can be decided before the death of either parent; [p. 64, col. 1.]

(4) in such a family there cannot be two Orasas; [p. 64, col. 1.]

(5) sons are not to be preferred to daughters as Orasa, unless the son is the eldest born; [p. 64, col. 1.]

(6) in such a family where the eldest born child is the son he is the Orasa, and if he predeceases his parents, his children have a right to preferential treatment in the division of the estate. If the eldest son dies before he becomes competent to take his father's place, a younger son, being fully qualified, may become Orasa, and, if that son predeceases his parents, his children have a right to the same preferential treatment. If the eldest born child is a daughter and she predeceases her parents, after becoming competent to take her mother's place, her children have a right to the same preferential treatment. But it is doubtful whether another daughter, younger than a son, can ever take the place of the eldest born daughter, who is not competent, or dies before becoming able to take her mother's place; [p. 64, col. 1.]

(7) the eldest child, being a daughter, can claim on the death of her mother a quarter share as Orasa, and if she then dies before her father without having got the share her children have a right to preferential treatment. [p. 64, col. 1.]

Per Maung Kin, J—It is the eldest born legitimate son who is entitled to claim a quarter of the parental estate from his mother on the death of the father, provided he has helped the parents in the acquisition of property and takes the deceased father's place and continues the family. And this eldest born son, who is entitled to a quarter share, is called an Orasa [p 77, col. 2.]

The eldest born legitimate daughter has the right to claim a quarter share on the death of her mother whether she co-exists with sons or not, and the eldest born child is the Orasa, although, as regards the claim to a quarter share on the death of one of the parents, it would depend upon the circumstances of each particular case whether the claim can be made or not, that is to say, if the child is a son he can only make the claim from the mother, on the ground that he steps into his deceased father's place; similarly, if a daughter, she can only claim as one who takes the place of her mother. It is clear also that there cannot be two Orasas, a male and a female, in the same family, because an Orasa is either the eldest born or the one who supersedes the eldest born. [p. 62, col. 1.]

The eldest born child—male or female—is the child through whom his or her children may claim a preferential right in the estate of their grandparents. [p. 63, col. 1.]

Per Heald, J.—The word auratha is commonly used to mean the eldest child, whether son or daughter, and if the eldest child, being a son, is competent on the father's death to take the father's place in the family, or, being a daughter is competent on the mother's death to take the mother's place then he or she is auratha, and on the father's or mother's death is entitled to the father's or mother's personal property and to one-fourth of the rest of the estate, and if the eldest child, whether son or daughter, dies without having become entitled to that interest in the estate, his or her children are entitled to share equally in the estate with the younger brothers and sisters of the deceased. [p. 74, col. 2.]

(1) The eldest-born child who is competent to take the place of the father or mother acquires the status of auratha on becoming so competent and can acquire that status before the death of either parent. [p. 84, col. 1]

(2) If the eldest-born child is a daughter and reaches an age at which she is competent to take her mother's place, no son can become auratha either before or after his father's death. [p. 84, col. 1.]

(3) The status of auratha in no way depends on the death of either parent. The eldest-born competent child is auratha in any case. [p. 84, col. 1]

(4) There can never be two aurathas in a family. If a son or daughter dies after acquiring the status of auratha, there is no auratha in the family. [p. 84, col. 1.]

(5) Sons are not as such preferred to daughters as auratha. If the eldest-born child is a son and is competent he is auratha. If the eldest-born child is a daughter and is competent she is auratha. [p. 84, col. 1.]

(6) In a family where the eldest born child is a daughter and is competent, there can be no auratha son and there can be no son whose children have a right to preferential treatment in the division of the parents' estate. [p. 84, col. 1.]

(7) If the eldest-born child is a daughter and is competent she is auratha and as auratha can on her mother's death claim from her father a quarter share of the estate. If she dies before becoming entitled to that share, her children have a right to preferential treatment in the division of the estate. [p. 84, col. 1]

Per Duckworth, J.—"Auratha" (a very loosely used term), means nothing more than "eldest legitimate issue, male or female." The term has been much misused, since it does not necessarily follow that the child who is auratha whilst both parents are alive, will be the child, who can obtain a one-fourth share on the death of one parent. This depends on the sex of the parent who dies first. The auratha then is the eldest child, irrespective of sex, legally begotten, who is of age and competent. [p. 84, col. 2.]

If a son is not the first born child, he can never be auratha, unless the eldest child dies before reaching majority or competency, and then only when the eldest child is a male It is very doubtful whether another can become auratha in place of the deceased eldest daughter. There is some authority for a brother succeeding a brother, but not for the converse case,—and then only in relation to the one-fourth share [p 85, col. 1.]

Per Pratt, J.—(1) In a family consisting of both sons and daughters a child can attain the full status of Orasa prior to the death of its parents, in so far that, if he or she predeceases his parents, his or her children may be entitled to the preferential treatment prescribed in section 15, Book X of the Manugye. [p. 67, col. 1.]

(2) In such a family where the eldest child is a daughter no son can become Orasa until his father dies, subject to the proviso that the eldest daughter attained her majority before her death. [p 67, col. 1.]

(3) The question as to which is the Orasa can be decided, so far only as the right of representation is concerned [p. 67, col. 2.]

(4) In such a family there cannot be two Orasa children in the sense of children whose offspring would, in the event of their parents' death, be entitled to claim an equal share with their younger uncles and aunts [p. 67, col. 2.]

But it is conceivable that where the Orasa eldest child was a daughter and the eldest son attained his majority before his father's death, he would on his father's death be entitled to rank as Orasa for the purpose of claiming one-fourth of the estate from his mother. It is to be noted that Orasa is here used in two distinct senses. [p. 67, col. 2.]

(5) Sons are not always preferred to daughters as 'orasa'. [p 67, col. 2.]

(6) In such a family when the eldest child is a daughter there cannot be an Orasa son, who, predeceasing his parents, can transmit to his children a right to preferential treatment in the division of the estate, assuming that the eldest child attained majority and did not forfeit her status as Orasa. [p. 67, col. 2.]

(7) The eldest child, being a daughter, can transmit to her children a right to preferential treatment in the division of the estate, and there is authority for holding that on her mother predeceasing her father she can claim a quarter share as Orasa. [p. 67, col. 2.]

Reference made in first civil appeal against the judgment passed by the District Judge, Hanthawaddy.

FACTS appear from the following Order of Reference made by Robinson, C. J., and Mr. Justice Duckworth to a Full Bench under section 11 of the Lower Burma Courts Act:—

ROBINSON, C. J.—(May 2, 1921).—Plaintiffs are the children of Po Cho who was the eldest son of U Baw and Daw Hmo. Their eldest child was Ma Nyein Aung. Po Cho grew up and worked with his father managing the family property. He took a more prominent part in this filial duty than most sons probably do. He was of age and fully competent to succeed his father as head of the family and he satisfied all those conditions which lead to the special recognition of a child as the Orasa. In ordinary parlance he would, no doubt, be the child spoken of as the Orasa of the family. He died, however, some thirteen days before his father.

Ma Nyein Aung was the eldest child of the family and it is not denied that she was of age and competent in every way to take her mother's place. She survived both her parents.

Plaintiffs claim to be entitled to a one-fourth share in the estate by reason of the fact that their father was the Orasa child. If he was not, they would only be entitled to a one-sixteenth share.

So long as both parents were alive, it is agreed that Po Cho and Ma Nyein Aung were each presumptively the Orasa, and on behalf of the defendants it is argued that the question as to which of these two children would eventually be the Orasa depended on which of the two parents died first. Daw Hmo died first and on her death it is said Ma Nyein Aung became the Orasa and Po Cho lost all chances of gaining that status. His children would, however, not be entitled to more than one-sixteenth, as on Daw Hmo's death he lost even his presumptive status, and he would only have ranked as a younger child, even if he had survived his father.

On the other hand, it is urged that Po Cho having reached full age and satisfied all the conditions required for an Orasa, he actually held that status, and this long before Daw Hmo died; and once an Orasa, always an Orasa. There cannot be more than one Orasa in a family and once there was a fully qualified Orasa, that status did not devolve on any other child. It is urged that it was impossible to hold that the question who was the Orasa was a matter of chance, to be decided according as one or other of the parents predeceased the other. It was also urged that a son, if competent, always took precedence over an elder daughter.

The Dhammathats clearly recognize the possibility of a child who has reached full status of Orasa predeceasing his or her parents by making provision for preferential treatment of that child's children. Reference may be made to the Dhamma and Manugye in section 162 of the Digest. Both clearly refer to an Orasa son and the former applies a similar rule in the case of females. This provision the Manugye omits, and it may, therefore, be argued that the Dhamma was referring to a family having daughters only. The full status of Orasa can, however, apparently be achieved before the death of either parent. If that is so, it may considerably affect the other questions that arise in this case. Counsel for both sides urge that there cannot be two Orasas in one family, but they use the argument to suit their own cases. It may be that in such a family as this, the question as to whether Po Cho or Ma Nyein Aung was to be treated as the Orasa could not be definitely decided until one or other of the parents died. Or it may be that the true view is that in such a family, the son ousts the daughter from the position, so that no question as to Ma Nyein Aung could arise. It seems clear that once a son has achieved the status, the fact that he predeceases his parents or his father does not permit of a younger son succeeding to that position.

There are many and difficult questions arising in the case and the state of the decisions as to one or more of them is to leave these questions in considerable doubt. The Dhammathats are confused and contradictory and it appears almost impossible to reconcile them. It may be that those dealing with daughters as Orasas were intended to refer only to families in which there were daughters alone. The exact meaning to be assigned to the words "tha" and 'thami" must be considered and it will also be necessary to consider the exact meaning to be given to the word "Orasa" when the child predeceases and when he or she survives the parents.

I have, I think, written enough to indicate the questions that arise and the great difficulty there must be in coming to a decision. The matters involved are of the greatest importance to Burman Buddhists and some or all of them are constantly arising. It is, I therefore think, necessary to refer the following questions to a Full Bench:—

1. In a family consisting of both sons and daughters, can any child acquire the full status of Orasa prior to the death of either parent?

2. If so, in such a family where the eldest child is a daughter, can any son become Orasa until his father dies?

3. In such a family, can the question which child is the Orasa be decided before the death of either parent?

4. Can there be in such a family two Orasas?

5. Are sons always to be preferred to daughters as Orasa?

6. In such a family, can there be an Orasa son who, predeceasing his parents, can transmit to his children a right to preferential treatment in the division of the estate?

7. If so, can the eldest child, being a daughter, on her mother predeceasing her father, claim a quarter share as Orasa or transmit to her children a right to preferential treatment in the division of the estate?

DUCKWORTH, J.—(May 2, 1921).—For the purpose of this appeal the following facts will suffice:—

Daw Hmo predeceased her husband U Baw. U Baw died some years later viz, on the 28th December 1907. Their eldest son (not their eldest child) Maung Po Cho died on the 13th December 1907, or some twelve days prior to his father. He was about 40 when he died.

Their eldest child was a daughter, Ma Nyein Aung, who died after both her parents. The plaintiffs-respondents are the issue of Maung Po Cho, and the appellants-defendants are the younger son and daughter of Daw Hmo and U Baw.

The plaintiffs prayed for a quarter share in the estate as representing Maung Po Cho, who they claim was the "Orasa" son of U Baw and Daw Hmo.

On the other hand, it is contended that the Orasa was Ma Nyein Aung as being the eldest competent child and daughter of Daw Hmo and U Baw—the former having predeceased the latter. The real question in this appeal is, which was the Orasa—Ma Nyein Aung or Maung Po Cho? The learned Judge of the District Court, following the cases of Maung Po Hman v. Maung Tin (1), Po Zan v. Maung Nyo (2) and Tun Maung v. Ba Tun (3), decided, with apparent reluctance, in favour of plaintiffs, viz., that Maung Po Cho was the Orasa son, and that by right of representation the plaintiffs were entitled to a quarter share.

Maung Thein Maung, on behalf of the appellants, relied upon sections 30 to 33 and section 163 of U Gaung's Digest, sections 155 to 159 of the Attathankepa Dhammathat, and to the views expressed by Messrs. Tha Gywe and May Oung in their published works. Mr. Lentaigne relied chiefly upon the decision in the case of Po Hman v. Maung Tin (1) already referred to. Ma Nyein Aung was admittedly an adult at her mother's death, and Po Cho was an adult and had admittedly assisted his father in his work right up to the time of his (Po Cho's) death. It is clear that both of them were competent to be the Orasa. it is not denied that if Maung Po Cho was the Orasa, the plaintiffs' share is one-quarter and that it is only one-sixteenth if Ma Nyein Aung was the Orasa daughter. In Lower Burma, the last and most decisive case on the subject is that of Po Hman v. Maung Tin (1). Here the mother died first, but it was held that Po Hman ousted the elder daughter from the position of Orasa as soon as he reached competent age. In Po Zan v. Maung Nyo (2) it was the father who died first—so, in any case, the decision was correct, but it was tacitly assumed that the result would have been the same, even if the mother had died first. Section 150 of the Digest was quoted to show that sons are preferred to daughters, but section 49 was not referred to. This latter section seems to deal with them on equal terms, at any rate, in regard to their family duties. There is, I think, little doubt that there can be only one real Orasa in each family, but, in order to reach the status of an Orasa, a person must attain majority and be competent, see the case of Tun Myaing v. Ba Tun (3). If these conditions are fulfilled, the Orasa can pass on his rights to his heirs, if he dies. If the person is incompetent or dies before attaining majority, then no doubt his rights devolve. In the case of Ma Mya Thu v. Maung Po Thin (4) the father died first, so, of course, the son was preferred to elder daughters. Section 163 of the Digest shows that the eldest child's heirs, when she is a daughter, recieve preferential treatment. The Dhammathats undoubtedly contemplate a female being Orasa. Of course, section 163 is not applicable if there is or has been an Orasa son, but if there is an Orasa daughter I fail to see why at her death the position of Orasa should pass to the younger brother or sister, [Tun Myaing v. Ba Tun (3)] or why in her lifetime a younger brother on reaching competent age should be able to oust her from her position. In my opinion it is quite clear from the majority of the Dhammathats quoted in sections 30, 31 and 33 of the Digest that, in a family composed of sons and daughters, until one of the parents dies, there is, technically speaking, no Orasa, though the eldest son is usually so styled, and that, if the father dies first, the eldest son, if competent and a major, automatically becomes Orasa, whereas if the mother dies before the father, the eldest competent daughter, if a major, occupies that position—in either case as taking the place of the father or mother in the family. If the eldest son or daughter, as the case may be, has reached competent age and then predeceased his or her parents, leaving issue behind, there is then no Orasa at all, but the said issue receives preferantial treatment. The point seems to me to be that none of the Lower Burma rulings has really dealt with the question of the eldest child's rights when that child is a daughter and the family consits of both daughters and sons, and the mother predeceasses the father. What appears to me to be the correct law was suggested by MacColl, A. J. C., in the case of Mi The O v. Mi Swe (5) and in Nga Lu Daw v. Mi Mo Yi (6). This is, with some slight difference, what I have already stated above. It appears, moreover, to have been the view taken by Mr. Chan Toon in his Principles of Buddhist Law, page 103. The eldest daughter or son, as the case may be, obtains the Orasa share or one-quarter as a right—the former on the mother predeceasing the father and the latter on the father predeceasing the mother (Digest, sections 30, 31 and 33). This, of course, is only so when the daughter or son was competent to fill the position of the deceased parent. The deciding factor as to whether the privilege falls to a female or a male is the sex of the parent who dies first. For instance, if the mother dies first there would be no object in giving a quarter share to the eldest son because his father is still alive. In this connection sections 155 and 156 of the Attathankepa must be considered—they bear out the view now taken. The authority of this Dhammathat is questioned by the unknown author of the introduction thereto, but, in my opinion, it carries great weight. It was compiled by the late Kin Wun Mingyi, U Gaung, C. S. I., a learned Minister of the Burmese Kings, who had a vast knowledge of Burmese Buddhist Law, as applied amongst his people. Its value has been recognized by the British Courts, both in Lower and Upper Burma. Sir George Shaw in the case of Mi Kin Lot v. Nga Ba So (7) made some observations which show his respect for it. Sir Herbert White, C. J., in the case of Ma Ba We v. Mi Sa U (8) expressed his satisfaction with its authority, and Sir Daniel Twomey in the case of Maung Hme v. Ma Sein (9) and again in Ma Lay v. Tun Shwe (10) laid great stress upon it. The Yozathat, the first Dhammathat quoted in sections 44, 45 of the Digest, supports this view in the first portion set out. The remarks in the case of Ma Me v. Ma Myit (11) that the eldest daughter only succeeds as Orasa where there are no sons were mere obiter dicta as the decision of the point was unnecessary.

In the case of Maung Seik Kaung v. Maung Po Nyein (12) it seems to me that the real point was dimly foreseen, but it was thought that the Dhammathats did not clearly enunciate the principle that the daughter could claim a quarter share from her father on her mother's decease although there were indications of it. It was, however, admitted that some of the Dhammathats gave the quarter or Orasa share to the eldest child, and that only occasional passages put the daughter in an inferior position to the son. In that case too, the mother died before the father and the son was claiming against his father on the latter's re-marriage. The references made in the ruling to sections 155 to 159 Attathankepa Dhammathat are vitiated by the fact that the younger "sons and daughters" are mentioned in the Burmese Script, whereas in the English translation they are collectively referred to as younger children. The learned Judge also seems to me to have misinterpreted sections 32 and 33 of the Digest and, though he referred to it, did not bear in his mind section 3, Book X of the Manugye. In the case of Ma Thin v. Ma Wa Yon (13) the converse case was discussed, but the question now raised was not decided. The Vilasa, section 33 of the Digest, page 84, Volume I, entirely favours the position which I now take up. In the case of Tun Myaing v. Ba Tun (3) Birks, J., said: "It is settled law that on the death of one parent it is only the eldest child (not son) that can claim a quarter share during the lifetime of the surviving parent." The case of Tha Tu v. Maung Bya (14) does not materially assist us. In that case, as reported, there were no sons but five daughters, and the eldest was naturally given her quarter share. The case of Lo Zan v. Maung Nyo (2) implies that the Texts in section 163 of the Digest apply exclusively to families consisting of daughters only, but the view adopted in the case of Ma Ein Thu v. Maung Hla Dun (15) is distinctly opposed to this implication, and the view taken in this last case is supported by section 15, Book X of the Manugye. Section 150 of the Digest referred to in Po Zan's case (2) does indeed appear to place daughters in an inferior position to sons, even though the son may be the youngest child, but it seems to me that the superiority of the son has been judicially recognized only in cases where the father died first, excepting in the case of Maung Po Hman v. Maung Tin (1) already referred to.

With some hesitation I venture to think that the decisions of this Court in Po Zan's case (2) and in Maung Po Hman's case (1) are erroneous. In the latter case, if Mi Shwa Ein died after she had attained majority and was competent, then she was the Orasa and on her death the position of Orasa remained unfilled [see Tun Myaing v. Ba Tun (3)]. If Po Zan's case (2) is correct, section 163 of the Digest may become a dead letter, because there could be no Orasa daughter in a family consisting of both sons and daughters, unless there should be no competent son.

As against the view that sons should be preferred to daughters, I would set the universal practice of equal division of inheritance between sons and daughters—a practice followed not only by the Courts of this country, but also by the villagers themselves. The view in question arose, I think, owing to a misunderstanding. Sections 155 to 159 of the Attathankepa were misunderstood owing to an inadequate translation, as pointed out above, and sections 2 and 3, Book X, Manugye, were not read together as a whole, nor were sections 4 and 5. The case of Ma Nan Gyaw v. Maung Shue Ket (16), relied on in this appeal, is of little real usefulness, inasmuch as the learned Judge who decided it dealt with none of the texts applicable and the principle, that where there are sons, a daughter, though the eldest child, is not entitled to claim a quarter share on the mother's death, was deduced from cases which did not cover the real issue. Tha Tu v. Maung Bya (14) is quoted by Mr. May Oung at page 221 of his work on Buddhist Law as favouring the eldest daughter who has also the eldest child obtaining her quarter share on her mother's death where the family consisted of three daughters and two sons. Upon reading the judgment, however, I am not sure that his remark, that the head-note is wrong, is correct, as Hartnoll, J. (now Sir Henry Hartnoll), clearly stated at page 182 that the mother died leaving five daughters. Nevertheless, that view and the view which I venture to take is supported by Manugye and the Attathankepa as well as the Wagaru Dhammathat, which, so far as is known, is the earliest of all, although it is true that the latter does not give the Orasa (whether male or female) a full quarter share.

The Dhammathatkyaw gives the Orasa daughter her full quarter share and the younger children, male and female, have to wait till the father dies before they get anything. The Vinicchaya—an important Dhammathat—upholds the quarter share of the Orasa. The most modern work, the Attathankepa, has already been discussed. It remains to be said that in the present case Maung Po Cho predeceased his father and that, in my opinion, he was never Orasa, for I consider that Ma Nyein Aung held that position all along. Taking the view which I do, supported, as it is, by such Burmese Jurisconsults as Messrs. May Oung and Tha Gywe in their published works, I am aware that I am going counter to the previous decisions of this Court, but I think that the whole question requires careful re consideration by a Full Bench of this Court, in the light of what I have set out in this order.

I have now had the advantage of seeing the questions propounded for reference by the learned Chief Judge, and I concur in referring those questions to a Full Bench.

OPINION OF THE FULL BENCH.

MAUNG KIN, J.—The following questions have been referred:—

1. In a family consisting of both sons and daughters, can any child acquire the full status of Orasa prior to the death of either parent?

2. If so, in such a family where the eldest child is a daughter, can any son become Orasa until his father dies?

(15) 15 Ind. Cas. 360; 5 Bur. L. T. 73.

3. In such a family can the question which child is the Orasa be decided before the death of either parent?

4. Can there be in such a family two Orasas?

5. Are sons always to be preferred to daughters as Orasas?

6. In such a family can there be an Orasa son who predeceasing his parents can transmit to his children a right to preferential treatment in the division of the estate?

7. If so, can the eldest child, being a daughter, on her mother predeceasing her father, claim a quarter share as Orasa or transmit to her children a right to preferential treatment in the division of the estate?

The facts of the case are:—

Daw Hmo predeceased her husband U Baw, who died some years later, viz, on the 28th December 1907. Their eldest son (not their eldest child) Maung Po Cho died on the 13th December 1907, or some twelve days prior to his father. He was about 40 when he died. Their eldest child was a daughter, Ma Nyein Aung, who died after both her parents. The plaintiffs are the issue of Maung Po Cho and the defendants are the younger son and daughter of Daw Hmo and U Baw.

Thus U Baw and Daw Hmo had four children.

Had they all survived both their parents, they would all have shared equally in the estate of their parents in accordance with the ruling of Ma Kyi Kyi v. Ma Thein (17). In that case the rules of distribution of the parental estate between the children of the same parents on the death of both the parents were jettisoned as being so hopelessly conflicting as to be difficult to reconcile and the rule of equal distribution was introduced as being equitable and in accordance with the practice of the people.

The plaintiffs claim a quarter share in the estate as representing Maung Po Cho whom they claim to be the Orasa son of U Baw and Daw Hmo.

As I understand it, the claim is to represent their father who predeceased U Baw and survived Daw Hmo and, bearing in mind the ruling in Ma Kyi Kyi's case (17), they put their claim as being for what their father would have got had he survived both his parents, because their uncle's share would be the same. The claim is really under section 15 of the Manugye, that is to say, a claim to a share equal to that of their youngest uncle. And if the distribution was to be made according to the Dhammathats their claim would have been less than one quarter. So it is clear that this is not a case of devolution of the share which the Orasa son or daughter may be entitled to claim on the death of one of the parents. The right claimable would be the right to represent the parent as fully as the Dhammathats allow.

I shall now proceed to consider the question who is an "Orasa" child.

The word is a Pali word. In the Burmese form it is auratha and in its Romanized form it is "Orasa." It means legitimate, own son. See Childer's Pali Dictionary. The word is used in this sense in the Dhammathats as distinguished from other kinds of children entitled to inherit, such as, heittima, keittiaja, kittima, pubbhaka, and appatittha. See section 16 of U Gaung's Digest, Volume I. The distinction between an auratha (a child born in lawful wedlock), a kittima and an appatittha is clearly drawn in sections 190, 191 and 192 of the same Digest. Reference may also be made in this connection to sections 198 and 199 of the same Digest.

And we have now been accustomed for a considerable time to the use of the term "Orasa" as meaning the legitimate child who is entitled to claim a quarter share in the parental estate on the death of one of the parents. There is no doubt some of the Dhammathat writers use the term "Orasa" baldly, e. g., "Let the Orasa take a quarter of the estate," whereas some are careful to indicate which child is meant by "Orasa," while others do not call the child by that term at all but declare that the son or daughter who planned and worked with the parents and who continues the family is the one entitled to have preferential treatment in regard to inheritance.

In the texts collected in section 30 of the Digest which deals with "Partition between mother and son on the death of the father," the son who is given a preferential right (whether to certain specified property or a quarter of the parental estate either to himself solely or to be divided with his brothers) is called jetthaputta in the following Dhammathats :—

Pyu—jettho, puttosa=The eldest, if a son, or the first born child, if a son.

According to Childer's jettho means chief, best, eldest.

Vilasa—The eldest child who is a son or first born child who is a son.

Waru—Eldest or first born Orasa.

Dhammathatkaw, Rasi } same as Vilasa.

Konda same as Pyu.

Kyetyo—First born son or daughter.

He is termed Thagyi in the following Dhammathats :—

Manukye, Amwebon and Dhamma. Thagyi means eldest son.

The term Thagyi auratha is used in the following Dhammathats :—

Vannana, Warulinga and Cittara.

"Auratha among sons" occurs in Warulinga.

Tha or auratha is used in the following :—

Kunjalinga, Manuyin, Kunja.

"Son known to the officials" is used by Kyannet. This means a recognised son, such as son born in lawful wedlock.

The expression 'if the son takes the place of the father' is used in Vicchedani.

The son who bears the father's burden or responsibilities is used in the following Dhammathats :—

Mano, Kainga, Myingun, Khandaw, Tejo, Vannadhamma, Manuvanna.

In the rest of the Dhammathats, namely, Viniccaya, Pakasani, Rajabala, Manu, Panam, Dayajja, and Dhammasatta the word 'tha' son is used.

The earliest of these Dhammathats are Pyu (89, B. E.), Vilasa (455 B. E.), Waru (643 B. E.). These use the term 'Thau-u.' Then came Manukye and Dhamma (both 1114 B. E.), which use the term 'Thagyi.' Then in 1126 B. E., came Vannana which uses the expression 'Thagyi auratha.' Then came Manuyin (1129 B. E.) in which auratha or Tha auratha is used. In 1129 B. E. Rasi was published and the term 'Tha-u-yaukya' is used in it notwithstanding the fact of the term 'Thagyi,' 'Thagyi auratha' and 'auratha' having been used in the meantime by some of the other Dhammathats. In 1143 B.E. Sonda which uses the term 'Tha-u' 'Thagyi auratha,' appeared. In 1165 B. E. Kunjalinga was published. It gives the rules of partition between mother and son on the death of the father and says that if the son is auratha he shall get one quarter and the mother three-fourths.

Of the above Dhammathats in which the term 'jetthaputta' occurs reasons are given for the preferential treatment in the following :—

Pyu—The son continues the family.

Vilasa—Because the parents obtained at the commencement of their wedded life by their earnest prayer.....

.....he helps in the acquisition of property.....he succeeds to the father's office and continues the family.

Dhammathatkyaw, Rasi, Kyetyo } same as Vilasa.

All the Dhammathats mentioned in section 30 of the Digest when considered as a whole, lead to the inference that it is the eldest born legitimate son who is entitled to claim a quarter of the parental estate from his mother on the death of the father, provided he has helped the parents in the acquisition of property and takes the deceased father's place and continues the family. It appears that the Dhammathats take it for granted that the son, if competent to do so, will take his father's place and continue the family but "whether this duty is a mere moral obligation or can be enforced at law is at present undetermined so far as decisions go." Per Jardine, J.C., in Mi Saung v. Mi Kun (18). And this eldest born son, who is entitled to a quarter share, is by later Dhammathats called an Orasa.

According to section 62 of the Digest this eldest born son may be superseded by, and the position he might have enjoyed may go to, a younger son who fulfils the conditions, while he does not.

It may be argued that what is material is the fulfilling of the conditions and not the order in which the sons are born, so that even where the eldest born is a daughter a son who fulfils the conditions would be entitled to the quarter share from the mother on the death of the father.

In my judgment the argument is not sustainable. It can only be founded on the Dhammathats noticed above which do not call the son entitled to the share by any description, such as Tha u-thagyi, thagyi auratha, or auratha but which describe him only as the son who bears the father's burden or responsibilities. It appears to me that these Dhammathats put the matter in a comprehensive form, because, whether the claim is made by the eldest born son or by a younger son, the conditions must be fulfilled. These Dhammathats do not, in my opinion, contradict the proposition that the eldest born son, if competent, can claim the share from the mother and if not competent, he will be superseded by another son who is competent, but that if the eldest born is not a son, the right to a quarter share does not exist in favour of a son, though he may be the eldest of the sons. I have deduced this by a consideration of the Dhammathats alone.

I get the following results:—In dealing with the right of the child who is given a preferential right—

(1) earlier Dhammathats call him "Tha-u" and the right is given him because he fulfils the conditions as to which the leading Dhammathats are in substantial agreement;

(2) later Dhammathats such as, Manukye and Amuebon call him "Thagyi;"

(3) other Dhammathats of later dates call him "Thagyi auratha;"

(4) still later Dhammathats call him merely auratha;

(5) there are some Dhammathats which do not call him by any description but speak of him merely as a son who bears the father's burden, their authors probably thinking that it is unnecessary to state the rule in detail, because the fulfilment of the condition is the essential thing.

Read all these Dhammathats together and the conclusion will be reached that those which speak of the son who bears the father's burden do not appear to contradict the others. Because they were not read in the way I suggest, did Sir George Shaw go wrong in Mi Min Din v. Mi Hle (19) when he held that the eldest born son means the eldest son, not necessarily the eldest child.

There is another ruling which appears to me to be contrary to my view. That is in Ma Ein Thu v. Maung Hla Dun (15) in which it had to be ascertained whether the second child, a daughter, was the Orasa for the purpose of section 163 of the Digest. It was not certain whether the eldest child who predeceased its parents in its infancy was a son or a daughter. Twomey, J., held that if it was a daughter the eldest surviving daughter would be auratha. This view is perfectly correct. But the learned Judge observed that the fact that the eldest child was a son would make no difference. He appears to have thought that the fact was a negligible quantity as he stated:—At any rate I see no reason to think that they (the texts in section 163) do not apply to a family where the only children arriving at maturity were two daughters and the only other child a son who died in infancy. No texts are cited in support of this second view propounded by the learned Judge.

The next question for consideration is the right of a daughter to a quarter share. Section 33 of the Digest which deals with the partition between father and daughter on the death of the mother has to be considered. Although the number of Dhammathats which gives the eldest born daughter the right to claim a quarter share from the father is smaller than that of the Dhammathats which give the son the right to claim this share from the mother, yet the important Dhammathats, viz., Manukye, Vilasa, Dhammathatkyaw and Amwebon declare the right in her favour and it is well-known that the case law on the subject is to the same effect.

It is, therefore, correct to hold that the eldest born legitimate daughter is the Orasa who has the right to claim a quarter share from the father on the death of the mother.

It has, however, been contended that the eldest born daughter will be ousted from her position as in Orasa, if there is a son.

In Mi Saung v. Mi Kun (18) Mr. (afterwards Sir John) Jardine, J. C., observed:—

"Under certain circumstances the eldest daughter, at least when there is no son competent to assume the parental duty, takes the paraphernalia of the deceased mother, * * * These rights are additional to the fractional share of the inheritance, which on the death of one parent the eldest son or the eldest daughter is entitled to demand from the surviving parent."

(19) U. B. R. (1901-06), II, Buddhist Law, Inheritance, p. 11.

The learned Judge cited no authority for limiting the eldest daughter's rights to the case where there are no sons. This ruling was followed by Mr. Hosking, J. C., in Ma Me v. Ma Myit (11) and again there were no reasons forthcoming.

In Ma Mya Thu v. Maung Po Thin (4) it was laid down by Mr. Birks, J. C., that where there are both sons and daughters the eldest son is preferred to any daughter. Now in that case the father had died and the claim was made by the youngest son (who was also the youngest child) where the eldest born was a daughter and the third child, a boy, had died in infancy. It was taken for granted that had he not died in infancy the third child would, if competent to take his father's place, have been the Orasa entitled to claim the quarter share from the mother. But the texts cited by the learned Judge show that it is the eldest-born son who was under certain circumstances, entitled to the share and that, if he does not fulfil the conditions, a younger son, being competent, will step into the position. If in that case the younger son had stepped into the position of the eldest-born son, then there would be no doubt the decision was correct. The case was one where the father had died and the eldest daughter could not have claimed to be the Orasa for the purpose of claiming a quarter share.

In Anleathan v. Mi Tha Ta U (20) the eldest daughter sued her mother and her brothers for a quarter share. It was held by Mr. Birks, J. C., that the plaintiff could not claim the share while there were sons. It was, however, unnecessary to take the existences of younger sons into consideration, because the case was one in which the eldest daughter could not represent her deceased father. Sections 156, 157 and 158 of the Attasankhepa Vannana Dhammathat were cited as being in conformity with the principle enunciated in Ma Mya Thu's case (4) which was relied on.

In Maung San Dwa v. Ma Min Tha (21) a sixth child, a son, was held to be entitled to demand a quarter share from the mother on the death of the father, though there were two sons elder than the plaintiff. Fox, J., followed Ma Mya Thu's case (4). It was contended by Mr. Hla Baw that the son entitled to claim the share is the eldest-born son on the ground that in section 63 of the Manu Vannana Dhammathat and in the extracts from the Vilasa and Dhammathatkyaw given under sections 32 and 34 of the Digest, the term used, when referring to the son who should get a larger share than the other children is "Tha-u" or first born son. The learned Judge disposed of the contention thus: "These terms are, however, not universally used; in section 5 of Book X of the Manukye, which section directly bears upon the present case, the terms used are "Tha-gyee" which I take to mean the chief son who would naturally be the eldest of them, unless afflicted with any of the diseases or defects enumerated in section 38 of the same book. Mr. Justice Birk's judgment was based upon a general view of the text bearing upon the question, and I see no sufficient reason for doubting its correctness." In this case also the claim was made against the mother and if the claimant was entitled to supersede one of his two elder brothers, there would be nothing to say against the decision. But, with great respect, the learned Judge erred in thinking that there was any difference in meaning between the terms "Tha-u" and "Tha-gyi." The very fact that the Dhammathats speak of the possibility of the Thagyi being superseded by a younger son shows that Thagyi is the same as Tha-u. "Thagyi" has been rendered as "big son" by Advocates to suit their own cases. Thagyi is the abbreviated form of Tha-akyi, which must mean the eldest son. I have not come across in any of the Dhammathats any expression which is equivalent to the English expression, "eldest surviving son."

In Maung Seik Kaung v. Maung Po Nyein (12) a Bench of two Judges of this Court, after referring to sections 155, 157, 159 of the Attasankhepa Vananna Dhammathat, came to the conclusion that the rules in those sections proceed on the principle of the son getting a portion if his father dies, and the daughter if her mother dies; but that the case of both daughters and sons is not distinctly provided for. The learned Judges do not appear to have referred to the original texts. In section 155 the existence of younger sons and daughters is clearly contemplated because it says that the kanitha (younger) sons and daughters shall not demand inheritance until the mother dies. In section 156 which gives the auratha share to the daughter on the death of the mother it is declared that the kanitha sons and daughters shall not claim inheritance until the father dies. So that in both the cases of father and mother predeceasing his or her consort, the existence of younger sons and daughters is not lost sight of and the law as regards them is declared. As Attasankhepa is looked upon only as an exposition of expert opinion, we shall now turn to the older Dhammathats and ascertain whether this expert opinion is justified. In section 30 of the Digest :—

Dhammathat kyaw speaks of nauktha in referring to the other children. No doubt tha there is used in the sense of children. The term in this connection means later children.

Manugye gives three shares to the mother and tha thaminge, younger sons and daughters.

Sonta says that to the thange thaminge, younger sons and daughters, however, suitable shares should be given.

Amuebon } say that the three parts should go to the mother and the younger brothers and sisters.

The other Dhammathats are silent on the point. Of the Dhammathats collected in section 33 of the Digest—Dhammathatkyaw mentions younger sons and daughters, and Rasi and Kyetyo speak of those sons and daughters other than the eldest daughter. In the extracts given in section 31 of the Digest—Vilasa contemplates the existence of other children as it says 'It is only the eldest who should get.'

These materials are sufficient as showing that sections 30 and 33 of the Digest contain rules as regards the eldest child's quarter share where there are sons as well as daughters and justify the expert opinion contained in Attansankhepa. The author of that work was also the author of the Digest. During the regime of the last two Burmese Kings and for many years after the Annexation until his death U Gaung was the greatest living authority on Burmese Law and Literature and I think his opinion may be accepted even without the materials pointed out above.

To my mind from the very fact that the Dhammathats speak of the eldest as having the right to claim the quarter share, it is implied that there must be other children.

The contention that the case of both sons and daughters is not provided for cannot, therefore, be accepted.

It has, however, been urged that, as the Dhammathats look upon the son as being superior to the daughter, the eldest-born daughter cannot be allowed to claim the quarter share, where there are sons. Among others, sections 140 and 150 have been referred to in support of the contention. These sections and the others contain rules of distribution after both the parents are dead. These are the rules which this Court has disregarded in Ma Kyi Kyi's case (17). They do certainly show that the son is regarded as superior to the daughter. But they do not give him, unless he is the eldest born, any greater share than the eldest of the daughters. For if the eldest is a daughter and there is a son younger than she is, that son, instead of getting a smaller share in accordance with the order of the births of the children, gets a share equal to the eldest daughter, and, in my judgment, wherever, in these rules, the word auratha is used, it is used to indicate the eldest child but not with reference to the right to claim a quarter share from the surviving parent. When both the parents are dead the question is not who is the eldest-born but who is eldest of the surviving children and all the surviving children will get their fractional shares, larger or smaller, according to the priority of birth.

In section 140 of the Digest :—

Myingun says that a woman may not say, 'I am the auratha.'

Vicchedani says :—"Even if she is the eldest sister, she is not the auratha."

In section 150—

Rasi says :—"If a son is born after the daughter, let them both have equal shares." A woman shall not say, "I am the auratha."

Ottara says that although a son is the youngest among children of whom the others are daughters, he shall not be called a younger child, let him take the elder's place, the place of the father.

Kyannet says that although a son is born after a daugher, the son is more excellent than the daughter.

In my opinion, when it is stated that the woman may not say, "I am the auratha," it only means that she may not claim the largest share in the estate or, in other words, she may not demand the eldest child's share.

When Ottara says that the son will take the father's place, it does not mean that he is given a superior status. It only means that he gets his father's personal belongings His elder sister is also allowed to take her mother's personal belongings. And his share in the residue is equal to that of his eldest or elder sister, as the case may be.

I am, therefore, of opinion that Hartnoll, J., in Po Zan v. Maung Nyo (2) and Birks, J.C., in Ma Mya Thu v. Maung Po Thin (4) were not justified in holding that the son is preferred to any daughter. It appears to me that though the eldest daughter is prevented from claiming the Orasa share, i. e, the largest share, there is nothing to indicate that the eldest son, her younger brother, becomes the Orasa and takes the largest share.

There is an additional reason why these rules of distribution of inheritance after both the parents are dead do not apply to cases where the eldest daughter claims a quarter share from her surviving parent, the father. It is that the claim is allowed her under very special circumstances and as a reward for her past assistance in the acquisition of property and the possibility (which the law givers expected in the times they lived) of her taking her mother's place and continuing the family and controlling the younger children as her mother had done in her lifetime. In the extract from Dhammathatkyaw which is given in section 62 of the Digest we find the principle "The eldest brother is in the position of the father, the eldest sister in the position of the mother." This is in the mouth of every Burman and it is clear from the fact of the principle being recorded in that Dhammathat word for word the same as it exists in the mouth of the people that it is a well-recognised principle. And so far as my experience goes the principle has never been taken to mean that in the case of the eldest daughter, only her younger sisters give her the position of their mother. The younger brothers also respect her as they had their deceased mother. This happy state of things exists to-day and long may it continue.

Another point is that even if those rules of distribution among all the children are applicable to the question of the eldest daughter's right to a quarter on the death of her mother, the younger son cannot take her place, he can only prevent her from claiming the right. Then in that case there would be no Orasa at all, a position which the Dhammathats can hardly be held to have contemplated.

In my judgment it is really unnecessary to go into the question of the applicability of these rules because it is perfectly clear, as shown above, that the Dhammathats in giving a quarter to the eldest child have in view the case of there being both sons and daughters in the family.

Among the Burmese Buddhists equality of the sexes is recognized in the Dhammathats with occasional aberrations to the effect that the male is superior to the females. But when we come to consider what superior rights are given to the man, we find that his rights are hardly superior to the woman's. Although they borrowed their laws from the Hindu Institutes of Manu, the Burmese carefully refrained from adopting the sex inequalities of the Hindu Law. For instance, in Hindu Law the term aurasa was applied originally only to the legitimate son. Next the Rishis evolved him into a son of a very superior type, namely, the son begotten by a man on a wife of the same caste who was espoused in an approved form of marriage with religious rites, was a virgin at the time of her marriage and had not passed through the marriage ceremony or a part of it with another man. Sarkar's Hindu Law of Adoption, 2nd Edition, page 57. This was done on spiritual grounds. In Hindu Law a daughter is not called an aurasa and is not allowed to confer spiritual benefits on her father as the aurasa son is.

The Burmese borrowed the word aurasa and Burmanized it as auratha but gave their own meaning to it suitable to the conditions of family life which they approved. Thus they called a child (son or daughter) born in lawful wedlock an auratha child, putting the son and daughter generally on an equal footing.

I am, therefore, of opinion that it is wrong to state, as in Po Zan v. Maung Nyo (2), that the younger child, a son, being competent to assume the duties of an Orasa must be preferred to his eldest sister, even though she happened to be the eldest born. The case of Maung Po Hman v. Maung Tin (1) followed the last case cited herein without any discussion of the texts and I must respectfully dissent from it in so far as it holds that the eldest-born daughter is ousted from her position by her younger brother.

In the result I would hold that the eldest born legitimate daugther has the right to claim a quarter share on the death of her mother whether she co-exists with sons or not, and that the eldest-born child is the Orasa, although, as regards the claim to a quarter share on the death of one of the parents, it would depend upon the circumstances of each particular case whether the claim can be made or not, that is to say, if the child is a son he can only make the claim from the mother, on the ground that he steps into his deceased father' place; similarly, if a daugher, she can only claim as one who takes the place of her mother. It is clear also that there cannot be two Orasas, a male and a female, in the same family, because an Orasa is either the eldest born or the one who supersedes the eldest born.

If this view is correct, there will be no difficulty in construing section 15 of the Manugye and sections 162 and 163 of the Digest. The child who is the Orasa will be the child whose children, being out-of-time grand-children, will get a larger share in the estate of their grand parents than the issue of their uncle and aunts. They will under the present law [Ma Kyi Kyi's case (17)] get the share which their deceased parent would have got, had he or she survived his or her own parents. That deceased parent will be the eldest-born son or daughter.

In section 15 of the Manukye and sections 162 and 163 of the Digest words similar to those noticed above as occurring in the extracts given in section 30 of the Digest are found:—

Vilasa.—Thagyi anratha.
Myingun.—Thagyi.
Manukye.—Thagyi auratha.
Viniccaya.—Thagyi preceded by the Pali word jettho.

Manu	}	Thagyi.
Kyannet
Kungya	}	Akogyi, eldest brother.
Vicchedani
Cittara
Kyetyo

Vicchedani prefixes jettho to Akogyi.

The above are in section 162.

In section 163 we find:—

Viniccaya, Manuvannana, Sorada prefixing jettha to "Thamigyi" and "Hnamagyi" eldest sister.

So that with reference to the texts in the sections now under consideration it must be held that the eldest-born child is the one spoken of.

Section 15 contains three paragraphs, of which the first is for the "Thagyi auratha" and the second for the "Thamigyi." It has been contended, as Counsel for the respondent in Ma Saw Ngwe v. Ma Thein Yin (22) did, that these two paragraphs are not mutually exclusive, and that at least for the purpose of claiming the larger share in favour of the out-of-time grand-children there can be two eldest children, eldest son and eldest daughter. I am unable to accept this contention. There are reasons why it should not be accepted, namely, (1) the official translation of section 212 of Attasankhepa is not correct. Therefore, the texts indicate alternative cases. I am not in favour of Mr. May Oung's translation which is given in his book at page 248. (2) Though the Dhammathatkyaw and Chittara in sections 162 and 163 of Digest mention both the eldest son and eldest daughter in the same breath, as it were, it does not indicate that the two cases are not mutually exclusive.

In support of the argument that the first two clauses of section 15 of the Manukye are not alternatives the case of Mi Min Din v. Mi Hle (19), (an Upper Burma case), has been cited. In that case Sir George Shaw, J. C., decided that under section 15 of the Manukye, there may be two Orasa children, and dissented from Ma Saw Ngwe v. Ma Thein Yin (22). Referring to that case, the learned Judicial Commissioner said: "It was held that there cannot be two Orasa children (that is an Orasa son and an Orasa daughter) in the same family. This decision was apparently based on section 212 of the Attasankhepa. The published English translation of that work seems to imply that there is either an Orasa son or an Orasa daughter, but not both at the same time. The Burmese is not so uncompromising, and is perhaps open to another construction, but, however this may be, I think there can be no doubt that the numerous passages of the Dhammathats dealing with partition among several sons and daughters refer to the special position and privileges of the eldest (or Orasa) son, and of the eldest daughter as co-existing, cf. sections 153 to 161 of the Kinwun Mingyi's Digest. There is nothing in sections 162 and 163 of that work which deals respectively with the case of the eldest or Orasa son and the eldest daughter dying before the parents—the text is directly in point in the present case—to show that they are mutually exclusive." If Sir George Shaw's decision is correct, then in the present case both Ma Nyein Aung and Maung Po Cho would be the eldest children whose own children will get preferential treatment under section 15 of the Manukye or under sections 162 and 163 of the Digest. I have already expressed my view that the published translation of section 212 of the Attasankhepa is correct, and that it indicates that the first two clauses are mutually exclusive.

As regards the other ground also of Sir George Shaw's decision, I respectfully differ from him. Sections 153—161 of the Digest do not show the position and privileges of the eldest son and the eldest daughter to be co existing under all circumstances. They are co-existing only in the case where the eldest son is younger than the eldest daughter. Where the eldest son is older than the eldest daughter, the son gets a larger share. In my opinion sections 153—161 of the Digest do not help us on the question whether there can be simultaneously an eldest son and an eldest daughter through whom special treatment may be claimed in regard to the inheritance of the grand-parents. I think the eldest-born child—male or female—is the child through whom his or her children may claim a preferential right in the estate of their grand parents. It would be absurd to allow two Orasas—a male and a female—for the purposes of the sections now under consideration, because their children would then take away altogether one half share of the estate. This, I think, is an absurd and illogical position, for the younger children will then have only the estate of their mother, namely, one-half, to inherit in. They would be deprived of their inheritance in the estate of their father. A child is entitled to inheritance in the estate of both its parents.

I have pointed out above that the eldest born daughter's right to take her deceased mother's place in the lifetime of her father is not ousted by a son born after her. That view is against the proposition that only where there are daughters the eldest daughter had that right. I have also shown above that the eldest son or daughter within the first two paragraphs of section 15, and sections 162 and 163 of the Digest is the same child who is entitled to preferential treatment on the death of one of the parents as contemplated by the extracts in sections 30, 31, 34 and 33 of the Digest. The view taken by Sir George Shaw in Mi Min Din's case (19) has been dissented from by Mr. McColl, A. J. C., in the unreported case of Tha Dun v. Waing Gyi, [Second Civil Appeal No. 302 of 1909 of the Upper Burma Judicial Commissioner's Court.] Mr. Tha Gywe refers to that case in his Conflict of Authority in Buddhist Law, Volume II, at page 53. In that case the eldest born child was a daughter, the second and third were sons of U Tu and Ma Kin. Waing Gyi was the son of the eldest daughter who had survived her father but not her mother. The plaintiff claimed a one third share in the estate of the grandparents on the ground that he was the son of the Orasa daughter. It was contended for the defence that the plaintiff's mother was not the Orasa, as she had brothers, and that the eldest competent son should be preferred to any daughter. Mr. McColl held that the plaintiff's claim was good, and he said that there was nothing to suggest that families consisting of daughters only are referred to.

In Ma Ein Thu's case (15) above cited Twomey, J., said that the texts stated in section 163 give the issue of the eldest daughter a share equal to that of the youngest of its aunts, and that there seems to be no authority for holding that these texts apply exclusively to families consisting of daughters only, and, as I said before, he treated the fact that there was an eldest born son who died in infancy as being negligible.

With these observations I will now proceed to answer the questions referred.

I answer—

Question No. 1.—In the affirmative.

Question No. 2.—Where the eldest child is a daughter no son can become Orasa.

Question No. 3.—In the affirmative.

Question No. 4.—In the negative.

Question No. 5.—In the negative, unless the son is the eldest born.

As regards Question No. 6, I may say that the word "transmit" is not quite a happy term. The eldest born son is the Orasa. If he predeceased his parents, his children will have a right to preferential treatment as laid down in the first paragraph of section 15 of the Manukye, or section 192 of the Digest. If the eldest born son died before he became competent to take his father's place, a younger son, being fully qualified, may become Orasa, and, if that son had predeceased his parents, his children will have a right to the same preferential treatment. But, if the eldest born child was a daughter and predeceased her parents after she had become competent to take her mother's place, her children will have a right to the same preferential treatment. It is doubtful whether another daughter younger than a son can ever take the place of the eldest born daughter who is not competent, or died before she became able to take her mother's place.

As regards Question No. 7, my answer is—the eldest child being a daughter can claim on the death of her mother a quarter share as Orasa, and, if she then died before her father without having got the share, her children will have a right to preferential treatment contemplated by section 15 of the Manukye and sections 162 and 163 of the Digest and, if she then died after her father but before she had claimed her distributive share in the estate, her right of inheritance will devolve upon her children. The same would be the case of the issue of any other child who died after its right of inheritance became vested in it. Supposing the eldest born child died after it became entitled to claim a quarter share under the circumstances of the case, the question may arise whether his children will be entitled to claim the quarter share from their surviving grand-parent. This question does not arise here and need not be answered. But, if the eldest born, though it might have claimed the quarter share from the surviving parent, did not and survived that parent, then the child will no longer be entitled to claim the quarter share but will have to share with the other children and may in that case get more or less than the quarter share it might have claimed.

PRATT, J.—It is, perhaps, a matter for regret that the terms of this reference were drafted quite so broadly and were not confined more closely to the problems of the particular case from which it arose.

It appears necessary to summarise the facts briefly. Plaintiffs were the children of Maung Po Cho, eldest son of U Baw and Daw Hmo. Defendants were the younger son and daughter of U Baw and Daw Hmo.

Daw Hmo died before her husband U Baw and Maung Po Cho predeceased his father. Ma Nyein Aung, the eldest child of the family, survived both her parents.

Plaintiffs claimed one-fourth of the estate of their grand-parents, ure representations, on the ground that their father, Po Cho, was the Orasa child.

The District Court, relying on Po Hman v. Maung Tin (1), Po Zun v. Maung Nyo (2) and Tun Maung v. Ba Tun (3), held that Po Cho was the Orasa child of his parents, and that his children were entitled to the share of a younger uncle, i.e., one-fourth in this particular instance.

The specific problem, therefore, is whether, where the eldest child of the family is a daughter, and survives both her parents, the children of the eldest son, who was competent to inherit and had attained his majority, are entitled to take the share of a younger uncle on the ground that their father was the Orasa son.

The term 'Orasa' originally meant nothing more than born in lawful wedlock but was usually applied in the Dhammathats to the eldest legitimate child in particular. In the Manukye (quoted in section 16 of the Kinwun Mingyi's Digest) children born of a union contracted by parental authority are designated 'Orasa.'

MAUNG SIN v. MRS. KIRKWOOD.

The word has, however, frequently been used in the rulings of the Courts, in a special sense, of the child who takes the place of a parent on his or her death and is entitled to claim a one-fourth share of the estate from the surviving parent, and has been more particularly applied to the son in this connection.

I do not think there is any doubt that it is this specialised use of the term Orasa and the double sense in which it has been applied, that has inadvertently been the cause of some conflict in the rulings of the Courts.

It is necessary to distinguish carefully between the right of the child or children of the eldest child to take jure representationis a share equal to that of the younger uncle or aunt on division of the parental estate and the right of the eldest son or daughter to take the place of the parent of the same sex on his or her decease and to claim one-fourth of the joint estate from the surviving parent.

Had U Baw predeceased his wife and his son, Po Cho, survived him, it seems clear that Po Cho would have been considered the Orasa son and have been held entitled to claim a one-fourth share of the estate from his mother on his father's death, but it does not necessarily follow that where he predeceased his father, his children can claim a larger share than other grand-children on the ground that their father was the Orasa son.

The term Orasa, when applied to the eldest child whose child or children are entitled to a larger share of the inheritance by right of representation, is to my mind ordinarily being used in a different sense to that in which it is applied to the son or daughter entitled to claim a one-fourth share of the estate from the survivor on the death of one of the parents.

The law on the question is laid down in Book X, section 15 of the Manukye, which, following the accepted translation, runs as follows:—

"If the eldest son (tha-gyi) dies before his father and mother the law of inheritance between his son and his son's uncle and aunts is this. Because in case of the death of the father and mother, the eldest son, being the auratha, is called father, let his son and his (i.e., the eldest son's) younger brother share alike. If the eldest daughter (thamigyi) die before the father and mother, this is the law for the partition of the inheritance between her daughter, and her daughter's uncle and aunts. Let the daughter of the eldest daughter and her (the eldest daughter's) younger sister share alike, because the eldest daughter, when grown up, stands in the place of her mother."

It will be noticed that the term auratha or 'Orasa' is applied here only to the eldest son and not to the eldest daughter and appears to be used in the sense of the legitimate son competent to inherit. In the passage as translated above it will be seen that it is quite possible that both the eldest son and the eldest daughter might predecease their parents, in which case it might be inferred that the children of both would be entitled to the advantage of the right of representation and to a share equal to that of the surviving uncles and aunts. A reference to the other authorities on the subject leaves, however, little doubt that it was not intended that this should be so.

The solution propounded by my learned brother Maung Kin obviates this difficulty. After an exhaustive examination of the Dhammathats and rulings he comes to the conclusion that it is only the child of the eldest child, whether son or daughter, who is entitled to share with the younger uncle or aunt.

If 'thagyi' in section 15 is taken to mean the eldest son, being the eldest born child, and 'thamigyi' the eldest daughter being the eldest child, then the passage is clear and decisive and there can be no doubt that where the eldest child is a daughter, the children of the eldest son, not being the eldest child who predeceases his parents, are not more favoured than other grand-children.

This is in accordance with the view taken by Tha Gywe in his Conflict of Authority in Buddhist Law where the question is very fully discussed and the reasons for the conclusion reached stated clearly and convincingly. He used the term Orasa in the sense of the eldest child simply in this connection. Conflict of Authority, Volume II, page 37.

As, however, the rulings on the point are not unanimous it is desirable to refer to some of the leading cases,

MAUNG SIN v. MRS. KIRKWOOD.

In the Upper Burma case Ma Gun Bon v. Maung Po Kywe (23) Burgess, J. C., laid down in 1897, after an exhaustive examination of the authorities, that if the eldest son or daughter die before the parents, the children are given the share of a younger brother or sister, on account of the superior claims of the auratha heir.

It is important to note that it is only the children of the eldest child, whether son or daughter, who are here held to be entitled to the right of representation. Auratha appears to be used in the sense of the 'eldest legitimate' child.

The principle involved was laid down very clearly by a Bench of this Court in Ma Saw Ngwe v. Ma Thein Yin (24) in these words:—

"Among grand children whose parents have predeceased their grand-parents, the only one who ranks with the surviving uncles and aunts is the eldest representative of the eldest child."

In the present reference we are not, however, concerned with the question as to whether it is the eldest child only of the eldest child, or the children collectively, who rank with the surviving uncles and aunts.

The case of Tun Myaing v. Ba Tun (3) does not assist materially, as the question there for consideration was the position of the Orasa son only and the devolution of his status. The principles involved were again enunciated by Sir Herbert White, C. J., in Po Sein v. Po Min (25). "If the Orasa son or daughter predeceases his or her parents, his or her eldest son, or his or her children together receive the same share as their youngest uncle or aunt. But this is strictly confined, in all the texts, to the children of the Orasa or eldest son or daughter. In my opinion, the rule relates to the Orasa son or daughter, strictly so-called. There is no indication that it has any reference to the eldest surviving son or daughter, unless he or she is technically the Orasa."

The cases of Ma Ein Thu v. Maung Hla Dun (15) and Ma Su v. Ma Tin (26) extend the rule as to the Orasa somewhat further and lay down that if the eldest child die before attaining majority, he or she never becomes the Orasa and the next child if competent becomes the Orasa, but they do not materially vary the established rule that the eldest child or children of the eldest child rank with the younger uncles and aunts. It will be observed that in their cases as in many others there is a tendency to read a special meaning into the word Orasa, which is not part of its strict connotation.

Up to this point there had been a practical consensus of authorities that the children of the eldest legitimate child only, usually termed the Orasa, were entitled to the right of representation but in Po Zan v. Maung Nyo (2) the son of the eldest daughter was held not to be entitled to share equally with the sole surviving son on the ground that the son was the Orasa and that the texts set out in sections 162 and 163 of the Digest giving the child or children of the eldest daughter special treatment do not apply where there is an Orasa son.

After careful consideration of the Dhammathats and previous rulings on this subject, I feel no doubt that here Hartnoll, J., was confusing the Orasa or eldest child, whether son or daughter, whose children are entitled to rank with the younger uncles and aunts on the death of both parents by right or representation as laid down in Chapter XV, Book X of the Manugya, with the Orasa son, who is entitled to claim a one-fourth share on the death of his mother.

The point is well brought out in Tha Gywe's 'Conflict of Authority' [Conflict of Authority on Budhist Law, Volume II, page 51], and I agree with his opinion that plaintiff's mother in the case under comment was the Orasa or eldest daughter and her son was entitled to a share equal to that of his uncle.

The rule laid down in Po Zan's case (2) was followed in Maung Po Hman v. Maung Tin (1) under similar circumstances and here again I think the learned Judges were led to a mistaken conclusion through confusing the claim of the Orasa child to a one-fourth share of the inheritance from the surviving parent with the rights of the children of the eldest legitimate or Orasa child to rank with the younger uncles or aunts on the death of both parents.

I am in entire accord with the view taken by McColl, A. J. C., of the Judicial Commissioner's Court in the Upper Burma case of Tha Dun v. Waing Gyi, Second Civil Appeal No. 302 of 1909 of the Upper Burma Judicial Commissioner's Court.

My experience of the actual practice among the Burmese is that it is the children of the eldest child, irrespective of sex, who are considered to be entitled to preferential treatment and that, so far as the right of representation is concerned, the children of the eldest child are never ousted by a son who is not the eldest born, merely because the eldest child happened to predecease the parent of the same sex.

The rule laid down in Ma Gun Bon v. Maung Po Kywe (23) and Po Sein v. Po Min (25), that it is only the children of the eldest child, whether son or daughter, who are entitled to rank with the surviving uncles or aunts, is in accordance with the weight of the Dhammathats.

My conclusion, therefore, is that in section 15, Book X of the Manugye the words "Tha gyi" and "Tha-mi-gyi" mean the eldest son or daughter, being the eldest child, and the two paragraphs relate to the alternative cases in which a son or a daughter respectively is the eldest-born legitimate child.

The Manugye being clear and unambiguous its authority is incontrovertible.

I do not see my way to answer the reference without regard to the facts of the case from which it arose.

My answer would be:—

(1) In a family consisting of both sons and daughters a child can attain the full status of Orasa prior to the death of its parents, in so far that, if he or she predeceases his parents his or her children may be entitled to the preferential treatment prescribed in section 15, Book X of the Manugye.

(2) In such a family where the eldest child is a daughter no son can become Orasa until his father dies, subject to the proviso that the eldest daughter attained her majority before her death.

(3) The question as to which is the Orasa can be decided, so far only as the right of representation is concerned.

(4) In such a family there cannot be two Orasa children in the sense of children whose offspring would, in the event of their parent's death, be entitled to claim an equal share with their younger uncles and aunts.

But it is conceivable that where the Orasa eldest child was a daughter and the eldest son attained his majority before his father's death, he would on his father's death be entitled to rank as Orasa for the purpose of claiming one-fourth of the estate from his mother. It is to be noted that Orasa is here used in two distinct senses.

(5) It follows from my answers to the previous questions that sons are not always preferred to daughters as 'Orasa.'

(6) In such a family when the eldest child is a daughter there cannot be an Orasa son, who predeceasing his parents can transmit to his children a right to preferential treatment in the division of the estate, assuming that the eldest child attained majority and did not forfeit her status as Orasa.

(7) The eldest child, being a daughter, can transmit to her children a right to preferential treatment in the division of the estate, and there is authority for holding that on her mother predeceasing her father she can claim a quarter share as Orasa. I do not, however, consider the determination of the latter point is necessary for the purposes of the present reference.

HEALD, J.—Maung Baw and Ma Hmo had four children, namely, Ma Nyein Aung, Po Cho, Maung Sin and Ma Nga Ma. Ma Hmo died first, then Po Cho, then Maung Baw and then Nyein Aung. After the death of Ma Nyein Aung, Po Cho's children sued the other surviving heirs, including Maung Sin and Ma Nga Ma, to recover one-fourth share of the estate of Maung Baw and Ma Hmo on the ground that Po Cho was auratha and that, therefore, they as his children would be entitled to one-fourth of the estate.

The Trial Court found that Po Cho was auratha and that his children were entitled to a quarter share of the estate.

Maung Sin and Ma Nga Ma appealed and the Appellate Bench of this Court has referred to a Full Bench the following questions:—

(1) In a family consisting of both sons and daughters can any child acquire the status of auratha prior to the death of either parent?

(2) If so, in such a family where the eldest child is a daughter can any son become auratha before his father dies?

(3) In such a family can the question which child is auratha be decided before the death of either parent?

(4) Can there be in such a family two aurathas?

(5) Are sons to be preferred to daughters as aurathas?

(6) In such a family can there be an auratha son who predeceasing his parents, can transmit to his children a right to preferential treatment in the division of the estate?

(7) If so, can the eldest child, being a daughter, on her mother predeceasing her father, claim a quarter share as auratha, or transmit to her children a right to preferential treatment in the division of the estate?

In considering these questions the first step is to make certain what is meant by the word auratha. It is, of course, in common use throughout the books on Hindu Law in the form of aurasa and, so far as I know, is there always used in the sense of a son born to a man by his married wife as distinct from the various other classes of sons recognised in Hindu Law, many of whom are not begotten by the father at all.

The Mitaksbara derives the word from "uras" (the breast) and says: "The issue of the breast (uras) is the legitimate son (aurasa). He is one born of a legal wife, and a son begotten by her husband on her is a true and legitimate son and is chief in rank." Stokes' Hindu Law Books, page 410.

The word is common in this sense in the Burmese Law Books, also and I need not do more than refer to the definition given in the 81st section of the 10th Book of Manugye which gives a list of twelve classes of children, the first of the twelve classes being "children born to a young couple given in marriage by their parents and called auratha." This list seems to be based either on some Hindu Law Book or on some source on which the Hindu Books also drew, since most of the Hindu Books also divide sons into twelve classes of whom aurasa is always first [See Mayne's Hindu Law, page 82 (7th Edition)], and the subsequent passage in Manugye: "Of these twelve the auratha only has the full right to inherit the property of the parents," also seems to have been taken either from Hindu Law or from some common source, since we find practically the same words following the mention of the twelve classes of sons in Vivada Chintamani, [Tagore Law Lectures, 1880, page 515, cf. Forshammer's Jardine Prize Essay, page 49] which says "Manu" and other legislators have said that notwithstanding other kinds of sons, the legitimate son alone receives the whole estate of his father.

It was natural that when the writers of the Burmese Law Books came to translate "auratha" they should render the word as "tha gyi" or "tha-u," that is 'big son" or "first son," and that when they adapted the rules of the ancient law to the conditions of the Burmese family they should regard the auratha as the "eldest" as distinct from the younger children. I say "children" rather than "sons" because even in Hindu Law the use of the word aurasa was not confined to sons. It was used to mean "legitimate issue" whether sons or daughters [Stokes' Hindu Law Books, page 493] and in the Burmese Law Books it is clearly used to include daughters as well as sons. In fact in section 73 of the Wagaru the phrase "auratha daughter" is actually used in the Pali, the parallel words in the Burmese text being "thami akyi" (the eldest daughter).

I think, therefore, that "auratha," as used in those passages in the Dhammathats which it will be necessary to consider for the purposes of the present reference, may be taken as meaning the "eldest child," that the parallel Burmese words "tha-u" or "tha-kyi" may also be taken as meaning the "eldest child" except where the context shows that they mean the "eldest child being a son," and that auratha dita (that is "auratha daughter") and "thami u" or "thami akyi" must be taken to mean the "eldest child being a daughter."

It is now necessary to review the passages in the principal Dhammathats which deal with the rights of the auratha in the sense of "eldest child," and not in the original sense of "legitimate son" as distinguished from the various inferior classes of sons, and as it will be convenient to consider them, so far as possible, in order of date, I shall take them in the order in which they are placed by Dr. Forchammer, because he gives reasons for that order and because in certain cases there is reason to believe that the dates and order given in section 4 of the Digest are doubtful. Complete copies of many of the Dhammathats have not yet been printed so that in many cases all that is available is the extracts given in the Digest.

The earliest Dhammathat is the Vilasa which is said to have been written in Talaing about the end of the 12th Century. A commentary on it was written about the middle of the 17th Century and it was translated into Burmese in the latter half of the 18th Century.

The rule given in this Dhammathat, as I read it, is that if the eldest child is a son and has helped the parents in their business, then when the father dies he gets his father's personal and official belongings and the mother gets her personal belongings. The rest of the estate is divided into four shares of which the mother and younger children get three and the eldest son one. The eldest son gets one-fourth, however many other sons there may be ("even if there be ten sons they get one share out of the three.)"

If the eldest child is a daughter and the mother dies, the eldest daughter gets the mother's personal belongings and one-fourth of the rest of the estate. It is to be noted, however, that the description of what I have called the rest of the estate does not mention immoveable property.

If the eldest is a son and the mother dies or the eldest is a daughter and the father dies the same rule is said to apply. Apparently, therefore, according to this Dhammathat the eldest child, whether a son or daughter, gets one-fourth of the estate, excluding personal belongings, whichever parent dies; but one is tempted to think that in cases where the compiler of a Dhammathat does not state the rule expressly in extenso but contents himself with saying that the same rule applies, he may have been misled by a certain fondness for analogies which appears throughout the Dhammathats and may have been led into generalisations which, if the rules had been expressly stated, would have been seen to be unwarranted.

As for the rights of grand-children, the Vilasa says: "If the eldest brother dies before his parent, his son, if the son is auratha, shall receive as his share of his father's inheritance as much as his father's younger brothers," and again "if the eldest grand-child is auratha, among the deceased's children let him share equally with the younger brothers (of his father). The grand-children lower than the eldest auratha grand-child shall receive only one-fourth of the share of their father's younger brothers." "If the eldest sister dies before her parents, the rule is the same. If the eldest sister's child is auratha, let him have as his mother's share of the inheritance the same share as his aunts."

I am inclined to think that the auratha grand-children referred to in these passages are the children of the auratha child, and this, as will be seen later, is the interpretation which has been put on the rule by the Courts, but it must be admitted that that is not what the Dhammathat actually says. It is just possible, however, that in these passages the word auratha was used in its earlier sense of "legitimate."

The next important Dhammathat is Wagaru which was written in Talaing about A. D. 1300 and was translated into Pali and Burmese by Buddhaghosa the Less about A. D. 1473. Of this we have a copy written in A. D. 1707. This Dhammathat is called Manusra in Dhammathatkyaw (see below) and it is admittedly the basis of many of the subsequent compilations. It is important for our present purpose as showing that as early as the 15th Century the Burmese Law writers regarded "tha-u" or "tha kyi" ("first son" or "big son") and "thami akyi" ("big daughter") as representing the Pali auratha.

Sections 71 to 74 contain the following rules:—

"On the death of the father the 'auratha first son' shall get the personal belongings of his father and of the remaining property the mother shall receive three fourths, the other one fourth share being divided between the other children and the eldest son ("tha kyi").

"On the death of the mother the auratha daughter ("thami akyi") shall get the personal belongings of her mother and of the remaining property the father shall receive three-fourths and the remaining one-fourth shall be divided between the eldest daughter and the rest of the family."

MAUNG SIN v. MRS. KIRKWOOD.

On the subject of the rights of grand-children the Wagaru lays down no rules.

The next important Dhammathat seems to be the Dhammathatkyaw or Kosaungchok which is in Burmese and was compiled about A. D. 1580. It contains references to Vilasa and Wagaru (which it calls Manusara) and also to an older Dhammathatkyaw.

It gives the following rules:—

"If the father dies first, the rule for division between the mother and the auratha first son is as follows: If the son has been dutiful he shall get his father's personal and official belongings. The mother shall get (her own) female slaves. The rest of the estate shall be divided into four shares. The mother shall get three shares and the son one share. On the father's death the eldest son gets a share of the estate because he is the person who will carry on the father's duties. On the death of the mother the eldest daughter shall get her mother's personal belongings and one quarter of the rest of the estate. The father shall get the remaining three quarters. On the death of the father the eldest daughter, if nothing has been given to her and there is property to be divided, shall get a pair of buffaloes, ten cows, three bullocks, and one slave woman who can cook. The mother shall get the rest of the estate.

"On the death of the mother the eldest (first) son, if he has not already received anything shall get a pair of buffaloes, a pair of bullocks, ten cows and three bulls. The father shall get the rest."

As for the share of grand-children the Dhammathatkyaw says:—

"If the eldest brother or eldest sister dies before the parents, then if there is a first grand child by them, those grand-children shall receive half as much as their father's or mother's younger brothers and sisters," but this rule is almost certainly the result of a mere mistake, the writer having misunderstood the provision in the earlier books that the grand-children should "share equally" with their uncles and aunts.

The next important Dhammathat is known as Kaingsa or Maharajadhammathat and is referred to in Manusara Khuemyin as the fourth revision of the Manusara, the third being the Wagaru. It is in Pali and Burmese and was compiled by Kaingsa, otherwise called Manuraja, about A. D. 1630. It contains references to the Dhammathatkyaw and the "Talaing Dhammathats" but rests its authority not on Manu as the older law books did, but on the ipse dixit of the author himself who is called Manuraja. According to Dr. Forchammer it is the first Dhammathat which is distinctively Buddhistic.

It gives the following rules:—

"On the death of the father the son who is competent to bear the father's burden shall get his personal and official belongings, also his lands and house. Of the livestock and deadstock such as metals and grain he shall get one share and the mother three."

The reference to lands in this rule is unexpected, but it probably refers to lands held by the father as an appanage of his office, which are mentioned in this connection in Vilasa, particularly as lands are not mentioned in the following passage, which also describes the property received by the son on his father's death, but are apparently covered by the reference to the father's "office." It will be noted that all the property of which the eldest son gets a quarter share is moveable.

"On the death of the mother the mode of partition between the daughters and father is as follows: The daughter is to get her mother's personal belongings, a pair of bullocks, a pair of buffaloes, 10 cows, 20 goats, and one slave woman who can cook. The father is to get the rest of the property.

"On the death of the father the daughter is to get a married couple of slaves, a pair of bullocks and a fair portion of grain. The mother gets the rest of the property. The rule for partition between the father and sons on the death of the mother is that the son is to get a pair of buffaloes, a pair of bullocks, a pair of cows, a bull, twenty milch goats and three he-goats. The father gets the rest of the property."

From this Dhammathat it would appear that only the eldest son is to get one-fourth of the estate on the death of the father, and that the daughter is only to get certain specified property. So far as the Digest shows, it gives no rules as to the inheritance of grand-children.

The next important Dhammathat is Manuyin which is said to be practically a rendering of Wagaru in verse with some slight additions. It refers to Wagaru and Dhammathatkyaw and follows the older Dhammathats and not Kaingsa. It was compiled about A D. 1750 and was translated into prose a few years later.

It gives the rule for partition between the auratha son and the mother on the death of the father as follows :—

"The son is to get his father's personal and official belongings including lands attached to his office. Of the rest of the property he gets one-fourth and his mother three-fourths.

"On the death of the mother the daughter is to get her mother's personal belongings and one pair of buffaloes and bullocks, ten cows, twenty goats and one slave woman. The father gets the rest.

"On the death of the father the daughter is to get a married couple of slaves, a pair of bullocks and buffaloes and some grain. The mother gets the rest.

"On the death of the mother the son gets two pairs of buffaloes and bullocks, one cow, twenty she goats and three he goats. The other sons shall receive small shares even if there are ten of them."

As for grand children the Manuyin says :—

"The son of the auratha shall receive as much as the youngest of his uncles."

The next Dhammathat is Manugye which was compiled in A.D. 1754. Of it Dr. Forchammer says that it is not really a Code or Digest of Law, but rather an encyclopædic record of existing laws and customs and of the rulings preserved in former Dhammathats, and that it does not attempt to arrange the subject-matter or to explain or reconcile contradictory passages. Like the Hindu Manu what the writer did "was simply to gather the fossil laws of a former generation and mix them indiscriminately with the laws which were current in his age. They do not harmonise with each other but present the appearance of a mechanical mixture in which the materials bear no affinity to each other." Manugye has nevertheless acquired a pre eminent position among the Dhammathats, largely because until the publication of Jardine's Notes on Buddhist Law in 1882-3 it was the only Dhammathat which had been translated into English. In 1859 Major Sparks said of it : "The only Burmese Code of Law which the Courts have had for their guidance is the Dhammathat or Burmese version of the laws of Menoo. This book is in a great measure obsolete, and is no more applicable to the decision of suits of the present day in the Courts of Pegu than are the laws of Alfred in the modern Courts of England. It contains, moreover, a vast number of contradictory statements on matters of grave importance, mingled in almost inextricable confusion with the most puerile absurdities." He admitted, however, that in spite of "the utter want of sequence in its component parts" "some points of this Code have retained their vitality, and are as familiar in the mouths of the people as household words" and he undoubtedly based his Code on it. In 1914 in the case of Ma Nhin Bwin v. U Shwa Gon (27), the Privy Council, referring to "Manu Kyay which for so long had been recognised as the leading guide in the Administration of Justice," said : "It is not seriously disputed that the authority of this text-book where it is clear, as among the Dhammatahts, is of the highest rank," and held that where there is no ambiguity in the rule of Burmese Buddhist Law as recorded in Manugye the other Dhammathats do not require to be appealed to. It is, therefore, clear that Manugye must now be regarded as the Dhammathat of pre eminent importance.

Manugye gives the following rules :—

"On the death of the father the eldest son (tha-hyi) gets the father's personal belongings. Of the rest of the property he gets one-quarter and the mother and the rest of the children three-quarters. On the death of the mother, the daughter gets her mother's personal belongings and the slave woman who cooks. Of the rest of the property the daughter gets one-quarter and the father three.

"On the death of the father the eldest daughter gets one female slave, two cows, two goats, a pair of buffaloes, a plot of paddy land and the seed grain. The mother and the younger daughters get the rest.

"On the death of the mother the eldest son gets one slave, one pair of buffaloes, one pair of oxen, two goats and one plot of paddy land, and the father and younger children (or sons) get the rest. This rule and the last apply only when there is plenty of property."

As for the rights of grand-children the Manugye gives the following rules :—

"If the eldest son (tha-kyi) dies before both his parents, the rule for partition between his son and the uncles and aunts is as follows: If the auratha eldests on (tha-kyi auratha) dies before his parents, then because the eldest brother is regarded as the father, the eldest brother's son shall share equally with the younger brothers. If the eldest daughter (thami-kyi) dies before both her parents the rule of partition between the eldest daughter's daughter and her aunts is as follows:—The eldest sister's daughter shall share equally with the younger sisters, because the eldest sister is regarded as the mother."

The next three Dhammathats in order of date are three compiled by Vannona Kyaw Din, namely, Manusara Shwe Myin, Manu Vannana, cited as Vannana and Vinicchayapakasani cited as Vinicchaya. These were all compiled between A.D. 1770 and 1775.

Manusara Shwemyin professes to be a fifth recension of Manusara, the Wagaru and Kaingsa being the third and fourth recensions. It is based on Wagaru and Kaingsa but takes materials from Manugye also. It gives the following rules :—

"On the father's death the son gets the father's personal belongings and one-quarter of the residue because he takes his father's place. The rest goes to the mother. On the mother's death the son is to get certain cattle and the father the rest, and the father is to make suitable provision for his sons.

On the father's death the daughter is to get a married couple of slaves, certain cattle and a suitable portion of grain, and the mother is to get the rest. The daughter is not to get a quarter of the residue like the son."

I have been unable to find any definite rule in this Dhammathat as to the share of grand-children. Section 60 mentions grand-children after children as heirs and section 61 says that the nearer heirs shall get two shares to the more distant heirs' one. This compilation does not seem to be mentioned in the Digest.

The Vannana which professes to be based on all the earlier Dhammathats, and not only on Wagaru, Kaingsa and Manugye gives the following rules :—

"On the father's death the auratha eldest son gets his father's personal belongings, his office and his official lands, and the mother gets her personal belongings. Of the residue, animate and inanimate, the son gets a quarter and the mother three-quarters.

On the mother's death the daughter gets the mother's personal belongings and also one-fourth of the rest of the property, but lands are not expressly mentioned.

On the mother's death the eldest son gets certain cattle and the father gets the rest, but the father must make suitable provision for the younger sons.

On the father's death the daughter gets a married couple of slaves, certain cattle, a fair portion of grain, and the mother gets the rest."

As for grand-children the Vannana, as I read it, says that on the eldest brother's death his auratha son (child?) gets the same share as his father's younger brothers, and that the eldest sister's children get an equal share with the mother's younger sisters.

The Vinicchaya is said by Dr. Forchammer to omit many of the contradictory, equivocal and superfluous passages in Manugye, Manusara, Shwemyin and Vannana. Its date is supposed to be about A.D. 1775.

It gives the following rules :—

"Partition between mother and sons after the death of the father.

The son gets the father's horse, official equipment and sword. The mother gets the female slaves. Of the rest of the property the son gets one-fourth and the mother three-fourths.

Partition between father and daughters after the death of the mother.

The daughter gets the mother's personal ornaments and clothes. The father gets the male slaves. Of the rest of the property the daughter gets one fourth and the father three-fourths.

Partition between mother and daughters after the death of the father.

The mother takes all the property, animate and inanimate, but if the estate be large the mother should give to the daughter a suitable share.

MAUNG SIN v. MRS. KIRKWOOD.

Partition between father and sons after the death of the mother.

The father takes all the property, but if the estate be large the father should give to the sons a fair share of the grain, one buffalo, one yoke of oxen, ten cows, ten little goats and three he-goats."

As for the shares of grand-children it contains the following rules :—

If the eldest son (tha-kyi) dies, his sons and daughters should share equally with his younger brothers.

If the eldest daughter (thami-akyi) dies, her sons and daughters should share equally with her younger sisters."

The Vicchedani (A. D. 1782) belongs to the same period during which there was evidently a revival of legal learning.

It contains the following rules :—

"If the father dies before the mother and the son takes the father's position, the son gets the father's elephant, pony, clothes, his official lands, and his arms. The mother gets the slave woman. Of the rest of the property, the son gets one-fourth and the mother three-fourths. Even if there are ten sons the rule is the same.

"As for the partition between the father and the daughter on the death of the mother, the daughter is to get her mother's clothes and ornaments, and also two pairs of bullocks, two pairs of buffaloes, ten cows, twenty she-goats, and one slave woman. The father gets the rest of the estate.

"As between mother and daughter on the death of the father the daughter gets a fair portion of grain, a slave, and a pair of bullocks and buffaloes. The mother gets the residue.

"As between father and son on the death of the mother, the son gets two pairs of bullocks and buffaloes, three he-goats, twenty she-goats, and one cow. The father gets all the rest. The rule applies even if there be ten sons."

As for grand-children the Vicchedani says :

"If the eldest brother dies before receiving the parents' inheritance, the children of that eldest brother shall share equally with the younger brothers."

No passage referring to the eldest daughter's children is cited from this Dhammathat in the Digest.

The only other Dhammathat among those cited in the Digest which seems to be regarded as important is that known as Amwebon or "Partition of inheritance." Its date seems to be unknown, but it evidently reproduces the rules of Manugye with immaterial differences in some cases as to the number of animals to be given.

No extracts from it as to the rights of grand-children are cited in the Digest.

The only other text to which it is necessary to refer is what is known as Attasankhepa Vannana generally cited as Attasankhepa. It was compiled by the "Kinwun Mingyi," U Gaung, who subsequently compiled the Digest, and it was first printed at the Burmese Royal Press in Mandalay in A. D. 1882, that is only some four years before the British Annexation of Upper Burma. It is said to be not, strictly speaking, a Dhammathat, that is a compilation giving the law as it was according to the texts, but to give instead the law as in the author's opinion it ought to be. I do not regard this criticism as entirely fair, since the author gives the original texts and then explains their meaning as he understands it, but even if it were true, it is obvious that the work is of the greatest value as representing Burmese Buddhist Law as it was interpreted and, I have no doubt, administered under the last of the Burmese Kings. The author, whom I knew personally, was an undoubted authority on Burmese Buddhist Law and its interpretation, and it cannot be denied that his work carries great weight. It is interesting for the purposes of the present reference because both when it gives the old list of the twelve classes of sons and where it gives another list of sixteen classes of sons, it puts the auratha first and in the latter case it defines the auratha as "a son born of a marraige where the parents on both sides consent and where the young couple cohabit by reason of like desires," and concludes the definition, exactly as the Hindu Law Books do, with the words "Such an auratha son is entitled to take the inheritance of his parents." But immediately afterwards it uses the same word auretha to distinguish between the "eldest" and the "younger" children, and it actually mentions the cases of families where there is no auratha son but only an auratha daughter, and where there is no auratha at all.

MAUNG SIN v. MRS. KIRKWOOD.

As for the shares of the auratha child on the death of one of the parents, it explains the law as follows :—

"As for the partition between mother and son when the father has died, let the son get the father's personal and official belongings, and let the mother retain her personal belongings, the slave women acquired during the marriage and the dwelling house. On the rest of the property, animate and inanimate, including male slaves, let the son have one-fourth and the mother three fourths, but if there are inherited slave women, let the mother have half and the son half. This is the rule for partition between the auratha son and the mother. If there are younger sons and daughters, they shall have no claim to inherit while their mother is alive. They shall inherit only when the mother dies.

As for the partition between father and daughter on the death of the mother, the daughter is to get the mother's personal and official belongings, and the father shall retain his personal and official belongings, the male slaves acquired during the marriage, and the dwelling house. Of the remaining property, including female slaves, the daughter shall get one-fourth and the father three-fourths, but if there are inherited slave men, the father shall have half and the daughter half. This is the rule of partition between the auratha daughters and the father. If there are younger sons and daughters they shall inherit only on the father's death.

"As for the partition between father and son on the death of the mother, the father gets the whole of the property, but if there is a large estate, then let the son got a fair share of the grain, a pair of bullocks, a pair of buffaloes, a bull, two cows, twenty she-goats, three he-goats and other suitable property."

On the death of the father the rule of partition between mother and daughter is similar to that between father and son on the death of the mother.

As for the rights of grand children the Attasankhepa explains the law as follows:—

"If the auratha eldest son or eldest daughter dies, leaving children, while the parents are still alive, those children are 'out of time' grand children and cannot get their parents' full share. Let them get the same share as their youngest uncles and (or) aunts."

There is one other authority to which it may be well to refer shortly, as it is sometimes referred to as an authority on Burmese Buddhist Law, and it has already been mentioned.

In 1859 a "Civil Code of the Province of Pegu" (generally cited as "Sparks' Code") was published by Major Sparks under the authority of the Local Government. The second part of that Code deals with "Burmese Law" and it is mainly based on Dr. Richardson's translation of Manugye which had been published in A. D. 1847.

This Code omits any reference to the rights of the auratha, the rule which it gives being as follows :—

"In the division of an estate between the surviving husband or wife and children, the widow or widower shall take the dwelling house and three-fourths of the estate and the children divide the remaining one-fourth equally between them."

As authority for that rule it cites sections 2 to 5 of the 10th Book of Manugye but the rules there given, which have been quoted above, clearly do not support the rule.

It makes no reference to the rights of grand-children.

From the above survey of the Dhammathats I think that it is fairly clear that the word auratha is commonly used to mean the eldest child, whether son or daughter and that if the eldest child, being a son, is competent on the father's death to take the father's place in the family, or, being a daughter is competent on the mother's death to take the mother's place then he or she is auratha, and on the father's or mother's death is according to the Dhammathats entitled to the father's or mother's personal property and to one-fourth of the rest of the estate, and further that if the eldest child, whether son or daughter, dies without having become entitled to that interest in the estate, his or her children are entitled to share equally in the estate with the younger brothers and sisters of the deceased.

It may be well to justify each of these propositions separately.

It must be admitted that in Hindu Law the early legislators ignored the rights of women and excluded them altogether from inheritance. The original sources on which the Burmese Dhammathats were based, if not actually Hindu Law Books, had passed through Hindu hands and taken a Hindu tinge, and undoubtedly traces of an inferior status accorded to women can be detected in almost all of them. The Vicchedani, when dealing with the partition between brothers and sisters after the death of both parents, actually says: "Though the eldest child be a daughter she does not reach the status of auratha and she must share equally with her younger brother" and one or two of the minor Dhammathats contain similar passages, which I have no doubt were taken from some old book and reproduced Hindu or possibly pre-Hindu ideas. But just as the Dhammathats when translating passages which are evidently taken direct from what may be called the Hindu Law Books use auratha in its original sense of "legitimate" and nevertheless when they come to apply it to Burmese Buddhist Law use it in the special sense of "an eldest born child who is competent," so although they reproduce passages which follow the Hindu Law in saying that a daughter can never be auratha, nevertheless when they come to the actual division of the property of the estate of a Burmese family they put the daughter practically, and in some cases entirely, in the same position as the son. Written law is eminently conservative and tends to lag far behind custom and if the law as given in the authorities on which the Burmese Law Books are based has been altered in those books, it may be taken as certain that the alteration is due to very firmly established custom and that the tendency suggested by the alteration has probably gone considerably further in custom than it has in law. The Burmese Buddhist Law Books leave no room for doubt that from the first there was a strong tendency towards equality between the sexes in matters of inheritance, and I think that the fact that this tendency appears so strongly even in the earliest of the Dhammathats, warrants my opinion that if the eldest child is a daughter she is in Burmese Buddhist Law to be regarded as auratha just as a son is, if he is the eldest child.

The question then arises whether if the eldest child dies in infancy, the next child succeeds as auratha. The Dhammathats, so far as I know, give no answer to this question, though, as I have said, the Attasankhepa considers the possibility of a case in which there is no auratha but only younger children. I think from my experience of cases under Burmese Buddhist Law for more than 20 years, that there can be no doubt that children who do not grow up are always disregarded and that the eldest child who reaches an age at which he or she would be able to take the place of the father or mother in case of death would always be regarded as auratha.

There can, I think, be no doubt that the Dhammathats which give a special share to the eldest child who is competent to take the place of father or mother contemplate a family in which the auratha is living in the family house and does actually take the place of the parent. Indeed I doubt whether the Dhammathats contemplated the auratha's taking away the special share unless he or she was ousted from the position of head of the family by the surviving parent's marrying again. Some of the Dhammathats would deprive a son or daughter who does not live with the family and take the father's or mother's place of the auratha child's share, vide, the texts cited in sections 36, 37, 40, 41 and 62 of the Digest, but I think that in this case as in certain other cases, e. g., the cases of adopted and step-children, the necessity for joint living may now be considered as archaic and obsolete and may be disregarded.

I have already said that, in my opinion, the eldest child who grows up is auratha by right of birth, and that it makes no difference to the status of auratha which parent dies first. It is arguable, as indeed it is argued in this case, that on the death of the father the eldest son, though he be not the eldest child, succeeds to the father's place and that on the death of the mother the eldest daughter, though she be not the eldest child, succeeds to the mother's place, but I do not think that this view is in accordance with the meaning of the Dhammathats or with the facts of human nature. If, as I think established, auratha means the eldest child, then the question would seem to be settled by a reference to Wagaru, one of the earliest of the Dhammathats, which in this connection uses the words "auratha first son" of the son in the Burmese text and "auratha daughter" of the daughter in the Pali text, translating the Pali words into Burmese as "eldest daughter," and to Attasankhepa which actually uses the word auratha in this connection in the case of both son and daughter. As for the facts of human nature it seems to me unlikely that in a primitive family, and the Burmese family is still primitive, the eldest child if a son would tolerate a younger sister's taking the mother's place, or if a daughter would submit to her younger brother's taking the father's place, and in each case taking a large share of the family property.

The rights of grand-children must now be considered.

If the eldest child, whether son or daughter, actually became entitled by the death of the father or mother, to the auratha share, his or her children would naturally succeed to that share, and the rule that, if the eldest child dies before becoming entitled, the grand-children by that child should succeed to a similar, though somewhat reduced, share is intelligible. But if there is no auratha till one or other of the parents has died, then the rule about the rights of grand-children seems to me to be unintelligible, and I think that it is clear that that rule must involve the assumption that a son or daughter can, as the text of Attasankhepa itself suggests, be auratha while both parents are alive, and supports my conclusion that the eldest child is auratha from the time when he or she becomes competent to take the place of the father or mother in case of death.

The law as expounded in the chief Dhammathats having thus been considered it is now necessary to consider the case law.

The earliest case seems to be that of Ma Thi v. Ma Nu (28), where in answer to an argument that it is the eldest grand-child who gets the special share it was said that "the passages quoted from the different Dhammathats, do not appear . . . . . to lay down any rule as to inequality of shares among grand-children . . . . . sprung from the same father." The rule of equal division has since become well-established and it may now be taken as settled law that in spite of the references in some of the Dhammathats, e.g., Vilasa and Vannana, to the "auratha grand-child," the children of the auratha divide the special share between them equally.

The next case was that of Mi Saung v. Mi Kun (18), where the following passage occurs: "The position of the eldest sor, the auratha or 'thagyi' as he is called, is superior to that of the others . . . . . In the division under section 50 (of Manugye 10) the auratha has first choice. At sections 15, 22, and elsewhere it is said he takes the father's place: this may be when the father is dead or when both parents are dead. He is superseded if deaf or blind by a younger brother under section 36; and possibly section 35 imposes on the auratha the burden of maintaining a brother helpless from disease. He has a duty to perform; . . . . . The Manuwunnana section 10 and Manushwemyin section 12 describe this duty as the taking up of the father's burden or responsibility; and it is when this burden is assumed that the eldest son is to get the elephant, horse, sword, goblet, betel-box, and other articles used by his father. Under certain circumstances the eldest daughter, at least when there is no son competent to assume the parental duty, takes the paraphernalia of the deceased mother, as at section 3 of Book 10 of the Manugye, where she takes her mother's ornaments, clothes, and the slaves who cooked her rice. These rights to paraphernalia, though expressly stated in the three Dhammathats above quoted, are not even mentioned in Sparks' Code. They are rights additional to the fractional share of the inheritance, which on the death of one parent the eldest son or eldest daughter is entitled to demand from the surviving parent."

After citing the section of Sparks' Code which I have already cited above the learned Judge went on to say: "The two Assessors are distinctly of opinion that this is bad law: they say they never heard of the younger children sharing in the one-quarter share given to the eldest son or of this share being chargeable with the maintenance of the younger children. They say that where the Dhammathats award an eldest son a quarter share, he takes it absolutely."

I have quoted these passages at length because they express the views of Sir John Jardine who was the pioneer among Judges in the field of Burmese Buddhist Law, and his opinions are entitled to great weight.

In Maung Po Lat v. Mi Po Le (29) the same learned Judge held that an only daughter has not after her father's death and before partition with her mother an interest in the estate capable of alienation.

The following passage in the judgment is relevant to the present enquiry: "While I am of opinion on the authority of many texts, my general impression of the equality sought by Buddhist Law, and what I believe to be the notion of the people, that an eldest daughter has certain rights to share in the joint property of the family . . . . . I believe that these rights of eldest children are seldom exacted." If that opinion is true, the fact might explain the omission of any reference to those rights in Sparks' Code. The learned Judge was, of course, right in holding that the eldest child if a daughter cannot on the death of her father claim partition of the estate from her mother. According to some of the Dhammathats she might, if there was a large estate, get certain property, but that right has, I think, become obsolete and I doubt whether any Court would now enforce it.

In Ma On v. Ko Shwe O (30) it was held that on the death of one of the parents the eldest son or daughter may claim his or her share. This statement of the law is clearly too broad, and the judgment has since been overruled on other grounds.

In Maung Sa Ko v. Mi Han (31) the learned Judicial Commissioner of Upper Burma held that an only son on his father's death has a right as against his mother to one-quarter of the estate. That is, of course, correct according to the Dhammathats.

In Ma Me v. Ma Myit (11) the learned Judicial Commissioner of Lower Burma held that where there is a son (by a first wife) competent to assume the parental duty an eldest daughter by a second wife cannot claim a share in her deceased father's estate during the lifetime of her mother, and said: "There are authorities for holding that the eldest son or the eldest daughter may claim one-fourth of the property during the life-time of the surviving parent, but this rule, in my opinion, means the eldest son, or the eldest daughter where there are no sons." I do not think that there is any passage in the Dhammathats which warrants the words "where there are no sons," and I think that the statement as it stands is incorrect. The eldest child if a competent son can claim on the death of the father, and the eldest child if a competent daughter can claim on the death of the mother. In the case under reference the claimant was not the eldest child, so her claim was bad.

In the case of Ma Min Tha v. Ma Naw (32), a younger daughter sued, while her mother was alive, to redeem property mortgaged by her mother and it was said that under Buddhist Law children have no vested interests in parental property during the life-time of either parent. The learned Judge apparently overlooked the special rights of the auratha, and to that extent the statement was too wide.

In the case of Ma Mya Thu v. Maung Po Thin (4) it was said that the eldest son, if competent, is the representative of his deceased father and in that capacity is entitled to one-fourth of the inheritance, that where there are both sons and daughters the eldest son is preferred to any daughter, and that the rights of the eldest son or daughter pass to the next eldest as representative of the father or mother. In that particular case the eldest-born son had died young and the only surviving child who was a younger son sued his mother on his father's death for the auratha son's quarter share. The proposition that the eldest son is preferred to any daughter was, therefore, merely an obiter dictum and the reasons given for it were not convincing. The proposition that the rights of the eldest son or daughter pass to the next eldest would, in my opinion, be correct if confined to the case where the eldest-born died young, that is, before becoming competent, or could never be competent.

In Ma Gun Bon v. Maung Po Kywe (26) the dispute was between a niece and children of a step child, but the following remarks of the learned Judicial Commissioner of Upper Burma are relevant to the matter now under consideration. "Full representation is not allowed to grand-children, and partial representation is granted grudgingly. If the eldest son or daugter die before the parents, the children are given the share of a younger brother or sister on account of the superior claims of the auratha heir. But the share of the children of a deceased brother or sister other than the auratha is reduced to a quarter of a brother or sister's share."

(29) S. J. L. B. 212.
(30) S. J. L. B. 378.

In Maung Pan v. Ma Hnyi (33) it was assumed that where the eldest child was a son he was auratha, although apparently it was the mother who died first, and it is to be noted that the daughter who succeeded him in the management of the family property on his adoption into another, family did not claim the auratha share.

In Anleathan v. Mi Tha Ta U (20) the learned Judge who decided Ma Mya Thu's case (4) said, again obiter, that on the death of the father an eldest daughter cannot claim a one-fourth share if there are sons, and referred to his judgment in Ma Mya Thu's case (4). It is, of course, true that an eldest daughter cannot claim a quarter share from her mother on the death of her father, but it would be equally true whether there were younger sons or not.

Maung Seik Kaung v. Maung Po Nyein (12) is the first reported case on the Buddhist Law of Inheritance decided by this Court and the first decided after the Digest was published. The texts and the earlier cases were considered and with reference to the dictum in Ma Mya Thu v. Maung Po Thin (4) that where there are both sons and daughters the eldest competent son is preferred to any daughter, it was said that the rules in the Dhammathats "seem to proceed on the principle of a son getting a portion if his father dies and the daughter if her mother dies, but the case of both daughters and sons is not distinctly provided for." The case then under consideration was a claim by the eldest son against the father on the death of the mother and the conclusion reached was couched in the following terms: "In the present case the eldest son was the eldest child, and having regard to the points just noted that it is not shown that a daughter must get a share because the deceased parent is the mother and that there is a tendency to prefer the eldest child, we are brought to the following conclusion that the son should not fail in this suit on the ground that it is a daughter who can claim and not a son. It may not be very clear from the Dhammathats now available that a son can claim a one-fourth share from his father when he lives separately and when the father does not marry again, though this has been held: but we do not think it open to reasonable doubt that when the father does marry again the eldest son, especially if he be the eldest child, can claim a one fourth share of the general joint estate of the parents." It is not necessary for the purposes of the present reference to consider whether or not the actual decision in that case is correct but it has been doubted. I have suggested above that one might expect the law to be that the eldest child, who being a son who has taken the place of a deceased father, or being a daughter has taken the place of a deceased mother, and who is ousted from that place by the re-marriage of the surviving parent, should be entitled to claim the special share allotted to such a son or daughter, but Burmese Buddhist Law is not always logical and the law possibly may be other than what one would expect.

The case of Maung Hmu v. Maung Po Thin (34) is only interesting because it was one in which an eldest son had previously on the death of his father sued his mother for a one-fourth share of the estate and had obtained it.

In Maung San Dwa v. Ma Min Tha (21) an eldest surviving son, who was not either the eldest son, there having been two elder brothers, or the eldest child since there were five children before him, sued the mother after the death of the father for one-fourth of the estate and it was held on the authority of Ma Mya Thu v. Maung Po Thin (4), that he was entitled to succeed. The learned Judge seems to have overlooked the fact that the correctness of the ruling in Ma Mya Thu's case (4) had already been doubted in the judgment in Maung Seik Kaung v. Maung Po Nyein

(33) U. B. R. (1897-01), II, 104.

(34) 1 L. B. R. 50.

(12), and as his ruling was never officially published it was probably regarded at the time as bad law, and, in my opinion, it may still be so regarded.

In Ma Saw Ngwe v. Ma Thein Yin (27) the position of grand-children was considered at some length, and it was held that "among grand-children whose parents have predeceased their grand-parents the only one who ranks with the surviving uncles and aunts is the eldest representative of the eldest child." That judgment is contrary to the law as stated in Ma Gun Bon v. Maung Po Kywe (23), and was written by the same learned Judge whose decisions in Ma Mya Thu's case (4) and Anleathan's case (20) have already been questioned. It was based on a rule which occurs with some ambiguity in one or two Dhammathats only and I have already suggested that that rule, if it ever existed, has long been obsolete. I think, therefore, that this ruling is bad law.

In Ma Nan Gyaw v. Maung Shwe Ket (16) a Single Judge of this Court, following Ma Mya Thu's case (4) and Anleathan's case (20), held that a daughter is postponed to sons, but the ruling in that case was not officially reported and, for reasons which I have already given, was in my opinion mistaken.

The next case in order of time is the Full Bench case of Ma Thin v. Ma Wa Yon (13). It deals with the claim of an only daughter to one-fourth of the estate as against her mother on her re-marriage, and it decided that the claim was good. It does not of course decide that the eldest child being a daughter is entitled to get the quarter share if her mother does not re-marry, and, as I have said, I do not think that it is necessary for the purposes of the present reference to consider the law as to the effect of the re-marriage of the surviving parent.

Tun Myaing v. Ba Tun (3) deals with the converse case of the re-marriage of the father, but the claimant was the auratha son's son, and it was decided that as there were surviving sons the grand-child could not sue. The ruling is relevant to the present enquiry because it stated that "the eldest-born son (meaning possibly the eldest-born child being a son, since in that case there were no daughters) is the auratha by right but he does not attain the complete status as such till he attains his majority and becomes fit to assume his father's duties and responsibilities. If he dies before he attains his majority, or if he is incompetent to fulfil the prescribed conditions, his next younger brother subject to the same conditions succeeds to his position as auratha. If the eldest son attains his majority and fulfils the prescribed conditions and then dies before his parents, his position as auratha remains unfilled and the next brother does not succeed to it." If this statement of the law be read as including daughters and sisters equally with sons and brothers, then I believe it to be correct.

The case of Ma Kyi Kyi v. Ma Thein (17) is relevant only as establishing the principle of equal division among children after the death of both parents, that is as abolishing as obsolete the special shares allotted by some of the Dhammathats to the auratha and other elder children on such partition. That principle has, in my opinion, rightly been applied to partition among grand-children who get a special share as children of the auratha.

In Po Sein v. Po Min (25) it was held by this Court: "If the Orasa son or daughter predeceases his or her parents, his or her son, or his or her children together receive the same share as their youngest uncle or aunt," and the learned Judge who wrote the judgment went on to say: "This is strictly confined, in all the texts, to the children of the Orasa or eldest son or daughter. In my opinion the rule relates to the Orasa son or daughter, strictly so-called. There is no indication that it has any reference to the eldest surviving son or daughter, unless he or she is technically the Orasa." With that statement of the law I entirely agree.

In the case of Mi Min Din v. Mi Hle (19), in Upper Burma, it was held according to the head-note that "eldest-born son" means the eldest son and not necessarily the eldest child, but it is difficult to extract any express decision to that effect from the judgment. What was decided was that a daughter of an eldest son, who was not the eldest child but whose elder sister had become a nun, was entitled to an equal share with her uncles and aunts in her grand-parents' estate on the ground that her father was auratha, and it was suggested that in the same family both the eldest son and the eldest daughter can claim the special share, usually called the auratha share, allowed by the Dhammathats. With all respect for so learned an authority on Buddhist Law as Sir George Shaw, I am of opinion that that suggestion was mistaken, and that the true rule is that it is the eldest competent child, whether son or daughter, who is auratha and as such is, on the death of the father or mother as the case may be, entitled to the auratha share of the family property.

In Thi Tu v. Maung Bya (14) it was held that on the death of the mother the eldest daughter in a family of five daughters and no sons was entitled as against her father and sisters to one-fourth of the estate. That ruling was doubtless correct.

In Ma Thin v. Ma Nyein E (35), a Single Judge of this Court, following the mistaken ruling in Ma Saw Ngwe v. Ma Thein Yin (24), held that it is only the eldest representative of the eldest child who ranks with surviving uncles and aunts. That ruling was not officially reported and may, I think, be disregarded.

In Ma Hnin Gaing v. Ma Tha Li (36) a Single Judge of this Court held, following the earlier rulings, that "if the first born son dies in infancy the status of auratha is capable of devolving on the next eldest competent son and does so devolve when he (the next eldest competent son) attains his majority, provided that he is affected by none of the disabilities or disqualifications mentioned in the texts on the subject," and, further, that such an auratha son can transmit the superior rights to his issue. That ruling was not officially reported but if it be read with the addition that disqualification by reason of living separately is obsolete, I think that it is probably good law.

In Mi Saw Myin v. Mi Shwe Thin (37) it was held in Upper Burma that the auratha son's quarter share allotted on the death of his father is not subject to any rights of the mother but is his own absolutely, and that ruling is, in my opinion, undoubtedly correct, but the judgment does not seem to distinguish very clearly between the rights of the auratha son or daughter on the death of the father or mother respectively and their moral claims are obsolete rights on the death of the mother or father respectively.

The case of Ma Ein Thu v. Maung Hla Dun (15) was one in which the question of the rights of grand-children arose and it was held that where the eldest child was a son who died in infancy, the son of the next eldest child, who was a daughter and who grew up, was entitled to share equally with his mother's younger sister. That decision was, in my opinion, correct, but the judgment seems to suggest that if there had been a son surviving instead of two daughters, the son might possibly have been auratha to the exclusion of the elder sister and that view, I think, would be mistaken. The ruling was not, however, officially reported.

The rights of grand-children were again considered in the case of Ma Su v. Ma Tin (26) where it was held that the children of a second child who was a son (the eldest child who was also a son having died in infancy) were entitled to the auratha grand-children's special share. This ruling interpreted the decision in the case of Po Sein v. Po Min (25) as meaning that all the auratha grand children are jointly entitled to the special share and applied the principle of equal division to them. It, therefore, in effect overruled Ma Thin v. Ma Nyein E (35) and Ma Saw Ngwe v. Ma Thein Yin (24). It is to be noted that it accepts the principle that, in applying the rules of the Burmese Buddhist Law of Inheritance, children who die young may be disregarded.

In Lo Zan v. Maung Nyo (2) the rights of grand children were again in issue. The eldest-born child in that case was a daughter who died after her father but before her mother, the next child was a son who died in infancy, and the only other child a son who survived both parents. The eldest-born child's son sued his uncle for a half share of the estate, and it was held that because there was a son the eldest-born child being a daughter could not be auratha and that, therefore, the son of the eldest daughter though she was the eldest-born child was not entitled to the special share allotted to auratha grand-children. If my view that the eldest-born child who grows up and is competent is auratha is correct that ruling was mistaken and it certainly does not follow the law as set forth in Po Sein v. Fo Min (25), but it is interesting because it rejects as untenable the view that there can be two children in the same family whose children would be entitled to the special share as grand-children.

In Ma Thit v. Maung Tun Tha (38) it was held that "the right given to the eldest son of claiming a one-fourth share of the joint estate on his father's death must be exercised as soon as possible after that event and that if the option is not exercised without unreasonable delay it lapses altogether." That decision, as will appear later, was overruled by the Privy Council which held that the auratha son's share vests on the father's death and may be claimed at any time within the period of limitation.

In Maung Ka Gu v. Ma Hnin Ngwe (39) a second son whose elder brother, the eldest-born child, had lived to the age of 25 but had died before his father, sued his mother on his father's death to recover the auratha son's quarter share of the estate, and it was held that because the eldest son attained the status of auratha before he died, the second son did not succeed to the position of auratha and that position remained unfilled. With that decision I entirely agree.

In Nga E v. Nga Aung Thein (40) the learned Judicial Commissioner of Upper Burma said: "I think it is clear on a perusal of the texts contained in section 30 of the Kinwun Mingyi's Digest, Volume I, that where the Dhammathats give the eldest son a right to one-fourth as against the mother on the death of the father they refer to the auratha son or, in other words, the eldest capable son. It follows that where all the sons are minors there is no auratha son and the right in question does not accrue."

The case of Mi Hlaing v. Mi Thi (41) was one in which an eldest child who was a daughter sued her mother for a one fourth share of the estate on the death of her father, and it was held that on the death of the father the eldest child being a daughter is not entitled to claim the one-fourth share. The learned Judicial Commissioner in that case said again that "the rules relating to the eldest son's or eldest daughter's right to one-fourth must be clearly understood in both cases to refer to the auratha son, i.e., the eldest capable son and the auratha daughter, i.e., the eldest capable daughter."

In Mi The O v. Mi Swe (5) the Upper Burma Court held that on the death of the father the eldest child being a daughter cannot claim the one-fourth share from her mother even though the mother marries again. That is, what one would expect the rule to be if, as I have suggested, the right to claim on the re-marriage of the surviving parent is merely the right of the auratha who has been ousted from the deceased parent's place to leave the family and take away the auratha share which vested in him or her on the death of the parent; but the question whether or not that suggestion represents the law as it is does not arise for decision on this reference.

The following passage in the case of Nga Lu Daw v. Mi Mo Yi (6) is pertinent to the present enquiry: "The eldest son is generally but not necessarily the auratha son. The son who in case his father dies or becomes incapacitated is competent to take his place in the family is the auratha son. If the eldest son be blind or otherwise incapacitated his younger brother, if competent, is the auratha son.....Consequently, until the eldest son reaches the age of discretion there can be no auratha son in the family. Again, though the eldest son cannot claim one-fourth of the estate from his father on the death of his mother he can claim that share from his mother on the death of his father because he then takes his father's place in the family.....If competent to replace his father in case of the latter's death he becomes the auratha son as soon as he becomes so competent and does not have to wait till his father's death to attain that position." With all this I entirely agree, and I would add that, in my opinion, similar principles apply also in the case of a daughter if she and not a son is the eldest-born.

In Maung Po Hman v. Maung Tin (1) the first born child was a daughter and there was one younger child, a son. An adopted son of the daughter claimed to share equally with the son on the ground that the daughter being the eldest born child was auratha. This Court, following Po Zan v. Maung Nyo (2), held that, because there was a son, no daughter could be auratha. In my opinion that decision, like the one on which it was based, was mistaken in so far as it held that younger sons oust eldest daughters, but I agree with the statement that "there is no authority for treating one son as the auratha entitled to claim a fourth share on the death of the father and in the same family allowing the children of an eldest son or daughter who predeceased the parents special treatment at the time of ultimate partition," and that it cannot be held "that the children of an eldest son or daughter who predeceased the parents are entitled to a preferential share except when such eldest son or daughter at the time of his or her death was the auratha child, i. e., had attained the complete status of auratha."

The Full Bench case of Maung Shwe Po v. Maung Pein (42) is interesting for the purposes of the present reference only, because its suggestion that the auratha has an option and can either claim the one fourth share or wait till the death of both parents and come in with the other children seems to have since been overruled by the Privy Council in the case of Maung Tun Tha v. Ma Thit (43).

In Maung Kyi Hlaing v. Ma Htu (44) where the claim of an auratha son to a quarter share on the death of his father was contested on the ground that the quarter share could only be claimed when the mother married again, it was held that the auratha son can get the quarter share whether the mother marries again or not. That view is clearly in accordance with the Dhammathats.

In the Full Bench reference, Ma Sein Ton v. Ma Son (45), the right of an eldest daughter to get certain property on the death of her father, which right, as I have said, I believe to be obsolete, was resurrected, and it was said that, "subject to any claim by the eldest son to certain specified property and to a quarter share of the joint property and any claim by the eldest daughter to certain specified property, a Burmese Buddhist widow has an absolute right of disposal over the whole of the joint property of herself and her late husband as against the children of the marriage," or, as it was put by another of the learned Judges: "On the death of one parent the surviving parent inherits all their joint property: if, however, the eldest son or daughter is grown up, he or she is entitled to certain specified property of the deceased and in the case of the eldest son to a one-fourth share of the bulk of the estate." The first of these statements, which according to the head-note was the ruling of the Full Bench, clearly has a basis in the Dhammathats and may, I think, be taken as correct subject to the qualification that, in my opinion, the rights of both the son and the daughter to certain specified property are obsolete, but the second statement of the law is obviously too generally expressed and is, in my opinion, mistaken if it means that on the death of the mother an auratha daughter is not entitled to one-fourth of the joint estate.

The rights of grand-children again arose for consideration in Chan Tha v. Mi Mai Pyu (46), in which my learned brother Maung Kin, J., followed Po Sein v. Po Min (25) and Ma Kyi Kyi v. Ma Thein (17), and held that the son of an eldest child, a son who predeceased both his parents, was entitled to share equally with his father's younger brother.

The case of Maung Tun Tha v. Ma Thit (43) is important because in it the Privy Council overruled the decision of this Court in the same case [Ma Thit v. Maung Tun Tha (38)] and held that what the auratha son becomes entitled to on the death of his father is a definite one-fourth part of the estate and that he is entitled to claim that one fourth part within any period that is not outside the period fixed by Article 123 of the Indian Limitation Act.

According to these rulings the present state of the case-law would seem to be as follows:—

(1) When the eldest-born child is a competent son, he is on the death of his father entitled to a one-fourth share in the parent's estate and that one-fourth share vests in him from the date of his father's death. For the purposes of the present reference it is unnecessary to enquire whether Burmese Buddhist Law in this connection makes the distinction between "jointly acquired" and "separate" property which has been recognised in other connections, and, if so, whether the eldest-born child, if a competent son, has any right to claim a specific share in the father's or mother's separate property, but it may be noted that the rulings tend to confine the share to the "jointly acquired property" while the Dhammathats generally seem to make no distinction between joint and separate property.

(2) When the eldest born child is a competent daughter and there are no sons, that daughter is on the death of her mother entitled to a similar one-fourth share in the estate.

(3) When the eldest born child is a competent daughter and there are sons, as in the present case, this Court has hitherto held that the daughter is not entitled to the one-fourth share. That decision or rather course of decisions I believe to be wrong and I would overrule it. It is, in my opinion, contrary to the Dhammathats from Vilasa and Wagaru to Manugye and Attasankhepa, and it is based on what I consider to be an unwarrantable assumption that in the passages where the Dhammathats award the quarter share to a daughter they must be considering a case where there are no sons. That assumption seems to be founded on certain passages in a few Dhammathats which record archaic rules taken from pre-Buddhistic Law Books and is contrary to the strong tendency towards equal treatment of the sexes which is so marked a feature of the same Dhammathats where they disregard the ancient rules and are, therefore, almost certainly influenced by Burmese Buddhist customs. The rules in Manugye on this point seem clear, and there is nothing in them to suggest that in the rule giving to the eldest born child if a competent daughter the quarter share, only the case of a family in which there are no sons is considered. The Attasankhepa, in my opinion, makes the contrary perfectly clear, since in the passage dealing with the eldest daughter's claim it refers to younger "sons and daughters." I would, therefore, overrule the decisions to the effect that sons are preferred to daughters and would hold that where the eldest born child is a competent daughter she is auratha and is on the death of her mother entitled to the quarter share whether there are younger sons or not.

(4) When the eldest-born child is a competent son and the mother dies or when the eldest born child is a competent daughter and the father dies, such son or daughter cannot claim the quarter share. So far as Upper Burma is concerned the first part of this proposition is supported by Nga Lu Daw v. Mi Mo Yi (6) and the second by Mi The O v. Mi Swe (5) and Mi Hlaing v. Mi Thi (41). So far as Lower Burma is concerned the cases of Ma Min Tha v. Ma Naw (32) and Maung Po Lat v. Mi Po Le (29) may be taken as supporting the rule in respect of the daughter, but I do not think that either as regards the son or the daughter the law on this point can be regarded as having yet been definitely settled.

(5) As for the rights of grand-children it was held in Ma Su v. Ma Tin (26) that the auratha son's children are entitled to the special share allotted to them in the Dhammathats and in Ma Ein Thu v. Maung Hla Dun (15) that the auratha daughter's children were similarly entitled while in Maung Po Hman v. Maung Tin (1) it was said that it is the children of the auratha as such, whether son or daughter, who get the special share. I think, therefore, that it may now be taken as settled law that it is the children of the auratha as such who are entitled to preferential treatment.

In the light of the conclusions to which the above consideration of the Dhammathats and the case-law has led, I would answer the questions referred as follows :—

(1) The eldest-born child who is competent to take the place of the father or mother acquires the status of auratha on becoming so competent and can acquire that status before the death of either parent.

(2) If the eldest-born child is a daughter and reaches an age at which she is competent to take her mother's place, no son can become auratha either before or after his father's death.

(3) The status of auratha in no way depends on the death of either parent. The eldest born competent child is auratha in any case.

(4) There can never be two aurathas in a family. If a son or daughter dies after acquiring the status of auratha, there is no auratha in the family.

(5) Sons are not as such preferred to daughters as auratha. If the eldest born child is a son and is competent he is auratha. If the eldest-born child is a daughter and is competent she is auratha.

(6) In a family where the eldest born child is a daughter and is competent, there can be no auratha son and there can be no son whose children have a right to preferential treatment in the division of the parents' estate.

(7) If the eldest-born child is a daughter and is competent she is auratha and as auratha can on her mother's death claim from her father a quarter share of the estate. If she dies before becoming entitled to that share, her children have a right to preferential treatment in the division of the estate.

DUCKWORTH, J.—I agree with the judgments of my learned brothers, Maung Kin and Heald, JJ.

Since they very largely, though on better considered and more ample grounds, arrive at the same opinion as I did in my separate Order of Reference, I need write very little more.

After weighing the Dhammathats quoted, and the use of the words therein, my conclusion is that "auratha" (a very loosely used term), means nothing more than "eldest legitimate issue, male or female." The term has been much misused, since it does not necessarily follow that the child who is auratha, whilst both parents are alive, will be the child who can obtain a one fourth share on the death of one parent. This depends on the sex of the parent who dies first. At the same time I consider that I fell into an error in my Order of Reference, when I stated that, until one parent died, there was technically no auratha. There is, and the auratha then is the eldest child, irrespective of sex, legally begotten, who is of age and competent.

I will take, as an example, the following family—

1. Daughter,
2. Son,
3. Daughter,
4. Son, all legally begotten.

The eldest issue is female. Then, whilst both parents are alive, she is, if of age and competent to take her mother's place, the auratha. If the mother dies first of the two parents this eldest daughter is entitled to the one fourth share, and no question then arises of a right of representation for her family, if any. If, on the other hand, the father dies first of the two parents, then the eldest daughter, though auratha, cannot claim the one-fourth share, which lapses, neither can the eldest son succeed as auratha. If the eldest daughter, after attaining majority and competency predeceases her parents, then her issue alone is entitled to preferential treatment, in comparison with the other grandchildren, when both of the parents have died. On the other hand, if the family consisted of :—

(1) Son,
(2) Daughter,
(3) Son,
(4) Daughter, all legally begotten, then, whilst both parents are alive, the eldest son, if of age and competent, would be the auratha, and if the father died first of the two parents, he would be entitled to the one fourth share. If the mother died first, then this eldest son could not claim that one-fourth share, which lapses. Again, if this eldest son, after he had attained majority and competency, predeceased both parents, his issue alone would be entitled to preferential treatment.

This, I think, renders the position clear.

The point is that, if a son is not the first-born child, he can never be auratha, unless the eldest child dies before reaching majority or competency, and then only when the eldest child is a male. It is very doubtful, whether, according to the Dhammthats another can become auratha in place of the deceased eldest daughter. There is some authority for a brother succeeding a brother, but not for the converse case,—and then only in relation to the one fourth share. Here I must point out that I can find nothing in the Dhammathats regarding "the eldest surviving children" being recognised as auratha, so as to claim the one-fourth share.

Amongst the Burmese people, generally, there is no doubt that the eldest legitimate child, whether it be a son or daughter, is regarded as taking the place of the parent of the same sex, when that parent dies. The saying "Itko gyi hlyin apa aya: Ama gyi hlyin ami aya" is to my knowledge, in common use, especially in the old Royalist Districts of Upper Burma, such as Mandalay, Shwebo, Kyaukse, and Meiktila, and this is a very strong indication, as pointed out by Mr. May Oung on page 223 of his work on Buddhist Law, of what general popular opinion is. Moreover, this opinion was no doubt that of the late Kinwun Min Gyi, U Gaung, when he compiled the Attathankhepa Dhammathat, and therefore, this expression of his opinion on the subject should carry due weight, inasmuch as he was a great scholar in regard to the Dhammathats, and was possessed of the widest knowledge of his fellow-countrymen.

It must be borne in mind that, in dealing with Buddhist Law, which was an effort to purge and improve Hinduism, we must disabuse our minds of such ideas of the "aurasa" son as emanate from that Religion and Law. The position of women, as such, is entirely different under Buddhist Law, and shows a great advance on Hinduism. This alone should be sufficient to place us on our guard. It is to be noted, too, that in Burmese house-holds, the eldest daughter, when the eldest child, holds a particularly influential position.

In regard to the former opinion that the Dhammathats regarded the son as being superior to the daughter, it is clear that the sections referred to, more especially sections 140 and 150, deal with distributions of estate, after both parents have passed away, and such rules have been disregarded by this Court when it held that the estate should be distributed in equal shares. Moreover, these and other sections do not, so far as I can find, give the son a larger share than the daughter, unless he is actually the eldest-born child of the family. In this respect, I am in agreement with Maung Kin, J.'s opinion, and consider that, inasmuch as it is clear that the Dammathats contemplate the eldest child, when a daughter and competent, even in a family consisting of sons and daughters, being entitled to a one-fourth share on the death of the mother, the matter is concluded. In this connection too, I think that Mr. May Oung is right, when he suggests that sections 2 and 3 and sections 4 and 5 of the Manukye must respectively be read together. The first pair of sections then deal with what is to happen on the death of the mother and the second pair of sections with what is to take place upon the death of the father, in each case, of course, before the other parent. Further, the History of the Law on the subject, (dealt with admirably by Mr. May Oung on pages 221, 222 and 223 of his work) is clearly in favour of a female auratha, when the female parent dies first and the eldest issue of the marriage is a daughter.

In regard to the children of the eldest child who predeceases his or her parents, after reaching majority and competency, it seems that, according to the Dhammathats, only the eldest grand-child (Mye U or Auratha Mye) can, strictly speaking, obtain a preferential share, but this question is not now before us, and the cases of Ma Kyi Kyi v. Ma Thein (17) and Ma Su v. Ma Tin (26) require no discussion in this connection.

It is perfectly clear that section 163 of the Digest applies to families consisting of both sons and daughters, and Twomey, J. fully recognised this in Ma Ein Thu's case (15) when he remarked:—"The texts cited in section 163 give the issue of the eldest daughter a share equal to that of the youngest of his aunts, and there seems to be no authority for holding that these texts apply exclusively to families consisting of daughters only." It is to be regretted, perhaps that he overlooked this, when dealing with the case of Maung Po Hman v. Maung Tin (1). As a matter of fact, these texts, when read in the Burmese, make it clear that they do not apply solely to families consisting of daughters.

I would reply to the questions referred in the same manner as my learned brother Maung Kin, J.

ROBINSON, C. J.—I concur in the replies proposed by my brother Maung Kin.

It is, no doubt, true that the questions referred were too widely stated but this arose from several causes. The appeal was based on, and argued as involving, the position and rights of an Orasa. Plaintiffs could not claim a preferential share as being the children of the eldest child and thus the appeal centred round the question of the Orasa; whether a son always was preferred as Orasa to a daughter even when the latter was the eldest child and whether the question as to which would ultimately become the Orasa would depend on which parent died first. The authorities also were confused and the true meaning of Orasa had not been clearly understood, the term being loosely used in more than one sense. The result of this Reference will, it is hoped, clear up many points that were in doubt.

The appeal will now be put down for disposal in accordance with the findings of the Full Bench.

A finding of an Appellate Court which is based on a consideration of the evidence in the case is unassailable in second appeal. [p. 88, col. 2 p. 89, col 1.]

The question of onus of proof loses its importance when both parties to a litigation have adduced evidence in support of their respective cases and the Court, on an examination of such evidence, shifts the burden of proof from one party to the other. [p. 88, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Noakhaly, dated the 13th of August 1919, affirming that of the Munsif, Second Court at Sudharam, dated the 19th of November 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Jitendra Kumar Sen Gupta, for the Appellants.—The facts of the case are shortly these. One Ramsundar Pal died in 1893, leaving seven sons.—Kasinath (husband of defendant No. 4), Sambhu (father of plaintiff No. 3), Gour (plaintiff No. 1), Rajchander (plaintiff No. 2), Jaychandra (father of defendants Nos. 9 and 10), Kali and Harish and one grandson, Chandramohan (father of defendant No. 8), by a predeceased son. During Ramsunder's lifetime, the howla right of property No. 1 in dispute was purchased in the name of Kasinath in 1872. The superior interest of the howla, viz., the taluka right was also purchased in the name of Kasinath in 1872 and since then the howla merged in the taluk. The plaintiffs brought this suit for declaration of title and recovery of possession alleging that the property standing in the name of Kasinath was the joint family property, and that after Ramsunder's death a dispute having arisen about it among the members of the joint family, there was an amicable settlement by virtue of which Kasinath retained, out of the property, a tank and ditches in his actual possession but the remaining lands were settled with his brothers, and five jotes were thus created. The plaintiffs' case was that the disputed land was within their jote, and defendant No. 4, widow of Kasinath, on the allegation that it was self-acquired property of Kasinath and on assertion that no jote under the taluk was created, executed a usufructuary mortgage of the property to defendants Nos. 1 and 2 who, upon taking the mortgage, dispossessed the plaintiffs from the disputed property. The plaintiffs also claimed 4 annas share in the superior right over the jote by purchase from Kasinath. The first Court held that the property in dispute was self-acquired property of Kasinath and also found that no jote was created under the taluk by Kasinath and dismissed the plaintiff's suit with regard to possession of property No. 1 in jote right but declared the plaintiffs' 4 annas undisputed title to the taluka interest obtained by them by purchase. On appeal the Judge held that the property No. 1 having been purchased in Kasinath's name while Ramsunder and his sons were living jointly, it must be presumed to be the joint property of all and defendants must show that Kasinath had separate funds from which the property was acquired. In this view the suit was decreed. The defendants in support of their case produced two mortgage-bonds executed by Kasinath and his widow showing that there was no jote under the taluk. The learned Judge held that the deeds not having been proved by attesting witnesses were not admissible in evidence. Hence the present appeal is by the defendants. My contention is that as the parties are governed by the Dayabhaga School of Hindu Law, there could be no joint family between father and son and there could be no presumption in this case that the property acquired in the name of Kasinath was the joint family property of Ramsunder and his sons. Refers to Sarada Prosad Ray v. Mahanand Ray (1), Rama Nath Chatterjee v. Kusum Kamini Debi (2). The lower Appellate Court has wrongly laid the onus of proof on the defendants. Next, the learned Judge was wrong in holding that the mortgage-bonds produced by us are inadmissible in evidence on the ground that no attesting witness had been examined. No objection had been taken against the admissibility in the first Court. The documents, according to plaintiff, not being per se inadmissible but admissible only after certain preliminaries, i.e., examination of attesting witnesses were performed, the objection could not be taken except in the first Court. Refers to Ambar Ali v. Lutfe Ali (3), Priya Nath v. Mahendra Kumar [Durga Tarini Ghose] (4).

Next, the documents are not even attempted to be proved for the enforcement of mortgage but for collateral purposes, e.g., for proving some statements in the deeds. Though no attesting witness had been examined they are surely admissible for such purposes. Refers to Tofaluddi Peada v. Mahor Ali Shaha (5), Pulaka Veetil Muthalakulangara Kunhu Moidu v. Thiruthipalli Madhava Menon (6), Gangadhar Goswami v. Nidhiram (7).

[SUHRAWARDY, J.—Has the exclusion of the documents affected the case on its merits?]

It is not possible for this Court to say what effect the inclusion of the evidence would have on the mind of the learned Judge. I submit the case should be remanded. Refers to Sumitra Kuer v. Ram Kair Chowbey (8), Woodroffe's Law of Evidence, 921, 929.

Babu Asiranjan Chatterjee, for the Respondents.—So far as the question of the presumption of jointness is concerned, the finding is that Kasinath had no property of his own. The presumption is really one of fact and not of law. Then as regards the admissibility of the mortgage-bonds, section 68 of the Evidence Act is imperative before they could be put in evidence. I submit the positive provisions of law must be fulfilled. I submit the documents can be looked into by this Court to see whether their exclusion has affected the merits.

Babu Jitendra Kumar Sen Gupta replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for the recovery of possession of certain properties described in the plaint on establishment of the plaintiff's title thereto. The facts of the cases which are rather complicated are fully set out in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court. The Court of first instance gave the plaintiffs a partial decree by declaring the talaka right of plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 in four annas share of the lands described as property No. 1 in the plaint and the osat raiyati title of the plaintiffs to eleven annas four gondas share of property No. 2 and dismissed the plaintiff's claim with regard to the rest of the properties in suit. On appeal the lower Appellate Court modified the decree of the first Court by declaring plaintiff's tote right under defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 4 in property No. 1 and granting them a decree for khas possession of that property, and in other respects upheld the decree of the first Court. Several objections have been taken to the findings of the lower Appellate Court some of which, in our opinion, do not stand scrutiny. The points that require serious consideration are: that the Court of Appeal below has erred in holding that the family being joint and Ramsunder with his seven surviving sons including Kasinath living in joint mess, the property must be said to be the joint properties of all, that the defendants must show that Kasinath had a separate fund of his own from which he acquired this property and that hence the presumption is that it was joint property of the joint Hindu family of Ramsunder and his sons. It is argued that as the family was one governed by the Dayabhaga School of the Hindu Law, such presumption ought not to have been raised and the burden cast upon the defendants to prove that the property was purchased with the funds of Kasinath, in whose name it stood. It is clear from the perusal of the judgment that the learned District Judge on an examination of the oral evidence has found that the property was purchased in the name of Kasinath, as he was the ablest and most intelligent of Ramsunder's sons, and in consideration of the facts and circumstances of the case he has demanded proof from the defendants that the property was purchased by Kasinath out of his personal fund. The question of onus loses its importance when both parties have adduced evidence in support of their respective cases, and the Court, on an examination of such evidence, shifts the burden of proof from one party to the other. This must be more so at the appellate stage: Krishna Kisor Le v. Nogendrabala Chaudhurani (9). The finding of the learned Judge is based on a consideration of the evidence in the case and is unassailable in second appeal.

The second point is of some importance. The Court of first instance admitted in evidence two mortgage-bonds, Exhibits A and B, without objection by the plaintiffs. These documents were executed by Kasinath and his widow, defendant No. 4, in which it is stated that the mortgagors had not created any subordinate interest or encumbered the property in suit which they mortgaged by those deeds. The documents were proved not by any attesting witness to them, but by evidence of persons who identified the signatures of the executants. The plaintiffs claim in this suit jotes created by Kasinath under his taluka right in property No. 1. It was attempted to show by these documents that sometime ago, i.e., in 1900 and 1912 Kasinath and his widow made statements to the effect that they had not created any such subordinate interest in the property. Considering the circumstances under which these statements were made it is doubtful if these admissions are admissible in evidence under section 13 of the Evidence Act in favour of the persons who made them or those claiming under such persons. But in view of our decision as to the documents having been legally proved it is not necessary to discuss the matter further.

Section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act requires a mortgage-deed to be attested by two witnesses and section 68 of the Indian Evidence Act enacts as follows:—

"If a document is required by law to be attested, it shall not be used as evidence until one attesting witness at least has been called for the purpose of proving its execution, if there be an attesting witness alive, and subject to the process of the Court and capable of giving evidence." The only exception to this imperative rule is laid down in section 70 of the Evidence Act to the effect that the admission of a party to an attested document of its execution by himself shall be sufficient proof of its execution as against him. In the present case there is no proof that there is no attesting witness to these documents alive or available In these circumstances, it is evident that the provisions of section 68 of the Evidence Act have not been complied with and the documents not legally proved. It is contended for the appellant that the strict mode of proof prescribed in section 68 of the Evidence Act applies only to cases where the document is attempted to be enforced to prove the legal right or relation it creates. But in a case where such document is sought to be proved for a collateral purpose, it may be proved by the ordinary law laid down for proof of a document as a piece of evidence. We do not think we should give effect to this contention. The law, as laid down in section 68, is imperative and does not, on the face of it, admit of any relaxation except in the cases provided in sections 69, 70 and 71 of the Evidence Act. Section 68 of the Evidence Act is based on the English Law on the point which is thus stated in Taylor on Evidence, 11th Edition, page 1230, section 1843. "The general rule, which requires the production of an attesting witness, when the validity of an instrument depends upon its formal attestation, is so inexorable that it applies even to a cancelled or a burnt deed, as also to one, the execution of which is admitted by the party to it and that, too, though such admission be deliberately made, either in open Court or in a subsequent agreement or even in a sworn answer to interrogatories delivered to the party in the cause. A party in a cause, who is called as a witness by his opponent, cannot be required to prove the execution by himself of an instrument, to the validity of which attestation is requisite, so long as the attesting witness is capable of being called. So also the attesting witness must be called, though subsequently to the execution of the deed he has become blind, and the Court will not dispense with his presence on account of illness, however severe. If the indisposition of the witness be of long-standing the party requiring his evidence should have applied for power to examine him before a Commissioner or Examiner, and if he be taken suddenly ill a motion must be made to postpone the trial."

Section 1344, page 1231.—"The rule is equally applicable, whatever be the purpose for which the instrument is produced."

This statement of the law found judicial recognition in the case of Manners v. Paston (10), in which Lord Alvanley clearly laid down that the rule of law (as codified in section 63 of the Indian Evidence Act) is not confined to cases where the attested instrument was the ground of action but that it applied also to cases where it was used in evidence for collateral purposes. This view is also supported by the imperative and stringent wording of section 68 which does not permit the use of the instrument as evidence for any purpose whatsoever unless and until it is proved in strict accordance with the provisions of the section. The rigour of the English Law on which the present section is founded has been to a certain extent lessened by the proviso as contained in section 70 of the Evidence Act. The enactment of this proviso, to our mind, clearly indicates that the Indian Legislature intended to provide only one exception to this inflexible rule and no other.

It has been argued on the authority of Tofaluldi Peada v. Mahar Ali Shaha (5), and other cases of this and other High Courts that a mortgage-deed though not enforceable as such has been used as evidence and proved in the ordinary way to enforce a personal covenant to pay. In all these cases the bond was not attested in accordance with section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act and hence it was not treated as a mortgage-bond, but given effect to as a simple money bond. These cases, therefore, do not support the position taken by the appellants. We have not been referred to any case where a mortgage-bond properly attested, though not proved in conformity with section 68 of the Evidence Act, was received in evidence to prove the personal obligation created thereby. For the contrary view we have the authority of the case of Shamu Patter v. Abdul Kadir (11). The case was taken to the Privy Council which affirmed the decision of the Madras High Court in Shamu Patter v. Abdul Kadir (12). The point whether such a document could be used as a bond was negatived by the Madras High Court; it was urged by Counsel for the appellant at the Bar of the Privy Council but was presumably not pressed and there is no direct finding of the Judicial Committee on this question though the dismissal of the suit indicates that in their Lordships' opinion there was no ground on which the plaintiff in that case was entitled to any relief. It is further noticeable that in that case the deed in suit was admitted by the executants and the contesting defendants in the pleadings, which fact assumes importance with reference to the next question raised before us by the appellants.

It is further argued in this connection that the plaintiffs were not competent to object to the admissibility of the mortgage-bonds in the Court of Appeal below as they were admitted without objection in the first Court. It is not clear from the judgment of the lower Appellate Court whether the documents were rejected by it suo motu or on the objection of the respondents. We are not unmindful of the cases in which it has been laid down that where a piece of evidence not proved in the proper manner has been admitted without objection, it is not open to the opposite party to challenge it at a later stage of the litigation. But where evidence has been received without objection in direct contravention of an imperative provision of the law, the principle on which unobjected evidence is admitted, be it acquiescence, waiver or estoppel none of which is available against a positive legislative enactment, does not apply. See Harek Chand v. Bishun Chandra (13). In the present case the law has laid down an inflexible rule of proof which cannot be deviated from except as provided in the Act. If the Legislature had intended to modify the stringency of the English Law so far as to make an instrument not proved in accordance with the provisions of section 68 of the Evidence Act admissible when not objected to by the other party, one would have expected a proviso to that effect similar to section 70 of the Evidence Act. In our opinion the enactment of section 70 lends considerable colour to the supposition that the Legislature desired to add no further exception to the law laying down the special method of proof of instruments required by law to be attested. We accordingly hold that the mortgage-bonds were rightly rejected by the learned Judge.

RAGHUNATH WAMAN v. KONDIBA BABJI.

We may observe that the bonds even if admitted would have apparently afforded evidence of the weakest character, and the Munsif who decided the case in favour of the defendants, did not even refer to them in his elaborate judgment.

The decree of the lower Appellate Court requires slight modification in that it has decreed to the plaintiffs "khas possession of the lands of property No. 1 in that 10 annas ote share." The plaintiffs claimed their jote right in plots Nos. 1, 2 and 3 of property No. 1 and not in the whole of that property. The plaintiff's jote right will, therefore, be declared in, and khas possession granted to them of, plots Nos. 1, 2 and 3 only of property No. 1. With this variation the decree of the Court of Appeal below is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

Mr. A. G. Desai, for the Appellants.

Mr. D. C. Joshi, for Mr. P. V. Nijsure, for Respondent No. 2.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit by the plaintiffs to recover possession of property, of which they claim title, from the defendants, alleging prior dispossession. Both the lower Courts have found that the plaintiffs' title to the property in suit is proved but his suit has been dismissed on the ground that he has not shown, as he should show, under Art. 142 of the Indian Limitation Act, that he was in possession within twelve years of the suit.

Now, the various proofs which the plaintiffs gave of possession are all issues of fact disposed of by the judgments of the lower Courts with the exception of one that survives in this appeal. That is, the plaintiffs claim to have obtained possession under execution proceedings which followed on a partition suit filed by their brother in 1907. In that suit the two plaintiffs were the first and second defendants and a decree for partition was made on the 11th October 1907. The plaintiffs claim that they got possession of the property in execution proceedings under that decree and that the defendants were bound because they were made parties in that suit.

Now, the suit was a partition suit filed against the two plaintiffs by their brother and the defendants in this suit were impleaded on the ground that they were in possession and colluding to defeat the plaintiff. The suit was, therefore, in effect a suit for partition as against the present plaintiffs and a suit for ejectment as against the present defendants. The decree, however, that was made gave the relief of partition only as between the two present plaintiffs and their elder brother but no relief was given as against the present defendants. The execution proceedings were referred to the Collector on the 17th December 1910 and the Surveyor, who was the ministerial officer of the Collector to make the partition, reported that he was unable to make the partition because the present defendants claimed that they were in possession and that the land was theirs. On this report, the Subordinate Judge gave instructions to the Collector to the effect that the obstruction of the defendants would be of no avail. The matter was then again referred to the Surveyor, and before the Surveyor, on the 30th May 1911, the two plaintiffs signed an acknowledgment that they had received possession of the land in suit.

Now, the acknowledgment of the 30th May 1911 does not show that the defendants were dispossessed of the land in suit or that physical possession was given. Mr. Desai, however, contends that the transaction of that date amounted to delivery of symbolical possession and that in the recent case of Radha Krishna v. Ram Bahadur (1), the Privy Council have held that symbolical possession is sufficient to interrupt adverse possession of a person who was a party to the proceeding in which possession was ordered and given. But this judgment was given in a case where the land was in the possession of cultivating tenants and proceeds on the basis that the case was one in which symbolical possession could be given. It in no way affects the Full Bench ruling of this Court in Mahadev Sakharam v. Janu Namji (2), that symbolical possession is effective only in the cases in which the Code recognizes symbolical possession. Here if symbolical possession was given, it could only be on the assumption that defendants who were in possession were not bound by the decree: O. XXI, r. 36. If they were bound by the decree then the so-called symbolical possession was ineffective. Further, it is not a case which can be brought within the Privy Council ruling because, though they were parties to the partition suit, yet in substance the suit against them was only for ejectment and no order was passed or no decree given against them for ejectment.

On these two grounds, therefore, (1) the possession given was not symbolical possession as justified by the Code, and (2) they were not in substance parties to the suit, the case is outside the scope of the Privy Council ruling.

We, accordingly, confirm the decree of the lower Court and dismiss this appeal with costs.

First appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Dera Ghazi Khan, dated the 9th April 1916.

Dr. Gokal Chand Narang, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sheo Narain, R. B., for Respondents Nos. 1 to 8.

JUDGMENT.—On the 21st September 1911, one Honda Ram, an Arora of Taunsa in the District of Dera Ghazi Khan, died leaving him surviving a widow, a predeceased son's widow, and three daughters. The dispute is as to the succession to his estate between his collaterals in the third degree on one side and the aforesaid females and some other persons on the other side. The estate consists of moveable and also immoveable property, part of which is ancestral and the rest has not been proved to be ancestral qua the collaterals.

Now, it is clear that the deceased had during his lifetime alienated part of the property which is the subject-matter of the dispute, and that with respect to the remaining estate he made a Will on the 10th of March 1900 devising it to his five female relatives in equal shares.

The factum of the testament is admitted by the learned Counsel for the collaterals, and we are unable to accept his contention that the mere fact that the testator during his lifetime disposed of part of the property specified in the Will should be regarded as an act revoking the Will. The rule of law is perfectly clear that a Will is an ambulatory document and can operate only upon the property which exists at the time of the testator's death. Further, the testament itself in this case contains an express provision (which under the law is unnecessary) that the testator had full power to deal with his property during his lifetime, and that the devisees would get only the property remaining undisposed of at the time of his death. We consider it unnecessary to labour the obvious point, and hold unhesitatingly that the plaintiffs have failed to show that the testator revoked the Will in question.

The real question in controversy between the parties is whether Honda Ram could dispose of his property (part of which was, as stated above, ancestral) by alienations inter vivos and by Will. Now, the deceased belonged to a mercantile community, and was a resident of Taunsa which is a town. The presumption consequently is that he was governed by his personal law in the matter of alienation, and the onus is heavily on the plaintiffs to establish the existence of a custom overriding the personal law in this matter. The onus is not in any way affected by the fact that the deceased possessed some ancestral landed estate.

Now, we may say at once that there is not a single instance on the record to support the contention that an Arora cannot dispose of his immoveable property whether ancestral or self-acquired. So far as the question of alienation is concerned, the learned Counsel for the appellants places his reliance solely upon the riwaj-i-am of the district, which states that Hindus like the Muhammadans recognise Wills, both verbal and written, as valid, and instances are adduced, but those of Sangarh (Taunsa Tahsil) say that a Will is binding only if it is in favour of the testator's collateral male relatives. It appears that the Hindus of Sangarh did not give expression to a custom which had been observed by them in the past, and that they were unable to cite a single instance in support thereof. The above extract from the riwaj-i-am contains merely an expression of their own opinion which cannot be raised to the dignity of a custom, unless it is followed in practice for a sufficiently long period and recognised as binding by the members of the community. No such proof has been adduced by the plaintiffs. On the other hand some of their own witnesses state that an Arora can dispose of his property by gift or otherwise. We do not think that the provision in the riwaj-i-am that a gift cannot be made in favour of a daughter in the presence of near collaterals advances the plaintiffs' case to any appreciable extent; because we are unable to hold that a sweeping provision of this kind relating to all the Hindus was intended to govern the Hindus of high caste or trading classes residing in towns.

While the plaintiffs have not adduced a single instance showing that the Aroras have a restricted power of alienation, we find that there is a judgment of the Punjab Chief Court in Udho Ram v. Musammat Bhago Bai, Civil Appeal No. 1701 of 1916, in which a testamentary disposition of the ancestral immoveable property made by an Arora of Taursa was held to be valid, and no custom restricting the power of alienation was established. The fact that the testator owned, as in the present case, a large area of agricultural land was not regarded as a matter of much consequence. The learned Counsel for the appellants seeks to get over this ruling by pointing out that the collaterals in that case did not produce any evidence proving the exclusion of a daughter by a collateral, while the plaintiffs have in the present case adduced several instances to that effect. Now, we have carefully scrutinized these instances and find that in many cases the collaterals constituted a joint family with the father of the daughter who under the Hindu Law could not inherit the joint property; and that there are really very few instances in which it can be said that the daughters were excluded. It must, however, be remembered that in no case has a single document been produced to show the exact particulars which led to the exclusion of the daughter, and that the vague oral evidence of witnesses is not a satisfactory method of proving instances of this character. It is impossible to say what the value of the property was or whether the daughters were on good terms with the collaterals and did not wish to quarrel with them. We have in this connection perused also two judgments of the subordinate Courts in which the daughter was excluded from inheritance, but one of them, which relates to the exclusion of the daughters from succession to non-ancestral land, is obviously wrong.

Per contra, we have a Division Bench judgment of the Chief Court in Motan Das v. Musammat Morni Bai (1) in which after an examination of the relevent authorities on the subject the Court held in the matter of inheritance to the estate of an Arora, residing in the Multan Town, that the daughter was entitled to succeed in preference to the brother.

The question of the succession of a daughter has after all only a remote bearing upon the issue before us, and after a careful consideration of the evidence, to which our attention has been invited by Mr. Gokal Chand, we are not satisfied that his clients have succeeded in proving that the Aroras of Tannsa are governed in the matter of alienation by agricultural custom. We, therefore, affirm the conclusion reached by the District Judge.

Before we conclude, we must express our disapproval of the extraordinarily long time taken by the District Judge in delivering his judgment. The record shows that he heard the arguments on the 23rd June 1913, but it was not until the 9th of April 1916, that he delivered his judgment.

Further, we find that during this period the learned District Judge went so far as to dismiss the suit for default, when it is clear that on the date of dismissal his judgment was not ready, and it was, therefore, useless for the parties to come to the Court simply to be told that the judgment would be pronounced on some other date. We consider that the delay of nearly three years in writing the judgment is perfectly scandalous, and we can only hope that such dereliction of duty will not be repeated by any Judicial Officer. We dismiss the appeal with costs.

PROMOTHO NATH GHOSE AND ON HIS DEATH HIS HEIRESS AND LEGAL REPRESENTATIVE, Srimati MRINALINI DASI—DEFENDANT—REPONDENT.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 18, Sch. I, Art. 62

BIMAN CHANDRA DUTTA v. PRCMOTHO NATH GHOSE.

—Fraud, plea of—Burden of proof—Party defrauded, right of, whether affected by lapse of time—Suit for money belonging to plaintiff received by defendant—Art. 62, application of—Appeal, second—New and inconsistent plea.

A person, who desires to invoke the aid of section 18 of the Limitation Act, must establish that there has been fraud and that by means of such fraud he has been kept from the knowledge of his right to sue or of the title whereon it is founded. Once this is established, the burden is shifted on to the other side to show that the plaintiff had knowledge of the transaction beyond the period of limitation. Such knowledge must be clear and definite knowledge of the facts constituting the particular fraud, it is not sufficient for the defendant to show that the plaintiff had some clues and hints which, perhaps, if vigorously and acutely followed up, might have led to a complete knowledge of the fraud. [p. 98, col. 1.]

Where a remedy is given on the ground of fraud, it is governed by this important principle that the right of the party defrauded is not affected by lapse of time or, generally speaking, by anything done or omitted to be done, so long as he remains, without any fault of his own, in ignorance of the fraud that has been committed. The form of suit indicated by Article 62 of the Limitation Act is applicable where defendant has received money which, in justice and equity, belongs to plaintiff, under such circumstances as in law renders the receipt of it a receipt by the defendant to the plaintiff. The Article most nearly approaches the formula of money had and received by the defendant for the plaintiff's use, if read as a description and apart from the technical qualifications imported in English Law and procedure. A suit was brought to recover a certain sum of money deposited by the plaintiff's sister-in-law in a Bank through the defendant and withdrawn by the latter on her death. In reply to the plaintiff's allegation that it had been misappropriated by the defendant, the latter repudiated the claim as unfounded and even denied that the money belonged to the plaintiff's sister-in-law. This fact was falsified by the information obtained by the plaintiff from the Bank. The defendant at last asked for permission in the second appeal to plead that he had been guilty of fraud and that as the plaintiff had been in full possession of the material facts for more than three years prior to the suit, the suit was time-barred :

Held, that the suit was governed by Art. 62 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act and would be barred except for the provisions of section 18 of the Act, to the benefit of which the plaintiff was entitled; [p. 97, col. 1.]

Letters Patent Appeal against a decree of Sir William Teunon, Kt., and Mr. Justice Newbould, dated the 16th June 1920, their Lordships differing in opinion in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 2297 of 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Sarat Chandra Roy Choudhari (with him Babus Lalit Mohan Banerji and Apurba Charan Mukherjee), for the Appellant.—The plaintiff is the appellant. She deposited the sale-proceeds of her ornaments in her name through her uncle Pramathanath Ghosh in Hazaribagh. The actual deposit was made on 18th December 1909. The lady died on 21st November 1910. Pronobe Kumar's sole heir was the present plaintiff. At the date of her death there was in deposit Rs. 815 only. The defendant withdrew the money on 22nd December 1910. At this time he was a minor and he obtained Letters of Administration of the lady's estate on 28th June 1913. He got all information from the Bank about the withdrawal of the money in March 1915 and not in October 1915. Plaintiff attained majority in 1913. The defence was that the money belonged to the defendant which has been disbelieved by the Court. The question is whether or not the suit is barred by limitation. I submit Article 62 of the Indian Limitation Act would apply to the case. Refers to Raghumoni Audhikary v. Nilmoni Singh Deo (1), Mahomed Wahib v. Mahomed Ameer (2). The Subordinate Judge held that Article 120 applies. I submit that Article does not cover the present case. Refers to Sankunni Menon v. Govinda Menon (3) which case has followed Mahomed Wahib v. Mahomed Ameer (2). My points are two. The plaintiff was 18 years old on 12th June 1913 as appears from his deposition on 12th June 1916. There is no finding on that point. The plaintiff's maternal uncle also supports that in his deposition. This point, however, was not raised in the Courts below. Even if Article 62 of the Limitation Act applies the plaintiff is entitled to sue, the suit having been within three years of attaining his majority. Refers to Rahimbhoy Habibbhoy v. Charles Agnew Turner (4), Indra Nath Banerji v. Rooke (5), Punnayil Kuttu v. Raman Nair (6), Nath Singh v. Jodha Singh (7), Arjun Das v. Gunendra Nath (8). I submit the judgment of Teunon, J., was right.

Babu Samatul Chandra Dutta (with him Babus Dhirendra Nath Ganguly and Pares Chandra Mitra), for the Respondents.—Refers to Rahimbhoy Habibbhoy v. Charles Agnew Turner (4). The finding of both the Courts is that the plaintiff knew of the fraud in 1912.

[MOOKERJEE, J.—It is for you to show that before 12th June 1916, plaintiff had clear and definite knowledge of fraud.]

The plaintiff in his plaint did not state that he was kept from the knowledge of the fraud. The withdrawal of the deposit and the appropriation thereof constitute fraud.

[MOOKERJEE, J.—When did defendant commit fraud?]

If any fraud was committed it was done before 1912. The withdrawal was in 1910. The fraud must be, therefore, between 1910-12.

Refers to Arjun Das v. Gunendra Nath (8). I submit the view taken by Newbould, J., is correct. The suit ought to be held to be barred.

Babu Sarat Chandra Roy Choudhuri replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, J.—This is an appeal under clause 15 of the Letters Patent from the judgment of two learned Judges of this Court who were equally divided in opinion in an appeal from an appellate decree preferred in a suit for recovery of money. The Court of first instance decreed the suit. The District Judge reversed that decision and dismissed the suit. On second appeal to this Court, Mr. Justice Teunon was of opinion that the decree of the Subordinate Judge should be restored. Mr. Justice Newbould held, on the other hand, that the decree of the District Judge should be maintained. The result was that, under paragraph 1 of sub-section (2) of section 98 of the Civil Procedure Code, the decree of the District Judge stood confirmed.

The facts material for the decision of the question of law raised before us lie in a narrow compass. One Jatindra Mohan Dutta died, leaving as his heir a childless widow, Pranab Kumari Dasi. The widow sold her ornaments through her maternal uncle, Pramatha Nath Ghose and made over the sale proceeds to him to be deposited on her behalf in the Hazaribagh Bank. The deposit was made on the 18th December 1909 and the account was opened in the books of the Bank in the name of "Pramatha Nath Ghose on behalf of Srimati Pranab Kumari Dasi." Pramatha Nath Ghose, who is the defendant in this litigation, was, consequently, the only person who could operate on the account. Pranab Kumari Dasi died on the 21st November 1910, and a sum of about Rs. 800 stood to the credit of the account on that date. On the 22nd December 1910 Pramatha Nath Ghose withdrew the money from the Bank. The plaintiff, who is the brother of Jotindra Mohan Dutta, the deceased husband of the lady, is her admitted heir-at law. He commenced the present suit on the 6th October 1915 on the allegation that the money belonged to his sister-in-law, that it had been misappropriated by the defendant, and that on the 25th March 1915, he ascertained from the Bank the facts of the transaction. The defendant repudiated the claim as entirely unfounded, and denied that the money deposited in the Bank was the property of his niece. He further contended that the suit was barred by limitation. The Subordinate Judge held that the money belonged to Pranab Kumari Dasi and had been misappropriated by the defendant. The Subordinate Judge further held that the suit was governed by Art. 120 of the Schedule to the Limitation Act which prescribes a period of six years from the date when the right to sue accrues. He adopted the view that the residuary Article applied, because Art. 62 invoked by the plaintiff was inapplicable. The Subordinate Judge also expressed the opinion that even if Art. 62 had been applicable, the plaintiff would have been entitled to the benefit of section 18 by reason of the fraud committed by the defendant. On appeal, the District Judge held, in concurrence with the Primary Court, that the claim was well founded on the merits. On the question of limitation, however, he held that as the plaintiff had knowledge of the deposit and the withdrawal early in 1912, the suit was barred under Art. 62. In this Court, Mr. Justice Teunon and Mr. Justice Newbould have disagreed on the point, which has formed the only subject of controversy before us.

We are of opinion that the suit falls within the scope of Art. 62, which provides that every suit for money payable by the defendant to the plaintiff for money received by the defendant for the plaintiff's use must be instituted within three years from the date when the money is received. The form of suit indicated by this Art. is applicable where the defendant has received money, which, in justice and equity, belongs to the plaintiff, under such circumstances as in law renders the receipt of it a receipt by the defendant to the use of the plaintiff. In the words of Sir Lawrence Jenkins, the Art. most nearly approaches the formula of "money had and received by the defendant for the plaintiff's use, if read as a description and apart from the technical qualifications imported in English Law and procedure," Hukum Chand Bold v. Pirthichand (9), Mahomed Wahib v. Mahomed Ameer (2), Raghumoni Audhikary v. Nilmoni Singh Deo (1), Sankunni Menon v. Govinda Menon (3). In this view the plaintiff is driven to rely upon section 18 to escape from the bar of limitation.

Section 18, in so far as it applies to the case before us, provides that where any person having a right to institute a suit, has, by means of fraud, been kept from the knowledge of such right or of the title on which it is founded, the time limited for instituting a suit against the person guilty of the fraud shall be computed from the time when the fraud first became known to the person injuriously affected thereby. It may be observed that this is not precisely identical with the provisions of section 26 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1833, which makes time run from the date when the fraud is, or with reasonable diligence might have been, first known or discovered. This distinction was possibly not brought to the notice of the Court in Bibee Solomon v. Abdool Azeez (10). The principle is, perhaps, best stated in the words of Westbury, L. C., in Rolfe v. Gregory (11): "When the remedy is given on the ground of fraud, it is governed by this important principle, that the right of the party defrauded is not affected by lapse of time, or, generally speaking, by anything done or omitted to be done, so long as he remains, without any fault of his own, in ignorance of the fraud that has been committed." This was quoted with approval by Lord James in delivering the opinion of the Judicial Committee in Bulli Coal Mining Co. v. Osborne (12), where he added: "the contention on behalf of the appellants that the Statute is a bar unless the wrongdoer is proved to have taken active measures in order to prevent detection is opposed to common sense as well as to the principles of equity." To this must be added further the valuable statement by Lord Hobhouse in Rahimbhoy Habibbhoy v. Charles Agnew Turner (4): "When a man has committed a fraud, and has got property thereby, it is for him to show that the person injured by his fraud and suing to recover the property has had clear and definite knowledge of those facts which constitute the fraud at a time which is too remote to allow him to bring the suit." The true position then is that where a suit is on the face of it barred, it is for the plaintiff to prove in the first instance the circumstances which would prevent the Statute from having its ordinary effect. A person who, in such circumstances, desires to invoke the aid of section 18, must establish that there has been fraud and that by means of such fraud he has been kept from the knowledge of his right to sue or of the title whereon it is founded. Once this is established, the burden is shifted on to the other side to show that the plaintiff had knowledge of the transaction beyond the period of limitation. Such knowledge must be clear and definite konwledge of the facts constituting the particular fraud; as Lord Hobhouse points out, it is not sufficient for the defendant to show that the plaintiff had some clues and hints which, perhaps, if vigorously and acutely followed up, might have led to a complete knowledge of the fraud. These principles have been repeatedly applied, as for instance, in Nath Singh v. Jodha Singh (7), Narayan Sahu v. Mohant Damodar Das (13), Arjun Das v. Gunendra Nath (8), Jotindra Mohun Rai v. Brojendra Kumar Datta (14) and Lokenath v. Chintamoni Tripathi (15). The cases most nearly in point are the decisions in Avancha Lakshminarasamma v. Avancha Lakshamma (16) and Lakhpat Pandey v. Jang Bahadur Pandey (17) where the plaintiff had, without knowledge of the defendant, recovered from a stranger money jointly payable to the plaintiff and the defendant, and had concealed from the defendant the fact of such realisation. The only question is, what is the position of the parties in the present case when tested in the light of these principles.

It has been conclusively established in this litigation, notwithstanding the allegation of the defendant to the contrary, that the disputed money belonged not to him but to his niece and had been fraudulently misappropriated by him. The true character of the transaction between him and his niece was specially within his knowledge, and he has taken full advantage of her death to set up a false claim, with impunity if he could. The fraud of concealment of the true state of facts has been persevered in by him, not only up to the time of the present suit, but also during its progress. The burden consequently lies heavily upon him to establish not that the plaintiff had clues and hints which, if vigorously and acutely followed by him, might, perhaps, have led him to a complete knowledge of the fraud, but that the plaintiff had clear and definite knowledge of the facts which constituted the fraud, at a time anterior to the period of limitation. From this point of view, the defendant is in an inextricable difficulty. In the first place, he did not set up such a defence in his written statement, for the obvious reason that such a defence, even if taken as an alternative, would have seriously imperilled the success of his substantial defence that the claim was unfounded and he himself had committed no fraud. In the second place he did not adduce evidence to substantiate such an alternative defence. He is thus inevitably constrained to rely upon isolated fragments from the evidence adduced by the plaintiff to enable him to discharge the burden of proof. It is not surprising that examined from this standpoint his position proves untenable. He contends that the plaintiff had knowledge of the deposit and withdrawal early in 1912; but this is clearly insufficient. The account stood in his name coupled with the statement that the deposit had been made on behalf of his niece. He alone could consequently operate on the account. The withdrawal by him was thus not necessarily an act tainted by fraud. Indeed, he has nowhere asserted that he entertained a fraudulent intention at that time to misappropriate the sum; in fact, he alone would have to withdraw the sum from the Bank before he could make it over to the rightful owner. We have thus no allegation by the defendant, much less any proof by him, as to the precise time when he committed the fraud. Apart from this, he has throughout concealed the fraud and has not only assured the plaintiff but has also maintained in Court that the money belonged to him and not to his niece. On the other hand, the plaintiff has given his sworn testimony that it was not till the 25th March 1915, that he obtained from the authorities of the Bank definite information as to the details of the transaction. There is thus no escape from the conclusion that the plaintiff is, prima facie, entitled to the benefit of section 18, while the defendant has neither alleged nor proved facts which would exclude the operation of that provision. This raises finally the question whether the defendant should now be allowed an opportunity to set up and establish such a defence; the answer, in our opinion, must be in the negative. The position he would have to take up would be contradictory to what has been hitherto his defence; and he cannot now reasonably ask to be permitted to assert that he has been guilty of fraud and that the plaintiff has been in full possession of the material facts for more than three years prior to the suit.

We hold accordingly that this appeal must be allowed, the decree of the District Judge set aside, and that of the Trial Court restored with costs throughout.

Execution of decree—Auction sale—Reversioners not allowed to go behind decree.

Where an alienee, who is an outsider, finds that the alienor's debt is a decretal debt, he need not make any further enquiry and the reversioners will not be allowed to go behind the decree. This rule, however, does not apply where it is clear that the alienee's suspicions should have been aroused by the surrounding circumstances or where it is proved that he actually had knowledge of the bad faith of the decretal transaction [p. 100, col 1.]

Umar Din v. Budhe Khan, 13 Ind. Cas. 58; 21 P. L. R. 1912; 23 P. W. R. 1912, followed.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Ludhiana, dated the 13th August 1915, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Ludhiana, dated the 10th December 1914.

Mr. Badr-ud-Din Kureshi, for the Appellant.

Mr. Dharm Das Suri, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Milkhi Ram obtained a decree against Rullia for Rs. 573 and in execution of the decree a house belonging to Rullia was put up to auction and purchased by Ganga Ram for Rs. 730. Ran Singh, son of Rullia, has brought this suit for a declaration that the auction-sale shall not affect his reversionary rights on the death of his father, the judgment-debtor. The lower Courts having dismissed the suit, Ran Singh has lodged a second appeal to this Court.

In appeal it is urged on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant that Milkhi Ram's suit was brought against both Rullia and one Partapa, that the claim was on a bond, and that Partapa was the principal debtor while Rullia was merely a surety, and it is also urged that there was no necessity for Rullia to stand surety and that the debt should not affect the plaintiff's reversionary rights. There is, no doubt, some force in these arguments, but Umar Din v.

Budhe Khan (1) is an authority for the proposition that, where an alienee, who is outsider, finds that the alienor's debt is a decretal debt, he need not make any further inquiry, and the reversioners will not be allowed to go behind the decree; though this rule does not apply where it is clear that the alienee's suspicions should have been aroused by the surrounding circumstances, or where it is proved that he actually had knowledge of the bad faith of the decretal transaction. Now, in this case there is no proof whatever that Ganga Ram had any knowledge that Rullia was merely a surety. So far as appears, Ganga Ram knew merely that the house belonged to Rullia and that it was being auctioned in execution of the decree passed against Rullia. We fail to see that there was any necessity for him to make further inquiries regarding the circumstances which led to the decree being passed.

Following the judgment above quoted, we hold that the plaintiff cannot go behind the decree and we uphold the orders of the lower Courts dismissing the suit and dismiss the appeal with costs.

GOVINDASAMI PILLAI—DECREE-HOLDER—PETITIONER—APPELLANT

DASAI GOUNDAN AND ANOTHER—JUDGMENT-DEBTOR—RESPONDENTS.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 20—Authorised agent—Judge paying decree-holder money deposited in Court by judgment-debtor—Judge signing paper indicating payment—"Agent duly authorised," construction of.

A sum of money was deposited in Court in part-payment of a decree and the Judge while paying it to the decree-holder signed a paper indicating the payment in his presence and through Court. The decree-holder took out execution for the balance of the money due under the decree, within three years from the date of payment by the Court but more than three years from the date of the decree:

Held, (i) that the execution was within time, as the part-payment gave a fresh starting point of limitation under section 20 of the Limitation Act; [p. 101, col. 1.]

(ii) that the fact that the Judge signed a paper indicating the payment in his presence and through Court, satisfied the condition that the fact of payment should appear in the handwriting of the person making the same; [p. 101, col. 2.]

(iii) that a Court paying in the course of its duty the money due by judgment-debtor is also a legally constituted agent of the judgment-debtor for that purpose. [p. 103, col. 2.]

Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J.—In construing the words "agent duly authorised," Courts ought to be as liberal as possible. The authorisation need not be a voluntary authorisation. The Law of Limitation is partly intended to promote diligence on the part of creditors in the matter of recovery of their debts. The provisions of sections 19 and 20 of the Limitation Act are intended to show that a creditor will not be penalised by the bar of limitation, if he had been diligent enough to get the handwriting of the debtor to evidence an acknowledgment of the fact of part-payment within the period of limitation. These sections, however, have not been based upon the fiction of an implied new promise to pay, for an acknowledgment signed by the party liable is sufficient, even when accompanied by a refusal to pay. [p. 102, cols. 1 & 2.]

Per Coutts Trotter, J.—If a debtor's assets are so placed, either by his own act or by operation of law, that if some one other than he alone can realise them for the purpose of making payments due from him, then the act of that other in operating upon the debtor's assets must be treated as the act of the debtor himself, the volition of the debtor in such a case being neither requisite nor relevant. [p. 110, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The assignee decree-holder is the appellant. The following are the relevant facts and dates. On 20th September 1912, the final decree for sale of the hypothecated properties was passed. Items Nos. 4 and 5 of the hypothecated properties were afterwards acquired by the Government under the Land Acquisition Act and Rs. 3,400 (compensation money) was deposited in Court for (by ?) the Government on 11th August 1914 to the credit of the suit. The decree amount with interest on that date amounted to Rs. 3,926 according to the decree-holder. The decree-holder drew the compensation amount of Rs. 3,400 from the Court on 11th August 1914 and he filed the present execution application for sale of two other hypothecated items on 10th August 1917. The questions for consideration are (1) whether the execution petition is barred by limitation, and (2) what was the balance due under the decree; whether it was Rs. 500 and odd with interest from 11th August 1914 as claimed by the decree-holder or a lesser sum, and, if so, what sum ?

The lower Court on 30th September 1919 held on the second point that only Rs. 103-7-8 was the sum due on 11th August 1914 under the decree. On the first point it held that because on 11th August 1914 the compensation amount Rs. 3,400 was paid to the decree-holder on account of the decree by consent of the judgment-debtors, section 20 of the Limitation Act gave a fresh starting point of limitation and hence the execution petition of 10th August 1917 was not barred by limitation. It accordingly directed execution to issue for Rs. 103 and odd with interest. This appeal by the decree-holder was based on the ground that really Rs. 500 and odd was due and not merely Rs. 103 and odd on 11th August 1914 under the decree. Having heard both sides and gone through the records, I agree with the lower Court in its conclusion that only Rs. 103 and odd was really due on the above date. So the appeal fails and has to be dismissed with costs.

But there is a memorandum of objections filed by the first defendant (the judgment-debtor) and the contentions in that memorandum are:—

1. The learned Judge ought to have held that the payments made ex parte, having reference to their nature and mode, did not come within section 20 of the Limitation Act and the execution petition was, therefore, barred.

2. The Courts below ought to have held that, even otherwise, the decree has been fully satisfied by payments made.

As regards the second contention that full satisfaction had been made, there is nothing in it and the District Judge was right in finding that Rs. 103 and odd still remained due on 11th August 1914.

The much more important contention remains, namely, "the payment made ex parte in August 1914 did not come within section 20 of the Limitation Act" and could not, therefore, save limitation. Section 20 of the Limitation Act (omitting the words unnecessary for the decision in this case) is as follows: "Where part of the principal of a debt is, before the expiration of the prescribed period, paid by the debtor or by his agent duly authorized in this behalf, a fresh period of limitation shall be computed from the time when the payment was made: Provided that in the case of part payment of the principal of a debt, the fact of the payment appears in the handwriting of the person making the same. Explanation—'Debt' includes money payable under a decree."

The payment of Rs. 3,400 was clearly part payment of the principal of the decree-debt. But two other questions remain to be considered, viz., (1) whether the fact of the payment appears in the handwriting of the person making the same, (2) whether the payment was made by the debtor or by his agent duly authorised in that behalf.

On the first question, the decree-holder in this case produced before us copies of Court records showing that when the Rs. 3,400 was paid out, the Judge signed a paper indicating that Rs. 3,400 was paid to the decree-holder in the presence of the Judge and through the Court. I think this record sufficiently satisfied the condition that the fact of payment should appear in the handwriting of the person making the same.

The only question that remains, therefore, for consideration is, whether the Judge can be called an agent duly authorised by the judgment debtor to make the payment.

Notwithstanding some obiter dicta of their Lordships of the Privy Council based on English decisions that the reason why an acknowledgment of indebtedness gives a fresh starting point for limitation is that it gives a fresh cause of action by reason of its implying a fresh promise to pay, I am clear that the provisions in sections 19 and 20 of the Indian Limitation Act could not have been based upon any such fiction of an implied new promise to pay. Under section 19, Explanation 1, an acknowledgment signed by the party liable is sufficient even when accompanied by a refusal to pay, whereas, in consequence of the fiction of an implied promise to pay being necessary under the English decisions, an acknowledgment accompanied by a refusal to pay is insufficient under the English Law to afford a fresh starting point for limitation, as that fiction of an implied promise to pay becomes still-born in consequence of such refusal to pay.

I think the Indian Law must be held to have required the handwriting of the person making the payment merely in order to exclude fraudulent oral testimony as to payment, just as the Statute of Frauds tried to prevent Courts being flooded with perjury in the case of sale of goods, etc. The fiction of an implied promise to pay and the accrual of a new cause of action by an unregistered acknowledgment or a payment of interest as such would not help mortgage-creditors to obtain decrees for sale, as the new promise not being evidenced by a registered deed cannot be made to affect immoveable property. The Law of Limitation is partly intended to promote diligence on the part of creditors in the matter of recovery of their debts. The concessions made in favour of creditors by the provisions of sections 19 and 20 of the Limitation Act are intended to express the view of the Legislature that a creditor will not be considered wanting in such diligence in bringing his suit and he will not be penalised by the bar of limitation if he had been diligent enough to get the handwriting of the debtor to evidence an acknowledgment of the fact of the part payment within the period of limitation.

Provided, therefore, the evidence of the payment is in a writing binding on the debtor, it seems to me the object of the Legislature is satisfied, and in construing the words "agent duly authorized", the Courts ought, in my opinion, to be as liberal as possible. Section 21 (1) of the Limitation Act says that "the expression 'agent duly authorized in this behalf' in sections 19 and 20 shall, in the case of a person under disability, include his lawful guardian, committee or manager, or an agent duly authorized by such guardian, committee or manager to sign the acknowledgment or make the payment." This shows that the authorization need not be a voluntary authorization; for, the guardian of a person under disability does not get his authority through any voluntary act of the person under disability, but by law. In Rughoo Nath Doss Cookman v. Ranee Shirmonee Pat Mohadebee (1) there is a sentence in the decision as follows: "As regards the sale made on the 8th March 1869, from which a sum of Rs. 206 was realized, we think that it cannot be considered a part payment under section 21 so as to give a new period of limitation" Section 21 considered therein was section 21 of Act IX of 1871 which is similar to section 20 of the present Limitation Act so far as the question under consideration is concerned. No reasons are given for the opinion. Further, the point whether the condition as to the payment appearing in the handwriting of the person making the payment or his duly authorized agent was not raised or considered in that case. In Ramchandra Ganesh v. Deoba (2) no judgment was given and the Court discharged the rule granted in favour of the decree-holder without giving any reasons. Whether the Court intended to adopt all or only some of the arguments advanced by the Vakil for the judgment-debtors as found in the report does not appear. One of such arguments was that an acknowledgment must have contained an express or implied promise to pay. Quoting English decisions. I have shown that those decisions are inapplicable in construing the Indian Limitation Act. Of course, from an involuntary payment a promise to pay the balance cannot be implied. Rughoo Nath Doss Cookman v. Ranee Shiromonee Pat Mohadebee (1) was also quoted in that case not in the arguments before the High Court but only by the lower Court in support of its opinion. It appears from the report that the payment relied upon was not part-payment of the principal in the handwriting of the person making the payment but payment of interest, and it was argued by the creditor that the recovery of rent decreed in a suit brought by the usufructuary mortgagee on a bond providing for payment of rent in lieu of interest was payment of interest on the mortgage-bond. The defendants argued that the payment in satisfaction of the decree passed for rent is not a payment to the creditor of interest as such. It may be that the argument was accepted and so the rule was discharged by the Bombay High Court on that ground. I am unable, therefore, to accept the head-note of the Reporter as really representing the opinion of the Judges in that case. In Oudh Bihari Pande v. Mahabir Sahai (3) the only question decided was that, because the part payment by sale in execution of the judgment debtor's property did not appear in the handwriting of the judgment-debtor, it could not save limitation. In Brew v. Brew (4) decided by four Judges on the language of a Statute which requires that 'some part of the principal money or some interest thereon, shall have been paid or some acknowledgment of the right thereto shall have been given in writing signed by the person by whom the same shall be payable or his agent," in order to save limitation, the Court followed the principle of the decision in Chinnery v. Evans (5). In that case the payment by a Receiver appointed under the Mortgage Act was held to be payment by the agent of the person liable to pay, though the Receiver was appointed by the Court and not by the mortgagor and was appointed for the benefit of the mortgagee to receive "for him particularly" the rents of the mortgagor's property. Johnson, J., says in Brew v. Brew (4): "Whether it is by the agency of a Receiver or Sheriff, the payment is made to the creditor on foot of the debt which the debtor is bound in law to pay, and out of the debtor's rents or chattels, as the case may be, for the debtor and on his account: to the extent of such payment, the debtor is discharged from so much of the judgment debt. I, therefore, think that such payments by a Sheriff are not payments by a stranger to the judgment-debtor, but are payments out of the debtor's chattels 'by a person paying for him and on his account what he is bound to pay.'" Per Lord Carnworth in Chinnery v. Evans (5).

(2) 6 B. 626; 3 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 873.

In Lakshumanan Chetty v. Sadayappa Chetty (6) a Bench of this Court held that an acknowledgment of a debt made by a Receiver appointed by the Court on behalf of a firm under dissolution is a valid acknowledgment saving limitation by reason of the provisions of section 19 of the Limitation Act as he was an agent authorized to make the acknowledgment.

If a Sheriff of the Court making the payment can be considered an agent of the debtor, I see nothing in principle or reason which should prevent me from holding that a Court paying, in the course of its duty, the money due by the judgment-debtor is also a legally constituted agent of the judgment-debtor for that purpose.

In the result, I think that the requirements of section 20 are satisfied and I would dismiss the memorandum of objections also with costs.

COUTTS TROTTER, J.—I entirely agree. My Lord has covered the ground so thoroughly that I only propose to add a word on the last point. I think the principle deducible from Chinnery v. Evans (5) is this:—that, if a debtor's assets are so placed, either by his own act or by operation of law, that if some one other than he alone can realise them for the purpose of making payments due from him, then the act of that other in operating upon the debtor's assets must be treated as the act of the debtor himself, the volition of the debtor in such a case being neither requisite nor relevant. If that be so, it appears to me that the words "his agent duly authorized in that behalf" in section 20 of the Limitation Act are satisfied by the act of the Judge of the Court which authorizes the payment, and that his handwriting is rightly described as that of the person making the payment.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 69, 70—Sale of dar-patni in execution of decree for arrears of rent against some only of dar-patnidars—Sale set aside by deposit of decretal amount by co-sharer—Contribution, suit for.

The plaintiff and the defendants were co-sharers in a dar-patni which had been sold by the patnidar in execution of a decree obtained in a suit for arrears of rent in which the plaintiff had not been made a party. The plaintiff had the sale set aside by depositing the decretal amount together with the statutory compensation due to the auction-purchaser. In a suit by the plaintiff for contribution against the defendants:

Held, that the suit was maintainable under section 70 of the Contract Act, and not under section 69, and the defendants were liable to contribute in respect of the amount due under the decree as also towards the statutory compensation. [p. 105, col. 2.]

Mr. S. K. Sinha, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is preferred by defendants Nos. 6 and 7 in a suit for contribution. The plaintiffs in the suit held a two-anna odd share in a dar-patni tenure. The patnidar sued for arrears of rent due in respect of the years 1313 to 1316. The defendants in that suit were the defendants Nos 5, 6 and 7 in the present suit The patnidar obtained a decree and in execution the dar-patni was sold in September 1911 and purchased by the present defendant No 4 On the 25th October 1911 the plaintiffs deposited in Court the amount of the decree, namely, Rs. 4,180, together with the statutory compensation of five per cent. on the purchase money due to the auction-purchaser, Rs. 285, and in consequence the sale was set aside. The plaintiffs allege that in this connection they incurred costs amounting to Rs. 211-5-10. The suit was brought for contribution from the co sharers in the dar-patni in respect of the three sums I have stated.

In the course of the suit, defendants Nos. 1 and 4 came to terms with the plaintiffs and a petition of compromise was filed. Defendants Nos. 8 and 11 died and their heirs were not brought on the record. A decree for contribution was made against defendants Nos. 5, 6, 7, 9 and 10. Defendants Nos. 5, 9 and 10 have not appealed.

The first point taken on behalf of the appellants is, that the appellants and the defendant No 5 being only some of the co-sharers in the dar-patni, the decree obtained against them was only a money-decree, that the dar-patni could not be sold in execution but only the right, title and interest of the appellants and the defendant No. 5, and that the payment made by the plaintiffs for the purpose of having the sale set aside was simply officious. The answer is that, rightly or wrongly, the dar patni was in fact sold in execution. The appellants and the defendant No. 5 are the present representatives of the original dar-patnidars. Other persons including the plaintiffs and other defendants on the record hold shares in the dar patni acquired from the grantees of the lease or their successors. The patnidar has refused to recognise them on the ground that the lease forbade alienation. He brought a suit for ejectment on that ground which, we are told, was unsuccessful but neither the judgment in the suit nor the lease is before us. In the circumstances, however, it is quite unnecessary for us to form or to express any opinion on this question. The case of Mohendra Ghoshal v. Bhuban Mardana [Suchand v. Balram] (1), where the facts were similar, shows that a suit for contribution will lie in such circumstances. Separate judgments were delivered in that case, but though the learned Judges gave different reasons they came to the same conclusion. The Chief Justice (Sir Lawrence Jenkins) uphold the decision of the Court below under section 70 of the Contract Act. Mr. Justice Doss was of opinion that the case came more properly within the terms of section 69. With great respect we prefer the view expressed by the Chief Justice, which also accords with the view expressed in Jog Narain v. Badri Das (2). The case of Batuk Nath Singh v. Bepin Bihari (3) cannot regarded as a decision to the contrary, because the case turned on other questions and the applicability of section 69 was assumed without being considered or discussed. In the case before us, the appellants were, no doubt, bound by law to satisfy the decree obtained against them but it can hardly be said that after the sale of the dar-patni they were bound by law to make the payments necessary for the purpose of having the sale set aside. There is that difficulty in the way of applying section 69. No difficulty attends the application of section 70. Nobody suggests that the payments made by the plaintiffs were not made lawfully, or that the plaintiffs intended to make them gratuitously. Their interest in the tenure, which is admitted by the appellants, is an answer to the argument that they acted officiously. In our opinion this ground of appeal fails.

The second point taken is this. It is established that out of the sum deposited to set aside the sale Rs. 2,000 was deposited by the defendant No. 15. The decree in the rent suit was, as we have said, for the arrears of rent due in respect of the years 1313-1316. From 1313 to 1315 the dar-patni had been in the possession of the defendant No. 15 as ijaradar. It was stipulated in his lease that he should pay the patnidar his dues. He was responsible, therefore, in the first instance for the rent due for that period He has himself a small share in the dar-patni and the appellants contend that they are entitled to the benefit of the payment made by him We are of opinion that this contention should prevail. Whether he was moved by a belated sense of duty or whether he acted at the instance of the plaintiffs or for some other reason, the payment may well be regarded as a payment made in discharge or part discharge of obligations which he had neglected. The appellants, therefore, will receive credit out of this sum for an amount proportionate to their share in the dar-patni.

The third point taken is that the appellants should receive credit in respect of a further sum of Rs. 1,450 said to have been deposited by all the share-holders with the father of defendants Nos. 1—4 for the purpose of satisfying the landlord's decree. The point, however, was not taken, or at any rate was not insisted on, in the Court below and the material facts have not been sufficiently elucidated. The contention must, therefore, be rejected.

One point remains. The learned Subordinate Judge reduced the amount claimed by the plaintiffs on the score of costs to Rs. 20 and as to that no question is raised. The decree, however, makes the appellants liable to contribute towards the statutory compensation. They contend that in that respect the decree is wrong. We were referred to Suchand's case (1) already cited. There Mr. Justice Doss, dealing with the matter under section 69 of the Contract Act, no doubt, held that statutory compensation should be excluded from the reckoning. It will be observed that the Chief Justice merely said that the materials before the Court were insufficient for a decision and that the amount at stake was so trifling that it would not be profitable to direct a further enquiry. In the present case there is no doubt as to the facts and if the case falls within section 70, as we think it does, there is no difficulty. The contention put forward for the appellants, therefore, fails.

In the result, the decree of the Court below will be modified in accordance with our decision on the second point above dealt with. In other respects, it will be confirmed. The parties will bear their own costs in both Courts.

Maulvi Ghulam Muhy ud-Din, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Fateh Muhammad, plaintiff-appellant, the nephew of Karmoon, deceased, husband of Musammat Neki, sued for a declaration that a gift by Musammat Neki in favour of Imam Din should not affect his reversionary rights. Imam Din is the daughter's son of Karmoon and Musammat Neki. The first Court held that the land was ancestral qua plaintiff, that the widow had only a life-interest in the property of her deceased husband and had no authority to make the gift. It accordingly decreed the plaintiff's claim. The lower Appellate Court held that there was no proof that the land was ancestral and that a daughter's son was by custom the heir to the self acquired property in preference to a nephew. On these findings it dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

The plaintiff in second appeal to this Court urges that no issue was framed as to whether the land was his ancestral property and, therefore, he produced no evidence to prove it. It is urged that this Court should remand the case for further enquiry into the question whether the land is ancestral or not. In the plaint there was no averment that the land was the ancestral property of the plaintiff. Plaintiff merely stated that he was the nephew of Karmoon and was the heir in preference to the daughter's son and that the gift by the widow was invalid. There was nothing in the defendant's written pleas to the effect that the property was the self-acquired property of Karmoon. As there was no allegation in the plaint that it was ancestral qua the plaintiff, there was no necessity for the defendant to say that the land was self-acquired property of Karmoon. O. XIV, r. 1, Civil Procedure Code, lays down that issues arise when a material proposition of fact or law is affirmed by the one party and denied by the other. On the pleadings in the present case no issues arose as to whether the land was ancestral or self acquired. It cannot be said that the Trial Court was in error in not framing an issue which did not arise on the pleadings. As pointed out by the lower Appellate Court, the onus was upon the plaintiff to prove strictly that the land was ancestral. In the absence of any proof it must be assumed that the land is not ancestral. Atar Singh v. Thakar Singh (1) is a clear authority upon the point I, therefore, see no reason why the case should be remanded. The decision, in the case of self-acquired property, that a daughter's son excludes a nephew depended upon a finding as to custom which cannot be disputed in second appeal without a certificate. No certificate has been obtained in the present case.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—One Sukhain died, leaving two widows, Sukwara and Sukarti. Ramrattan, the father of the plaintiff, who is a minor, was the next reversioner. In Sambat 1966 the two widows re married. In Sambat 1967 Sukwara mortgaged a 2-annas share of Mauza Urna and certain malik makbuza lands which were her husband's property to defendant, Karelal, and leased for a term of 9 years the sir, khudkasht and malik makbuza lands to his father, defendant, Jhurroo. Ramrattan died in Sambat 1970 or 1913 A. D. In Suit No. 52 of 1917 the plaintiff sued the defendants for possession, obtained a decree and took possession of the village share and the lands in December 1918. In the present suit he sues for mesne profits of the lands leased to Jhurroo for the years 1914 to 1919. It is not denied that both defendants were in possession of these lands. The pleas of the defendants with which we are concerned in this appeal are contained in paragraphs 3, 4 and 7 of Karelal's written statement and paragraph 9 of Jhurroo's written statement. They are as follows:—

"Karelal's written statement—

3. That Ramrattan, father of the plaintiff, divided the property left by Sukhain between his widows after their re-marriage and actually helped them in retaining possession and in mortgaging and leasing out the property and allowed Musammat Sukwara to be the ostensible owner of the property, for which mesne profits are claimed.

4. That this defendant, therefore, parted with Rs. 1,300 and the plaintiff is now estopped from claiming any portion of profits and from denying Musammat Sukwara's power to lease and mortgage.

7. That defendant No. 2 became an ordinary tenant by virtue of the leases granted to him by Musammat Sukwara with the consent and tacit license from Ramrattan. Plaintiff was not even born then"

"Jhurroo's written statement—

9. That this defendant was not a trespasser and held the sir, khudkasht and malik makbuza lands in Mouza Urna under leases executed by Musammat Sukwara who was then the ostensible owner and in possession of the said lands. This defendant had no knowledge of Musammat Sukwara's re-marriage and acted in good faith in taking the leases from her with the knowledge and consent of plaintiff's father, Ramrattan, who was alive then."

The plaintiff in reply did not deny any of these pleas but only said that they were res judicata by reason of the judgment in the suit for possession. The issues framed on these pleadings were:—

"Issue No. (1). Is not the judgment in the suit for possession (No. 52 of 1917) conclusive as to the right of the plaintiff to claim mesne profits as against the defendants?

(4) Can the defendants plead the plaintiff's father's consent and knowledge of the mortgage and leases as a bar to the plaintiff's claim for mesne profits? Are not these pleas res judicata?"

These issues have been found against the defendants by the lower Courts.

In second appeal it was at first contended that the defendants' possession was so far as Ramrattan was concerned as licensees, and that the plaintiff who claimed through Ramrattan and not as reversioner himself could no more treat the defendants as trespassers than could Ramrattan before giving a notice revoking the license, that such notice could not be said to have been given before the institution of the suit for possession and that not more than one year's profits being due after the institution of that suit, a decree for more than one year's mesne profits should not have been given. When in reply to this argument it was contended that no plea of a license given to the defendants by Ramrattan was raised or put in issue and that the pleas raised by them were decided or must be deemed to be decided against them in the former suit where the mortgage and the leases were held to be wholly void against the plaintiff a new line of argument was adopted. It was argued that Sukwara was allowed to be in possession by the rightful owner Ramrattan and for the purposes of enjoyment she let the property to the defendants and that, therefore, neither her possession nor that of the defendants was that of trespassers. The answer to this argument is that Sukwara held the property only as a licensee and the license not being transferable the defendants would be, so far as Ramrattan was concerned, trespassers. The mortgage and the lease were really one transaction amounting to a usufructuary mortgage for 9 years for the sum advanced and considering that the license might terminate at any time by revocation or by death of the licensee the transaction cannot be treated as a mode of personal enjoyment under the licence.

Assuming, however, that there was an implied license by Ramrattan in favour of the defendants and that it was in effect pleaded, the question is whether it continued beyond Ramrattan's lifetime and bound his successor until the latter gave notice of revocation. It is not contended that the license to the defendants was a license to which either of clauses (a) and (b) of section 60 of the Easements Act applied. It was, therefore, revocable by the grantor. Admittedly Ramrattan did not revoke it before his death, but if he had transferred the property affected by it, the transferee would not have been bound by it, (section 59, Easements Act), and the licensee would have been a trespasser so far as the transferee was concerned: vide Wallis v. Harrison (1) and Ooleman v. Foster (2). In Wallis v. Harrison (1), it was argued that the transferee was not competent to treat the licensees as trespassers without notice of the transfer. Parke, B., observed:

"I take it to be clear, that a parol executory license is countermandable at any time; and if the owner of land grants to another a license to go over or do any act upon his close, and then conveys away that close, there is an end to the license; for it is an authority only with respect to the soil of the grantor, and if the close ceases to be his soil, the authority is instantly gone." * * * *

"A license executory is a simple authority excusing trespasses on the close of the grantor, as long as it is his, and the license is uncountermanded, but ceases the moment the property passes to another."

In Ooleman v. Foster (2) it was argued that the transferee of the grantor of the license took the property subject to the license and could not treat the licensee as a trespasser until he had done some act to notify that he had determined the license. This argument was not accepted and in both the above cases it was held that the licensees were liable in trespass to the transferees. It would appear from the judgment of Bramwell, B., in Ooleman v. Foster (2), that the permission which can be relied on in an action of trespass is the permission of the plaintiff himself. These decisions appear to be based on the principle that a license is of a personal character not merely as regards the grantee, but also as regards the grantor. There seems to be no reason why the principle of these decisions should not also apply where the property has passed by inheritance.

The permission given by Ramrattan came to an end with his death and thereafter there being no permission by the plaintiff the defendants were trespassers so far as he was concerned. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

The plaintiff brought a suit for arrears of rent in respect of an agricultural tenancy which had commenced with the execution of a registered kabuliyat for a term of three years on the 26th May 1880, the defendants in the suit were the sons and son-in-law of the executant of the kabuliyat and they or their predecessor had been holding over since the expiration of the first term of the kabuliyat. The rent was payable partly in cash and partly in kind and the condition as to interest contained in the kabuliyat was that the tenant should pay interest at 6 pies per rupee per mensem on the cash rent and one kotta per rupee per month on the rent payable in paddy:

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Mymensingh, dated the 21st of May 1919, modifying that of the First Munsif, Netrokona, dated the 5th of September 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Tarak Chandra Chakrabutty (with him Babu Profulla Chandra Chakerbutty), for the Appellants.—The term of the original lease expired before the Bengal Tenancy Act came into operation and the tenant held over. The effect of this holding over must be that the land was held on the terms of the original lease, on the same rent and on the same stipulations as to interest, etc. as were mentioned in that lease. See Kishore Lal Dey v. Administrator-General of Bengal (1). Refers also to Alim v. Satish Chandra (2) and Kali Nath Sen v. Trailokhya Nath Roy (3). See also Lal Gopal Dutt Chowdhry v. Monmatha Lall Dutt (4) and Sreemati Pramada Sundari Sarkar v. Ledu Mattabar (5). The defendants are thus liable to pay interest at the rate stipulated in the original kabuliyat. Then as to the rent payable in kind section 67 of the Bengal Tenancy Act has no manner of application. See Bisheshar Nath Sahu v. Husani Sao (6). The expression "arrears of rent" is defined in section 54 clause (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, which must be read with section 53 of the Act. This latter section applies only to money rent. Therefore, so far as the produce rent is concerned, section 67 is no bar to the plaintiffs' recovering interest at the stipulated rate. The fact that the contractual rate of interest amounted to a hard and unconscionable bargain cannot be a ground for disallowing the same.

Babu Birendra Kumar De, for the Respondents.—It is not necessary for me to rely upon the finding that the transaction was a hard and unconscionable bargain. I rely only upon section 67 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and invite your Lordships' attention to Chandra Nath Sarma v. Sheikh Inamdi (7). There it has been laid down that the tenant holding over is not liable to pay interest on the arrears of rent more than that mentioned in section 67 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. With regard to the produce rent it cannot be seriously argued that section 67 has no application. The case reported as Bisheshar Nath Sahu v. Husani Sao (6) is based on a misconception of the decision of the Privy Council in Hemanta Kumari Debi v. Jagadindra Nath Roy (8). The definition of arrears of rent contained in clause (3) of section 54 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is not exhaustive.

Babu Tarak Chandra Chakrabutty replied.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for arrears of rent, and the only point to be decided is the rate of interest to be given to the plaintiffs on the arrears.

The tenancy commenced with the execution of a registered kabuliyat for a term of three years on the 25th May 1880 and the defendants in this suit are the sons and son-in-law of the executant of the kabuliyat and they or their predecessor have been holding over since the first term of the kabuliyat expired. The kabuliyat provides for payment of 24 rupees in cash and 3 aras of paddy, or in lieu of the paddy 12 rupees per annum. The condition as to interest contained in the kabuliyat is that the tenant should pay interest at 6 pies per rupee per mensem on the cash rent and one cotta per rupee per month on the rent payable in paddy. Both the lower Courts have held that the plaintiffs cannot get interest at higher rate than $12\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. per annum. This finding is based on two grounds, firstly, that the contract for interest was a hard and unconscionable bargain, and, secondly, that the provisions of section 67 of the Bengal Tenancy Act are a bar to the plaintiff's getting any higher rate of interest than that provided in that section.

On appeal both these grounds were attacked. But the learned Vakil for the respondent was content to rely on the application of section 67 and the question of the effect of the finding that the bargain was hard and unconscionable was not argued. As regards the effect of section 67 the point has recently been considered by a Division Bench of this Court in the case of Chandra Nath Sarma v. Sheikh Inamdi (7). In that case it is pointed out that there has been divergence of judicial opinion as to the effect of holding over and the more important cases dealing with this point are there discussed. On behalf of the appellants it is strenuously urged that when a tenant holds over there is no new contract entered into which would make the provisions of section 178 of the Bengal Tenancy Act applicable and that consequently there is no bar to recovery of interest under the terms of the original contract if that is made before the passing of that Act. This contention is overruled by the decision above cited. That decision has been attacked. We do not think that we should be justified in referring the matter to a Full Bench. On behalf of the appellant our attention has been drawn to another recent decision in the case of Sreemati Pramada Sundari Sarkar v. Ledu Mattabar (5), Second Appeals Nos. 167 and 2269 of 1918, decided on the 3rd June 1920. A short note of this case appears in 24 Calcutta Weekly Notes, (Notes Portion) Clii. On examination of the judgment we find that it is of no assistance to the present case. The judgment itself does not state the facts. From the paper-book it appears that no question of the applicability of section 67 was ever raised. The lower Appellate Court in that case reduced the interest arbitrarily on the ground that the bargain was hard and unconscionable. The tenancy held by the defendant was Osat nim howla or permanent tenure and, therefore, that case would be covered by the Full Bench case in Lal Gopal Dutt Chowdhry v. Monmatha Lal Dutt (4). The facts of the present case cannot be distinguished from the facts of the case of Chandra Nath Sarma v. Sheikh Inamdi (7) already referred to and we follow that decision.

One other point was argued. It was contended that so far as the rent in kind was concerned section 67 would have no application. This contention is based on a decision of the Patna High Court, Bisheshar Nath Sahu v. Husani Sao (6). With all respect to the learned Judges who decided that case we are unable to agree with them that section 67 is inapplicable to a case of produce rent which is not paid quarterly. That decision is based on the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Hemanta Kumari Debi v. Jagadindra Nath Roy (8). That decision has been considered in two reported cases of this Court, Narendra Kumar Ghose v. Gora Chand Poddar (9) and Monohar Mukherjee v. Khetra Nath [Paresh Chandra Mukherjee (10) and it has been held that their Lordships of the Judicial Committee did not rule that the whole of the section 67 is limited in its application to cases where rent is payable quarterly. We do not see any reason why section 67 should not be applicable to interest on arrears of paddy of rent paid annually. On behalf of the appellants it is contended in support of this objection that arrears of rent is defined by section 54 clause (3) and that clause must be read with section 53 which applies only to money rent. Clause (3) of section 54 is not so exhaustive a definition which includes every kind of arrears of rent. It only deals with cases of rent payable in instalments. It would be absurd to hold that all arrears of rent were covered by this definition, otherwise rent payable annually would never fall in arrear.

For these reasons, we hold that this appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Wardha, dated the 23rd November 1918, confirming that of the Subordinate Judge, No. 1, Wardha, dated the 6th August 1918.

Mr. W. V. Gharpure, for the Appellant.

Mr. V. Bose, Sir Bipin Krishna Bose and Mr. S. R. Mangrulkar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Vithoba, son of Harbaji Rajput, a lunatic suing through his next friend and corsin, one Bajirao, claims from his two wives and Waman, his son, partition of his ancestral estate situated in the Wardha District. The District Judge, Amroati, had in 1913 declared Vithoba to be a lunatic under Act XXV of 1856, appointing the son guardian of the lunatic's person and property. The case was tried on the following issues :—

(1) Should Bajirao be allowed to act as the next friend of the lunatic plaintiff?

(2) Can the lunatic claim partition of the family property?

The Trial Court found the second issue in the negative, and also found against Bajirao acting as the next friend. The suit was dismissed. The lower Appellate Court dealt with the single question whether a lunatic can claim partition and confirmed the finding of the Trial Court in this respect.

Again in this Court the sole question is whether Vithoba, an admitted lunatic, can sue for partition.

For the appellant only one case exactly in point has been quoted, namely, Hotchand Gulabrai v. Manghanmal Gulabrai (1), in which two of three Judges of the Judicial Commissioner's Court held, to quote the head-note: "A co-parcener who has become a lunatic subsequent to his birth can, during his lunacy, maintain a suit for partition of his share in the joint family property. He has vested rights in such property by birth which are not divested by his subsequent lunacy."

Mayne in his well-known book on Hindu Law writes :—

"Persons who labour under any defect which disqualifies them from inheriting are equally disentitled to a share on partition." (Paragraph 484.)

And also dealing with the question of exclusion from inheritance the same author writes in paragraph 594 :—

"As to mental infirmity, it has been held that the degree of incapacity which amounts to idiocy is not utter mental darkness. It is sufficient if the person is, and has been from his birth, of such an unsound and imbecile mind as to be incapable of instruction or of discriminating between right and wrong. He must, in short, be one whom it would be impossible to describe as a reasoning being."

(1) 29 Ind. Cas. 42; 8 S. L. R. 279.

NOTE.—It appears probable that in this passage the words "incapacity" and "idiocy" have been interchanged by a printer's error.

Shastri at page 360 of his book on Hindu Law quotes the text of Manu governing the case as follows :—

"An impotent person and an outcast are excluded from a share of the heritage, and so are those deaf-and-blind-from-birth, as well as madmen-idiots-and-the-dumb and any others that are devoid of an organ of sense or action."

At page 373 of the same book the author writes :—

"Insanity is a disease of the mind, which need not be congenital nor incurable to exclude from inheritance the person affected thereby at the time the succession opens. And also a member of a joint family governed by the Mitakshara will be precluded from participating in a share as co-parcener if at the time of partition he is affected by insanity, although he was free from that disease before, and did acquire a right to the ancestral property from his birth."

The cases directly in point are Wooma Pershad Roy v. Grish Chunder (2), Ram Sahye v. Lalla Laljee Sahye (3) and Ram Soonder Roy v. Ram Sahye (4). On the question whether an insane person can inherit under Hindu Law it was held in Ram Singh v. Bhani (5) that a person is disqualified from succeeding to property if he is insane when the succession opens, whether his insanity is curable or incurable : and the question was decided in the same manner in Deo Kishen v. Budh Prakash (6) by the Judges of the Allahabad High Court. So far back as 1872 it was held in Dwarkanath Bysack v. Denobundho Mullick (7) that a mad man could not inherit, and insanity was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council to be a bar to inheritance in Baboo Bodhnarain Singh v. Baboo Omrao Singh (8). It seems clear that insanity, as a ground of exclusion from inheritance under Hindu Law, need not be congenital : Muthusami Gurukkal v. Meenammal (9). The weight of authority is, therefore, to the effect that insanity at the time when the succession opens is sufficient to disqualify, and that under the Mitakshara Law a person who is at the time insane is not entitled to share upon a partition in a joint family ; if he is not entitled to share he is not entitled to demand partition. The view taken by the two lower Courts is correct.

It is unnecessary to decide, nor has it been argued, whether Bajirao could act as the next friend of the plaintiff. This appeal is dismissed with costs and I direct appellant to pay respondents' costs.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 288—Statement made before Committing Magistrate—Transfer to Sessions record—Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 105, 114 ill. (b), 133, 154—Cross-examination of witness by party producing him—Accomplice—Corroboration—Confession of co-accused—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 100, 102—Right of private defence of body, when commences.

The Sessions Court has absolute discretion to allow the statement of a witness made before the Committing Magistrate to be transferred to its own record under section 288 of the Criminal Procedure Code, but it should not allow the statement to be read out to the witness before the defence has had an opportunity of cross-examining him. [p. 123, col. 2.]

A Public Prosecutor is not bound to produce witnesses whom he considers to be false and the Court should not allow him to cross-examine prosecution witnesses immediately they are produced. [p 123, cols. 1 & 2.]

The burden of proving the existence of circumstances bringing a case within any of the general exceptions of the Penal Code rests upon the accused and section 105 of the Evidence Act says the Court shall presume the absence of such circumstances. [p. 132, col. 1.]

Section 133 of the Evidence Act lays down the rule of law regarding the testimony of accomplices, and section 114, illustration (b), is merely a guide to assist the Court, though in a vast majority of cases prudence requires that there shall be corroboration. No hard and fast rules can, however, be laid down to regulate the extent and nature of this corroboration, this being dependent entirely on the circumstances of each case. [p. 133, col. 2.]

The evidence of one approver cannot be said to corroborate that of another except where both have, at the earliest opportunity, and before there has been any chance of corroboration, deposed to the same acts as having been committed by a particular accused person. [p. 148, col. 2; p. 149, col. 1.]

The Court should insist on there being unanimity as to the incidents deposed to, or a sufficient number of them, by two approvers before their uncorroborated testimony is deemed sufficient to warrant a conviction thereon. [p. 149, col. 1.]

A confession made by a co-accused after the whole of the prosecution evidence has been recorded can be used as evidence against the person making it, but cannot be used as against his co-accused either as evidence in itself or as corroboration of the testimony of an accomplice. [p. 134, col. 2.]

Section 100 of the Penal Code gives the right of private defence of the body only against actual assailants, it does not authorise the killing or causing of hurt to persons who may in the future when re-inforced by others become assailants. The right arises only on the occurrence of an offence, or of an attempt to commit an offence, and as soon as a reasonable apprehension of danger to the body arises from an attempt or threat to commit the offence, though the offence may not have been committed. JUDGMENT.—On the 20th of February 1921 a very serious occurrence took place inside the enclosure of the Janam Asthan Gurdwara at Nankana in the Sheikhupura District, in the course of which a number of persons, estimated at 130, lost their lives. The majority of these persons are said to have been killed inside the enclosure of the shrine but a few, as will be shown hereafter, were killed outside in the vicinity. In connection with this occurrence Narain Das, the Mahant of the shrine, and 50 other persons were committed to take their trial before the Additional Sessions Judge of Lahore on charges under sections 304, 148, 149, 201, 109 and 114, Indian Penal Code. Out of these 51 persons, Sundar Singh, accused No. 45, died in jail before the trial commenced and the charge against accused No. 47, Abdul Karim, was withdrawn by the Government Advocate during the trial. Out of the remaining 49, 16 were acquitted, 8 persons, namely, Mahant Narain Das, Hari Nath, Kadir, Nur Sadin, Atma Ram, Surain Singh, Ranjha and Rehana were convicted of murder and of rioting armed with deadly weapons under section 302, read with sections 149 and 148, Indian Penal Code, and were sentenced to death. Eight others, namely, Piara Singh, son of Hari Singh, Jiwan Das, Arsjan Das, Kaman, Piar

Singh son of Sunder Singh, Balak Das, Jetha Singh and Jagat Singh were convicted of murder under section 302, read with section 149, Indian Penal Code, and of rioting armed with deadly weapons under section 148, Indian Penal Code, and were sentenced to transportation for life. The remaining 17 persons, namely, Gul Akbar Khan, Ashiq alias Sher Baz, Nur Muhammad, Rahman, Nek Muhammad, Aziz Ul'ah, Abdullah, Ismail, Muhammad Azam, Abdul Karim, Abdul Wali, Lal Muhammad, Imam Gul, Sayyad Fakir, Mehr Ali, Gul Ahmad and Lal Das, were convicted under section 201, Indian Penal Code, of causing the disappearance of evidence of the commission of an offence punishable with death and were sentenced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment each.

From this order the following eleven separate appeals have been filed to this Court: Criminal Appeal No. 902 by Mahant Narain Das; No. 904 by Ranjha and Rehana, No. 906 by Surain Singh; No. 1065 by Kaman and Piar Singh, son of Sunder Singh, Jetha Singh and Jagat Singh; No. 983 by Piara Singh, son of Hari Singh, and Jiwan Das; No. 984 by Lal Das; No. 1066 by Balak Das and Arjan Das. With him appeared Mr. Bhagat Ram Puri, Advocate, and Mr. Ram Lal, Advocate, except in the appeals of Surain Singh, Piara Singh, son of Hari Singh, Lal Das and Jiwan Das for whom Mr. Dhanraj Shah appeared along with Mr. Hasan Imam; Criminal Appeal No. 903 by Kadir and Nur Sadin for whom Mr. Miran Bakhsh, Advotate, appeared; Criminal Appeal No. 905 by Atma Ram for whom Mr. Bhagat Ram Puri, Advocate, appeared; Criminal Appeal No. 917 by Hari Nath for whom Mr. Ram Lal, Advocate, appeared; Criminal Appeal No. 907 by 16 persons sentenced under section 201, Indian Penal Code, to seven years' rigorous imprisonment, for whom Mr. Miran Bakhsh, Advocate, appeared. Mr. Herbert, Government Advocate, and Pandit Jowala Parshad, Public Prosecutor, appeared for the Crown. This judgment disposes of all these appeals.

The shrine at Nankana is dedicated to Guru Nanak and is called the Janam Asthan Gurdwara, or the brith place Gurdwara, Guru Nanak having been born at Nankana. The history of the shrine is thus given in a letter No. 210/6, dated the 7th April 1906, from C. J. Hallifax, Esquire, Deputy Commissioner, to H. J. Maynard, Esquire, I. C. S., Commissioner, Lahore, a copy of which was filed by Mahant Narain Das along with his written statement:—

"In the middle of the 17th century Bava Lajpat Bedi, a descendant of the Guru, visited his birth place and built a shrine there which was called Janam Asthan. A little later other shrines were built. When these shrines had been established, Hammun, an Udasi, and after him Duni Chand Udasi, and Natha Singh, a Nirmala Sadhu, as Hammun's assistants, were appointed to look after them, and the chelas of these Sadhus who have inherited directly through them have ever since been in possession."

From the above it would appear that the Sadhus have been the managers or Mahants in possession of the Janam Asthan shrine since it was founded more than 250 years ago and would naturally consider themselves entitled to retain possession as such, and would be entitled to resist attempts to dispossess them by unlawful means. Narain Das Udasi, appellant, was the Mahant of the shrine at the time of the occurrence—20th February. Like the Mahants of many other shrines in the Punjab he is an Udasi. According to Macauliffe's book on the Sikh Religion, page 79 of the Introduction, we find that "there were three great schisms of the Sikh religion which led to the falsification of old, or the composition of new, Janam Sakhis. The schismatics were known as the Udasis, the Minas, and the Handalis. The first schism of the Sikhs began immediately after the demise of Guru Nanak. Some of his followers adopted Sri Chand, his elder son, as his successor, and repudiated the nomination of Guru Angad. The followers of Sri Chand were termed Udasis or the solitary, and they now constitute a large body of devout and earnest men."

The orthodox Sikhs, who follow all the ten Gurus, are, or profess to be, dissatisfied with the management of the Gurdwaras, and in the autumn of 1920 a Committee consisting of 175 members from different parts of the Province and known as the Gurdwara Parbandhak Committee was formed in Amritsar for the management of all Sikh Gurdwaras and other religious institutions of the Sikhs and for the purpose, if necessary, of taking possession forcibly of such places. See in this connection the note on Sikh agitation prepared by P. W. No. 17, Hakim Ikram-ul-Haq, Deputy Superintendent Police, C. I. D. In the course of his note this witness states that on the 21st-22nd November 1920 a party of Akali Sikhs seized the Panja Sahib shrine at Hasan Abdul, and on the 28th of December the Sachcha Sauda Gurdwara in the Sheikhupura District was seized by a Sikh jatha and the Mahant was expelled. Fearing a similar fate the Mahant of the Nankana Sahib shrine of the same district collected a number of supporters with a view to offering resistance should his shrine be attacked. In January 1921 the Gurdwara at Chohala village in the Amritsar District was seized by a party of Sikhs of the Manjha. At Tarn Taran, in the Amritsar District, a collision occurred on the 25th January 1921 between the pujaris and the reforming party in which a number of persons were injured, two of whom have since died. The seizure of these shrines was quite sufficient to make the Mahants of other shrines, including Mahant Narain Das, appellant, apprehensive that the Sikhs might come and take forcible possession of their shrines too. In consequence, he applied to the authorities, as he himself admits in his written statement (pages 310—312 of the printed paper-book). In paragraph 4 of this statement he says: "Being apprehensive of attack, I approached every quarter for help and assistance. I had an interview with Mahatma Gandhi at Lahore, and he promised to speak to the Sikhs, which he did in the Annual League Meeting at Lahore. I also made representations to His Excellency the Governor, to the Members of the Executive Council and to the Ministers. I laid my case before nearly all high Police Officials, particularly Mr. Bowring and Mr. Mercer. I waited in a deputation on the Hon'ble Mr. C. M. King, then Commissioner, Lahore Division, and pleaded for protection against apprehended attack, which every subject can of right demand of duly established Government." In paragraph 5 he states that he was told by the Commissioner and other responsible Government Officials that this was a religious matter, and he was to make his own arrangements. In the absence of getting any help from the authorities he admits in paragraph 8 that he engaged Pathans as chaukidars who kept watch outside the shrine and also took steps to put the shrine in a state capable of defence and even made arrangements for storing food and other provisions inside the Gurdwara in case of a seige. He also admits in paragraph 9 that he possessed a revolver and two guns and that he purchased a certain quantity of ammunition and had previously also bought ammunition for sport. In paragraph 11 he says that his instructions to the Pathans and his adherents were only to repel all attacks to seize possession of the shrine and that firearms were to be used only as a last resort.

The Mahant's statement as to the application made by him for protection to the authorities was borne out by the evidence of the following witnesses:—

P W. No. 128 Mr. I. W. Bowring, Superintendent Police, C. I. D. (page 240 of the paper book) says: "The Mahant appealed to me personally that he was afraid of being dispossessed by the Sikhs. On the first occasion he did so at the Nankana fair in November and later on he came to see me at my office in Lahore. I did not tell him whether he could have Police protection or not. It was not in my province."

D. W. No. 97 Mr. C. M. King, (page 426 of the paper-book) says: "On one occasion a large number of Mahants came to me. They wanted Government to protect the shrine generally. I did not supply the protection on behalf of Government that they were seeking. There was a conference of Government Officials about the Gurdwaras. It was decided that there should be no defending of the Gurdwaras by Police force." It is also clear from the evidence on the record that the Gurdwara Parbandhak Committee were contemplating interference with the management of the shrine at Nankana.

D. W. No. 76 is Sardar Sundar Singh, Honorary Magistrate and Jagirdar and President of the Gurdwara Parbandhak Committee. In the course of his evidence he states that there was certainly a resolution of some date which he could not remember that an open letter was to be addressed to a Mahant or Mahants and that it was decided to write to the Nankana Mahant that if a satisfactory reply was not received, a Diwan should be held at Nankana to discuss the matter. The 4th or 5th of March was probably the date fixed for this meeting at Nankana.

D. W. No. 153 Sardar Sardul Singh says (page 465 of the printed paper-book): "I have been interested throughout in the Gurdwara movement and have taken a prominent part in it. The Sikhs several times asked Government to help them to reform the Gurdwaras but without results. The Parbandhak Committee was formed for the reformation of the Gurdwaras before the Nankana occurrence. The Committee warned the Mahant of Nankana to reform abuses in his Gurdwara. It is correct that the Committee gave him notice that the Sikhs would be obliged to turn him out at the Diwan of the 3rd or 4th March if he did not institute reforms. I think 23rd Phagan was fixed for a Diwan at Nankana." It appears from the calendar that the 23rd of Phagan corresponded with the 5th of March 1921.

In consequence of the forcible seizure of shrines in various parts of the Province the Mahants decided upon having a meeting in Lahore on the 20th February 1921 to consult together as to what steps should be taken for their protection. It is common ground that Mahant Narain Das was in Lahore in connection with this conference on the 18th of February and that he returned to Nankana by train arriving there on the morning of the 19th. The chief day of the conference was to be the 20th of February and on the evening of the 19th the Mahant went to the station at Nankana in order to proceed to Lahore. When he was in the train there waiting for it to start he was informed that a jatha or band of Sikhs was at Bughiana, some seven miles distant, and fearing that this jatha was on its way to Nankana to take forcible possession of the shrine he gave up his intention of proceeding to Lahore and returned to his baithak which adjoins the enclosure of the Gurdwara. At the same time he had sent some of his adherents to find out what the movements of the jatha said to be at Bughiana were and learnt that it had proceeded to some other place. It, therefore, appears probable that he did not anticipate any immediate attack by the Sikhs on his Gurdwara and went to rest on the night of the 19th February feeling fairly secure.

We now proceed to quote two paragraphs from page 2 of the learned Sessions Judge's judgment which shows what he finds to be the main facts of the occurrence of the 20th February.

"On the night of the 19th February a body of Sikhs of uncertain numbers gathered from various villages in the neighbouring Lyallpur District, and under the command of one Lachhman Singh of Dharowal in that District, marched through the night to Nankana with the object of taking possession of the Janam Asthan shrine in the name of the Sikh reformation party. Although they were styled a jatha, a name which implies some sort of organisation, they were in fact a mere rabble.

"They arrived at Nankana about daybreak and most of them marched straight into the four walled enclosure surrounding the shrine or Gurdwara. This enclosure has a principal entrance facing the east called the Darshani door which leads into a porch or deorhi, another door on the south facing the Bazar and called the Bazar door, and a third door on the west. The Sikhs found a few early morning worshippers and a Pujari named Thakur Das conducting a service in the shrine proper and some of the Mahant's tenants, who were supposed to be on guard but were in fact asleep, in a verandah of one of the enclosure walls. Thakur Das was pushed out roughly but no particular harm was done to him. No one else was molested. The doors were shut but the guards were allowed to escape by the Darshani door. Meanwhile, a crowd of the Mahant's supporters began to gather outside the doors, some armed with chhavis and axes and some with sticks. An attempt on the part of the Sikhs to oust the Mahant from the control of the Gurdwara had been expected, but for the moment both parties were taken by surprise and neither had any definite plan of action. Then a few men of the Mahant's party climbed on to the walls of the enclosure. Three or four of them had shot guns and opened fire on the Sikhs below in the enclosure, while others threw bricks of which there were several heaps on the walls. This caused a panic. The Sikhs bolted for shelter into the rooms and varandahs at the Darshani entrance and into the shrine itself. Their assailants admitted the main crowd of the Mahant's followers, and a systematic attack was made upon the hiding places of the Sikhs. Into these the guns were fired and the stick and axe men finished off all who were not shot to death. Other Sikhs who came up later, being either stragglers from Lachhman Singh's party or possibly casual visitors, were attacked and pursued outside the enclosure walls and some were killed and wounded. Finally, the dead were gathered together in heaps, mostly within the Gurdwara enclosure but some outside, and burnt."

It is necessary to somewhat amplify the above summary. After the attacks in pursuit of stragglers outside the Gurdwara enclosure the pursuers returned. It is said that one Gurdit Singh then reported that the doors of the chaukhandi (the actual shrine of the Janam Asthan) were closed and that he could not open them and that there were probably some Sikhs inside. Upon this the Mahant's adherents went inside the Gurdwara enclosure and killed a number of Sikhs who had shut themselves into the chaukhandi. When the killing was over the bodies were dragged out and those already outside having been collected they were set on fire in heaps with the help of wood and kerosine oil.

It is common ground that the Gurdwara Parbandhak Committee had fixed the 23rd of Phagan, corresponding to 5th March 1921, for the holding of a Diwan or Jor Mela at Nankana at which the question of reforms in the Janam Asthan shrine was to be discussed and it was to be seen whether the Mahant had instituted or intended to institute the reforms desired by the Committee, and whether he should be turned out from his Mahantship or not. It is also in evidence and not disputed that certain persons including Lachhman Singh were to go there beforehand and prepare the langar or, in other words, make preparations for feeding the concourse of people who were expected to gather. The prosecution version is that the members of Lachhman Singh's jatha, who entered the enclosure of the Janam Asthan on the morning of the 20th February, had gone there merely with the object of making preparations for the Diwan of the 5th March. The learned Sessions Judge, however, has, after carefully reviewing the evidence, come to the conclusion that Lachhman Singh and his party intended to capture the Gurdwara—see page 5, line 20 et seq of the judgment. He has discussed the question at length in the judgment from page 3, line 22, to page 5, line 32. He points out at page 4, line 31, that "there is plenty of evidence on the prosecution side that Lachhman Singh's party shut the doors of the Gurdwara enclosure when they entered and placed guards over them, e.g., the statements of worshippers such as Balak Nath (P. W. No. 27), Barkat Singh (P. W. No. 45), Ladha Mal (P. W. No. 57), Piara (P. W. No. 61) and Radha (P. W. No. 110), of Jowala Singh (P. W. No. 51), Harnam Singh (P. W. No. 32) and the guards who are tenants of the Gurdwara lands, namely, P. W. Nos. 64, 65, 67 to 76 and 91 to 93. That the Akalis interrupted the service and turned out Thakur Das Pujari is proved by the evidence of Thakur Das himself, Ghani Nand, (P. W. No. 247), Ladha Mal (P. W. No. 57) and Radha (P W. No. 110) of which no rebuttal is offered."

It is clear, therefore, that the Sikhs on arrival marched straight into the enclosure, turned out the worshippers and guards, shut the doors and put guards over them. These acts are prima facie evidence that Lachhman Singh and his party intended to take possession of the shrine. We are not impressed with the learned Government Advocate's arguments that the doors were shut and guarded so that the Sikhs should not be interrupted in their worship. These were acts signifying their intention to take possession and were in themselves quite sufficient for the Mahant and his followers to conclude that this was their intention.

Some members of Lachhman Singh's jatha were certainly armed with axes, safa jangs (battle-axes) and long kirpans, but there is very little evidence that any of them possessed any fire-arms. There is no evidence at all on the record that any of them used fire arms. In our opinion it must be held that none of the members of the jatha possessed any.

No less than 263 witnesses have been examined on the side of prosecution. They are classified as follows by the learned Sessions Judge :—

Police Officers testifying to the investigation and arrests ...	16
Medical witnesses ...	8
Formal witnesses in connection with Exhibits ...	47
Eye witnesses including four approvers ...	66
Alleged eye witnesses regarded by the prosecution as hostile ...	9
Alleged eye-witnesses cross-examined by the prosecution or tendered for cross-examination ...	10
Witnesses tendered for cross examination and not questioned ...	11
Relatives or acquaintances of Sikhs killed or alleged to have been killed ...	96

The approvers are Gomi, Ladha, Takiullah and Farid, P. W. Nos. 23 to 26.

The Sessions Judge in his judgment has described these witnesses and the way in which they came to be given conditional pardons. Takiullah and Farid are two out of 28 Pathans who were engaged by Mahant Narain Das as guards on the 3rd February—see in this connection the evidence of Shamboo Nath (P. W. No 140). We do not believe the evidence of the Pathans that they were not engaged as guards but merely for the purpose of building a school. These men were arrested on the evening of the 20th February and were sent at once to Lahore along with Mahant Narain Das and others, and were kept in custody in the Central Jail until they made statements to the Police on the 17th March. Conditional pardons were then tendered and their statements were recorded by Diwan Mahesh Das on the 22nd and 23rd March. These are marked Exhibits P. D. R. and P. D. S. and will be found printed at pages 54 to 61 of the book of Exhibits. As pointed out by the Sessions Judge, these two Pathans had no opportunity of meeting Gomi and Ladha between the 20th February and the dates on which their statements were recorded, Gomi and Ladha who were arrested a few days after the occurrence were kept at Nankana and were never sent to the Central Jail at Lahore. The reason given by the Police Officers for keeping them at Nankana and not sending them to Lahore was that they were expected to make confessions. We shall refer hereafter to the evidence of Hakim Ikram-ul-Haq, D. S. P., C. I. D., (P. W. No. 17), and Fazl Imam, Inspector, C.I.D. (P. W. No. 19), which shows that Gomi and Ladha were kept apart from each other under such circumstances that they could not collaborate and they had no opportunity of collaborating prior to making their statements to Diwan Mahesh Das. Ladha made his statement on the 10th and 11th March—see pages 43 to 53 of the book of Exhibits and Gomi made his on the 15th—pages 37 to 42 of the same book. The facts that, prior to the making of their statements previous concert between them was highly improbable, and that concert between them on the one hand and the Pathan approvers on the other was also highly improbable, have to be paid regard to in connection with illustration (b) to section 114 of the Evidence Act which is that an accomplice is unworthy of credit unless he is corroborated in material particulars.

The learned Sessions Judge at pages 12 to 16 of his judgment has given a resumé of the evidence of the four approvers which it is not necessary for us to repeat. He also refers to the case of Hari Nath, appellant, who in the Committing Court denied complicity in the occurrence of the 20th February, but in the Sessions Court at the commencement of the trial pleaded guilty and after the conclusion of the prosecution evidence made a long statement fully inculpating himself as well as other accused persons. We shall show hereafter that this statement cannot, in our opinion, be used as corroboration of the evidence of the accomplices as against his co-accused.

The Sessions Judge has divided up the occurrences of the 20th February into seven main incidents and the learned Counsel in their arguments before us have adopted this division and we cannot do better than give it at this place.

(1) Entry of Lachhman Singh's jatha into the Gurdwara enclosure and its doings up to the commencement of the attack;

(2) Gathering of the Mahant's men outside the southern gate and the first attack from the walls of the enclosure;

(3) Killing in the darshani deorhi;

(4) Subsequent doings inside the enclosure, i. e., the baradari incident described by Takiullah and the killing of two Sikhs on the south wall;

(5) Exit from the enclosure and the shooting of Mangal Singh by Mahant Narain Das;

(6) Pursuit and killing of stragglers outside the enclosure and beyond the Railway line after the shooting of Mehnga Singh;

(7) The killing in the chaukhandi and the burning of bodies.

Before addressing us upon the events of the 20th February Mr. Hasan Imam had a great deal to say about the attitude of the Sikhs after the occurrence. The shrine was on the 21st February made over by the authorities to a Committee of Sikh gentlemen. There is ample evidence on the record and it is not denied that after the occurrence hundreds or rather thousands of Sikhs, mostly armed with axes or kirpans, assembled at Nankana or in the vicinity and that their attitude was a threatening one. It is also proved and admitted that a Committee of Sikhs was constituted for the purpose of investigation and that the members of this Committee arrested people wholesale on their own account. They behaved generally in a rather high-handed manner and interfered with the Police investigation. This matter is dealt with by the learned Sessions Judge at page 32 of his judgment from which we quote the following:—

"There is no doubt that the Sikhs interfered considerably to start with. This is proved by Mr. Bowring, Superintendent of Police (P. W. No. 128) and Hakim Ikram-ul-Haq, Deputy Superintendent of Police (P. W. No. 17). Nine persons were released by the Police from actual confinement. Sixty-seven more were detained by the Sikhs and released by the Police. Out of 40 more arrested at the instance of the Sikhs 36 were discharged under Magistrate's order during the investigation.

"A number of these persons have been called as defence witnesses and although they complain of their treatment and some say that they were told by the Sikhs that they would be let off if they gave evidence against the Mahant, none can repeat any definite story which the Sikhs told him to tell.

"For instance, D. W. Nos. 2, 3, 9, 15, 17, 18 and 34 say that the Sikhs beat them but said nothing to them. D. W. No. 8 was merely asked why he had come to Nankana. D. W. Nos. 4, 5, 6, 7 and 19 say that they were questioned by the Sikhs and told them nothing. D. W. Nos. 10, 11, 14, 16, 20, 28, 29 and 62 say that they were told to give evidence but not what to say. D. W. No. 22 says that the Sikhs merely threatened him and others arrested by them, D. W. Nos. 23 and 25 that they were told to say what they had seen, and that they said they had seen nothing, D. W. No. 30, that he replied that he had seen the Sikhs arrive armed and that he was beaten again for saying so. D. W. Nos. 28, 35, 36, 42, 50, 51, 53, 54, 56, 61 and 63 say that they were told to give evidence against the Mahant and that they said they knew nothing.

"Only D. W. Nos 44, 45, 48, 55 say that they were told by Uttam Singh (P. W. No. 108) to state that they had seen the Mahant and others firing guns. And all these defence witnesses declare that neither they nor anyone else in their presence yielded to threats or violence and consented to give false evidence.

"Balak Nath (P. W. No. 27) says that his statement was taken by the Sikh Committee on 21st February. Sant Singh (P. W. No. 28) says that he volunteered a statement to the Sikh Committee, which was recorded. Atma Ram (P. W. No. 31) says that he was arrested and ill-treated by the Akalis. He was one of the men released by the Police. Jai Singh (P. W. No. 64), one of the guards, says that he was detained by the Sikhs and was urged to speak the truth and say what he had seen.

"None of these men except Sant Singh has deposed personally against the Mahant, although they support the prosecution on other points. Sant Singh admits that he had a previous grudge against the Mahant, and that he was a companion and not a victim of the Akalis during the investigation."

Mr. Hasan Imam in particular drew our attention to the evidence of Mr. Bowring at page 238 of the printed record where he says: "When I arrived the Committee had head quarters at the Serai. I heard from my officers that the Committee had been examining witnesses. The inhabitants of Nankana ran away in large numbers. It was found necessary to appoint special Police Officers to enquire into the actions of the Sikhs. I found a party of nine persons confined in a kothri in the Serai. I had no reason to believe that they were there voluntarily. Some of them complained." At page 239 he says: "The Committee had an armed jatha at Nankana. It was found necessary to send for troops again and both cavalry and infantry came about a week or ten days after my arrival. There was a great deal of excitement. Many bad characters had collected and it was necessary to enforce order and re-assure the people."

Diwan Mahesh Das (P. W. No. 141) says, see page 253 of the printed record—"Numbers of Sikhs arrived at Nankana on the 21st February. The local people were frightened. Excesses were committed which commenced on the 22nd February. There were complaints of assaults, interference with women and destruction of Hindu pictures. Formal complaints as well as Police reports of cognisable offenses used to come to me in regard to the excesses by the Sikhs."

Mr. Connor, Superintendent of Police, (P. W. No. 255) stated that when His Excellency the Governor visited Nankana on the 22nd February, there were a number of armed Sikhs inside the Gurdwara, that they had kirpans on their shoulders, that they were shouting Sat Sri Akal, and that they gave him the impression that their attitude was threatening. When questioned by the learned Government Advocate he said that he considered that their attitude was threatening towards the partisans of the Mahant and that the people at Nankana were panic stricken on account of the attitude of the Akalis. Mr. Hasan Imam asked us to hold that all this evidence showed high handedness on the part of the Sikhs after the occurrence of the 20th February. He did not, however, ask us to hold that any particular witnesses for the prosecution had been coached by the Sikhs. In fact he was emphatic in stating that he did not in any way attack the conduct of the Police investigation. We think it is clear that the Sikhs did behave in a high-handed manner after the occurrence and we have no doubt that their conduct alienated the sympathies of many of the inhabitants of Nankana, who otherwise might have given evidence on behalf of the prosecution, and that the Police in their investigation were hampered by their conduct. At the same time, our conclusion is that the evidence as to the attitude of the Sikhs does not in any way tend to discredit the case of the prosecution or to show that the Police acted improperly in the course of the investigation.

Before discussing the case of each of the appellants individually there are certain points raised by Counsel in their arguments which may conveniently be dealt with at this stage.

I. Gomi's presence in Nankana on the 20th February. The defence produce 9 witnesses, D. Ws. Nos. 34, 39, 57, 60, 112 and 135 to 138, with the object of showing that Gomi was not at Nankana on that day, but was at the conference at Lahore. It is common ground that Gomi was in Lahore with the Mahant on the 18th February and that they and others returned together to Nankana by train on the 19th and that on the afternoon of that day the Mahant, Gomi and others went to the station at Nankana in order to proceed again to Lahore for the chief day of the conference which was the 20th February. While at the station the Mahant was informed that there was a jatha of Sikhs at Buchiana seven miles distant, and fearing that perhaps they intended to come on to Nankana with the object of taking possession of the shrine he turned back and remained at home that night. What the above nine witnesses for the defence seek to establish is that Gomi did not along with others get out of the train at Warburton and return to Nankana but went on to Lahore. The Sessions Judge has pointed out in detail the contradictions in the evidence of these witnesses and has come to the conclusion that it is impossible to hold that Gomi was at Lahore on the 20th February. He also noted that Mr. Petman, who was the chief Counsel for the Mahant, did not appear to rely on that evidence and had not referred to it in detail nor attempted to explain the inconsistencies in the evidence which convinced the Judge that it was false. In this Court also Mr. Hasan Imam merely gave us the numbers of the witnesses, but did not read out their evidence nor attempted to convince us that it should be accepted. We agree with the Sessions Judge that it is false evidence. Moreover, we think it highly improbable that Gomi would have been chosen by the Police as an approver if he had not actually taken part in the various occurrences which he has deposed to. Ladha had already made a statement to the Police and it would have been much too risky for the Police to fix upon a man as an approver who had no personal knowledge of the occurrence of the 20th February. Gomi has told a long and detailed story and has repeated it twice before Magistrates and again in the Sessions Court, and we do not think it possible that he could have done this without breaking down seriously under cross-examination had he not really witnessed the events deposed to by him.

We are quite satisfied, therefore, that Gomi was at Nankana on the 20th February and that he took part in the occurrences of that day. It is not denied that the other three approvers, Ladha, Takiullah and Farid, have deposed to events which they witnessed.

II. Gowardhan Das, son of Gomi, was betrothed three or four years before the occurrence to the daughter of Sundar Das who is a brother of Mahant Narain Das. The Mahant in paragraph 18 of his written statement at page 312 of the printed record states that Gomi deposes against him out of enmity as he (Mahant) was instrumental in breaking off the betrothal of his son and his (Mahant's) relations have excommunicated him because of his bad character and livelihood. Gomi himself denies that the betrothal has been broken off. The defence produced four witnesses in support of this contention, namely, D. W. No. 58 Gopal Das, D. W. No. 59 Hem Das, D W. No. 145 Lorind Chand, and D. W. No. 151 Mahant Lal Das. Mr. Hasan Imam read the evidence of Gopal Das only and asked us to accept his story, which is to the effect that some three years ago the witness was at a wedding at Khara, that Gomi got drunk at the wedding, that Mahant Narain Das was also present and was much annoyed and on account of Gomi's conduct got the betrothal between his brother's daughter and Gomi's son broken off. He also stated that the brotherhood at that time excommunicated Gomi. In answer to a question put in cross examination he stated that Dal Das and Ram Chand told Gomi to give up drinking and that Gomi replied that he would never give up drinking. Contrary to this, Hem Das, (D W. No. 59), says that Gomi admitted that he got drunk but asked for pardon, but that the Panchayat refused to forgive him although he promised not to drink again. This is a serious discrepancy between the statements of these two witnesses. Lorind Chand (D. W. No. 145) states that when his wife died Gomi offered him his daughter in marriage but the witness refused because he had already betrothed himself elsewhere. He does not say that he refused because Gomi had been excommunicated from his brotherhood, and it is very unlikely that, if Gomi had been excommunicated, he would have approached this witness in the way stated. Mahant Charan Das, at the bottom of page 452 of the printed record, states that he was at a wedding at Kasba a year ago and that Gomi also was there and sat and ate along with others.

The witness did not sit with him because he was a celibate, and the celibates sat in one row and the non-celibates, like Gomi, in another. This evidence also is quite opposed to the allegation that Gomi had been excommunicated from the brotherhood. We cannot, therefore, accept the evidence about the breaking off of the betrothal and the excommunication of Gomi. It is common ground that Gomi was with the Mahant at Lahore on the 18th February and accompanied him to Nankana on the 19th and that they intended to go back to Lahore together on the afternoon of that day. This fact is quite inconsistent with the story of the defence that the betrothal had been broken off, and that Gomi was on bad terms with the Mahant. Mr. Hasan Imam has urged that, if the betrothal had still subsisted, the personal equation would have come in and Gomi would not have given such strong evidence against the Mahant as he has done, whereas the existence of enmity would account for his doing so. It must, however, in this connection be remembered that Ladha's statement had already been recorded by Diwan Mahesh Das. Gomi did not know exactly what Ladha had stated and he might well have thought that it would be risky for him to conceal any part of his story whether it went particularly against the Mahant or not. He knew that his pardon was a conditional one dependent upon his telling the whole truth so far as he knew it in relation to the incidents of the 20th February. We are, therefore, not impressed with Mr. Hasan Imam's arguments upon this point.

III. After Gomi and Ladha had been granted conditional pardons and their statements had been recorded by Diwan Mahesh Das, they were taken to Lahore and the suspected persons were paraded before them in the Central Jail in the presence of a Magistrate on the 25th March. Gomi identified various persons—see page 8 of the book of Exhibits—but Ladha expressed his inability to identify any one. On the 28th March the suspected persons were again paraded before him in the Jail in the presence of a Magistrate and he identified a number of them—see pages 12 and 13 of the book of Exhibits. Ladha's explanation for not identifying any one at the first identification parade on the 25th March will be found in his statement at the bottom of page 70 of the printed record. It runs: "I was taken twice to Lahore Jail. On the first occasion I did not identify anyone because Sikhs at Nankana station said that the Akalis would not give any evidence and, therefore, the approver would be hanged." He added that he told Ikram-ul-Haq, D. S. P., the reason why on the first occasion he had not identified any of the accused, and that he made a statement to that effect also at the Deputy Commissioner's bungalow in Lahore, which is Exhibit P. D. Q. The latter statement is a detailed one and is corroborative of the reason given by him at the trial for his failure to identify anyone in Jail, on the 25th March. His statement is borne out by the evidence of P. W. No. 19 Fazal Imam, Inspector of Police, C. I. D., who states—see page 75 of the printed record. "On the 24th March Ladha was taken to Lahore by the 3 30 P. M. train. Certain witnesses were also taken. At the station a crowd of Nankana people gathered. I heard the crowd shout that in the Tarn Taran case the gurdwara had killed Sikhs, but that there had been non-co-operation and no case had been brought, and that in the same way in the Nankana case the Sikhs would non-co operate and would not give evidence and that only those who confessed would be hanged." In this connection we may also refer to the evidence of Sardar Sundar Singh, President of the Gurdwara Parbandhak Committee (D. W. No. 76), who states—see page 412 of the printed record: "I first helped the Police until the resolution for non-co-operation was passed." From this it appears that at one period of the investigation the Sikhs passed a resolution of non-co operation and, therefore, there is nothing improbable in the reason given by Ladha and in evidence of Fazl Imam (P. W. No. 19). In our opinion Ladha has given a satisfactory explanation for his failure to identify any of the accused at the first identification parade.

IV. It has been further urged in arguments that Ladha is a badmash against whom the Mahant had given evidence and that on this account he must be regarded as hostile to him. The record of a section 110 case against Ladha has been put in evidence from which it appears that he was discharged on 30th July. Mahant Narain Das, however, was not a witness against Ladha in that case. The Mahant in his written statement—see page 312 of the printed record—says that Ladha is a Register No. X badmash and that he gave evidence against him in those proceedings. It, therefore, does not appear that the Mahant ever gave evidence against him in any section 110 case. S. Buta Singh (P. W. No. 105) stated—see page 216 of the printed record—"I held a meeting at Sheikhupura in December 1920. Ladha, approver, was present drunk and the Mahant was outside. A Sikh present seized him and said that he was Mahant Narain Das's chela and was drunk before the Granth Sahib. He was brought to me in the deorhi. I asked what he had come for and he said that he had come to find out what was happening. I asked where he got his liquor from, and he said that he had a bottle outside in the Mahant's carriage. He was searched and two or three cartridges were found in his possession, and I wrote a rukka to the thana. Ladha said that the cartridges belonged to the Mahant." The rukka is Exhibit P. D. B.

and is dated the 28th of January 1921, so that the witness apparently is mistaken in saying that the occurrence took place in December 1920. In connection with this possession of cartridges Ladha was challaned for an offence under the Arms Act and a charge was framed against him on the 1st February 1921. In his statement in Court he stated that he was with the Mahant who had come by motor and sent him by train and that the cartridges belong to the Mahant. He cited the latter as a defence witness and the case was fixed for 10th February, but there were no proceedings on that date and the hearing was adjourned to the 24th February. Now Ladha was in the service of the Mahant up till the time of the occurrence and had been in his service for the five or six years previous to it. It does not appear to us to be at all probable that he was on bad terms with the Mahant seeing that he cited him as a witness for his defence only a few days before the 20th February. On the other hand, Ladha has undoubtedly toned down the original statement which he made before Diwan Mahesh Das. In that—see page 49 of the book of Exhibits—he stated that when Rehana and Ranjhe, appellants, were firing from the south wall, Mahant Narain Das was saying with a loud voice from the roof of his baithak: "Do not feel any anxiety, keep firing shots." At the trial he made no statement of this sort though he admits that he went up to the baithak and saw the Mahant on the roof while the firing was going on. After a careful consideration of all the circumstances we see no good reason for supposing that Ladha has given evidence against the Mahant because he bears him a grudge or was not on good terms with him.

V. Before the Committing Magistrate certain witnesses for the prosecution did not give the evidence which they were expected to give. They are said to have resiled from the statements made by them in the course of the Police investigation. Some of these witnesses, for instance, P. W. Nos. 78, 79, 82, 95, 96 and 104, were produced by the prosecution at the trial and the Court allowed the Public Prosecutor to cross-examine them from the very start. This procedure has been objected to in arguments before us. In our opinion it was certainly the duty of the Prosecutor to have these witnesses in attendance so that they could be examined by the defence, if necessary, though he was not bound to produce witnesses who were considered by the prosecution to be false. We do not think that it was right for the Court to allow the Prosecutor to put them in and to at once begin to cross-examine them. At the same time, no argument has been based upon this point and we do not find that any prejudice has been caused to the defence by the procedure adopted.

VI. Statements made by the approvers in the Committing Magistrate's Court were put in evidence by the prosecution, and were transferred to the record of the Sessions Court under the provisions of section 288 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The course which was adopted was that, after the witnesses had been examined-in-chief by the prosecution, their statements in the Committing Magistrate's Court were tendered and were then and there read out before the cross-examination took place. Mr. Petman, who appeared for Mahant Narain Das and others at the trial, objected to the statements being read out at that stage but the Court overruled the objection. Now, the Court had absolute discretion to allow the statements to be transferred under section 288 of the Code, but we do not think it should have allowed the statements to be read out to the witnesses before the defence had had an opportunity of cross-examining them.

VII. There is ample evidence on the record to show that at the time of the occurrence there were some 20 or 30 wandering fakirs or Nanga Sadhus encamped outside the Janam Asthan shrine. The learned Sessions Judge, in his judgment at page 23, says that at one stage of the case it appeared to be a definite defence that what occurred was a fight between Lachhman Singh's Sikhs, and these Nanga Sadhus who resented the invasion of the shrine by the Sikhs, that the Sikhs were victorious, and that after the affray they set fire to the bodies of the dead of both sides and disappeared. The learned Sessions Judge, however, has pointed out quite correctly that no evidence is forthcoming to support such a story. It was ultimately argued at the trial and the point has again been pressed before us that the presence of a number of Nanga Sadhus outside the shines has been proved and that the number of dead bodies estimated by the prosecution is far in excess of the number of Sikhs who were definitely proved to have come to Nankana as members of Lachhman Singh's jatha and to have disappeared since the 20th February. On the 23rd February an attempt was made to estimate the number of corpses inside the Gurdwara enclosure and in the potter's kiln outside where some five or six bodies had been burnt. This estimate was made by Sub Inspector Charan Singh (P.W. No. 21) with the help of three students of the Lahore Medical College, two of whom have been produced as witnesses, namely, Gian Singh (P. W. No. 112) and Harbans Singh (P.W. No. 181). These persons estimated the number of bodies in the Gurdwara to be 120 and the number outside to be six. In addition to this the dead bodies of three Sikhs and of Sant Ram Sadhu, which had not been burnt, were found lying inside the enclosure. Now, Gian Singh and Harbans Singh admit that they left Lahore without permission. Both of them are Sikhs and Gian Singh admits that he is an Akali. They are certainly not experts and the probability is that they sympathise with the Akalis and their tendency would be, if anything, to exaggerate the numbers of persons killed. Charan Singh is also a Sikh and not an expert, and we do not know to what extent he was influenced by the opinion of the two students. It is to be regretted that no examination of the dead bodies with a view to estimating their number was made by any qualified officer. It is impossible, in our opinion, to attach very much importance to the estimate of the number of dead bodies made by these three witnesses. It is quite possible, we think, that there may not have been more than 100 dead bodies even if there were as many as that.

Returning to the question of the presence of Nanga Sadhus in the shrine we quote the following passage from page 23, line 58 et seq of the judgment of the Sessions Judge:—

"Aggression against stray Sikhs by Nanga Sadhus outside the Gurdwara enclosure is spoken of by three prosecution witnesses, Nos. 51, 54 and 106, but they give the number of Sadhus only as 4 or 5, 2 and 6 or 7 respectively.

In cross-examination some other prosecution witnesses admit having seen Nanga Sadhus in various numbers up to 30 in or outside the Gurdwara on the night of the 19th, e. g., Balak Nath (P. W. No. 27) Ladha Mal (P. W. No. 57). Thakar Das (P. W. No. 58) and some of the guards (P. W. Nos. 64 to 69, 73 and 91). Hostile prosecution witnesses such as Tirath Singh (P. W. No. 60), Piara (P. W. No. 61) and Utman (P. W. No. 79) speak of Nanga Sadhus having been inside on the following morning before the Sikhs arrived, but the only witnesses who say anything about their having come to blows are Musammat Saddan (P. W. No. 102), Musammat Lachmi (P. W. No. 95) and Kishen Singh (P. W. No. 78). The first named is nearly blind and her fantastic story that the floor was strewn with the bodies of Nanga Sadhus over which she had to step cannot be taken seriously. The other woman Musammat Lachmi says that she heard sounds of fighting, that she does not know who fought and that she heard the Sikhs calling out that the bodies of Nanga Sadhus were to be burnt quickly in order that none might know whether Sikhs or Nanga Sadhus had been killed." I do not believe her either. Kishen Singh also is discredited. He has gone back on his former statement to the Police, he told his tale under cross-examination by the defence, and he followed it up by what I hold to be an equally false story about an attack on the Mahant by Akalis outside the Gurdwara.

"To the contrary is the evidence of Ghani Nand (P. W. No. 247) who is practically a Nanga Sadhu himself, that although he was ordered out and refused to go, he was not molested by the Sikhs and that he remained with them in the chaukhandi until the massacre there. There is no evidence of any Nanga Sadhu having a fire arm and this is also very unlikely. It is said by Kishen Singh that their weapons were fakirs' tongs, and it is absurd to suppose that wholesale slaughter could have been caused by such things. It is possible that Nanga Sadhus joined the crowd of the Mahant's supporters, but, beyond the story of P. W. No. 103 that six or seven Nanga Sadhus joined others in chasing him and his companions outside, there is no evidence that they did and there is nothing better than conjesture to conneet those who were seen there on the 19th with what happened inside the Gurdwara enclosure the next day. We note here that Mr. Hasan Imam expressly told us that the evidence of Musammat Saddan and Musammat Lachhmi might be disregarded.

We find, moreover, on reference to the record, that Barkat Singh (P. W. No. 48), a bailiff, and Ladha Mal (P. W. No. 57), both of whom were inside the shrine when the Sikhs arrived, say that they saw no Nanga Sadhus there at all, and in addition they make no mention of any fight occurring inside the enclosure. Piara (P. W. No. 61) says that he saw five or seven Nanga Sadhus only inside the enclosure. Utman (P. W. No. 79) who was cross examined with permiesion by the Public Prosecutor says that there were 30 or 32 Sadhus inside the Gurdwara when the Sikhs arrived and that the latter said, "Kill the Sadhus inside and shut the doors." The witness, however, went out, and does not say that any Sadhus were killed in his presence. In our opinion his statement is most improbable and we do not believe it. The killing of Sadhus in the way mentioned by him would have been entirely objectless.

To sum up, there is no evidence at all of any fight between the Sikhs and Nanga Sadhus and, if any such fight had occurred, we are sure that some of the witnesses would have deposed to it. As to the presence of Sadhus at all in the Gurdwara when the Sikhs arrived, we think there may have been a few but certainly not more than 10 or 12. It is probable that these men would have gone out with Thakar Das and others when the Sikhs arrived and before the firing began. Ghani Nand (P. W. No. 247), himself a Nanga Sadhu, states that he stayed inside the chaukhandi, but he does not say that any other Nanga Sadhu stayed there, and he admits that the Sikhs used no violence against him. It is, of course, possible that some Nanga Sadhus, who were in the shrine, did not leave the enclosure upon the arrival of the Sikhs and that they were killed by the Mahant's gun-men by mistake when the shooting from the walls began or afterwards in the darshani deorhi, but this would not affect the case so far as the appellants are concerned. Sant Ram, who is described as the brother of a Nankana halvai, was killed inside the enclosure and his body was found there when the Police arrived. Takiullah, approver, says that he ran out of the baradari when the killing in the darshani deorhi was going on and that he was shot by one of the Mahant's gunmen, and after he fell was struck with chhavis by other adherents of the Mahant. Some evidence has been produced to the effect that the Mahant ordered one Indar Das, an absconder, to cut the bullet out of Sant Ram's body so that it might not appear that he had been shot. Unfortunately there was no proper post mortem examination of any of the dead bodies because the Sikhs objected to the bodies being cut. We do not find it necessary to decide whether the bullet was cut out of the body of Sant Ram as alleged by the prosecution or not. It is quite possible, as pointed out by the learned Sessions Judge, for him to have been mistaken for a Sikh and to have been shot by accident and the mere fact that he was killed does not, in our opinion, lend any support to the defence theory of a fight between Sikhs and Nanga Sadhus.

We proceed now to deal more particularly with the case of Mahant Narain Das and the evidence against him. He had, prior to the 20th February, undoubtedly, as he himself admits, made preparations to resist any attack which the Sikhs might make with the intention of getting possession of the shrine. He has admitted in his written statement, that he engaged Pathans as guards, and Gomi and Ladha have both deposed to his having imported men from the Manjha and elsewhere for his protection, both on the occasion of a fair in November 1920 and shortly before the occurrence. Ranjha and Rehana, appellants, are two outsiders who were certainly imported by him. We will deal with their individual cases elsewhere in this judgment, but we may say at this place that we consider it proved that they were armed with guns during the attack on the Sikhs which was made from the south wall, and that they took part in that attack and in any such other attacks as were made upon Sikhs outside the Gurdwara enclosure. It is an admitted fact that the Mahant was licensed to possess a revolver and two guns. In his written statement part (2), pages 311 and 312 of the printed record, he says: "My instructions to the Pathans and my other adherents were only to repel all attacks made to seize possession of the shrine, and that fire-arms were to be used only as a last resort. The gun and the revolver with all the ammunition for the same were kept in one of the side rooms of the darshani deorhi to be immediately available on an emergency. One gun was out of order, and was kept in the baithak adjoining the Gurdwara enclosure." In his oral statement he said that the good gun and the pistol were kept inside the Darbar Sahib. His written statement shows that one gun at least, the revolver and ammunition for both weapons were kept in an accessible place and we are, therefore, of opinion that they cannot have been inside the Darbar Sahib on the night between the 19th and the 20th February. If they had been there, there would have been no opportunity for the Mahant's men to get possession of them on the morning of the 20th, for the Sikhs' visit was a surprise one and directly they entered the Gurdwara enclosure they closed the doors and placed guards in front of them. It is proved by abundant evidence that Rehana and Ranjha were firing guns from the south wall into the enclosure shortly after the arrival of the Sikhs, and Ladha in his evidence, at page 72 of the printed record, says that these men had the Mahant's guns. No witness deposes that they had guns of their own and we think there is no reason to disbelieve this part of Ladha's statement.

The first part of the prosecution case against the Mahant, in connection with the events of the 20th of February, is that he stood on the roof of his baithak, which is outside the Gurdwara enclosure, at a few yards distance from the south-west corner, and incited his adherents to attack the Sikhs. The evidence on this point is as follows:—Gomi, who says he came up on hearing the firing, states—see page 47 of the printed record—that the Mahant was standing on the north-east corner of the baithak and told his men not to be afraid but to kill the Sikhs; that he also called out to Shammun, who was one of the men on the south wall, to open the door as only a few men could climb the ladder and get up that way. Ladha, approver who apparently arrived after Gomi, says that he went up to the north-east corner of the Mahant's baithak where the Mahant was, but unfortunately he was not asked whether he had any conversation with the Mahant or whether the latter said anything to him. He probably went up to get orders from his master, the Mahant, and there can be little doubt that there was some conversation between them. He, like Gomi, states that the Mahant told Shammun to open the gate. Takiullah (P. W. No. 25), in his statement at page 84 of the printed record, states that there were some 40 of the Mahant's men assembled at the southern gate armed with sticks and axes and the Mahant told them to attack the Gurdwara and on this the men began to mount by a ladder. Farid, approver, says nothing about this incident. Harnam Singh (P. W. No. 32) who was one of the guards, says, see page 118 of the printed record—that, he saw the Mahant standing on the roof of his baithak facing towards the Gurdwara enclosure and waving his hands in that direction. Fateh Din (P. W. No. 115)—see page 228 of the printed record—says that he heard that the Sikhs had come, and on going to the Mahant's baithak, he saw that the Mahant had climbed on to the roof, that people were running towards the Gurdwara and the Mahant was shouting to them, "kise wara de nal inhan nun kaddo," in other words, "turn them out in some way," Shamboo Nath (P. W. No. 140), the Mahant's own servant, states that the Mahant was standing on his roof and not hiding inside as he himself says. We do not for one moment believe his story that he shut himself up in his baithak and stayed there till every thing was over. Bhurga Nand (D. W. No. 67) is the only witness upon this point but he is connected with the Mahant by marriage and is an interested witness. The Mahant on the afternoon of the 19th February, when he thought that there was a danger of Sikhs coming to attack the Gurdwara, did not go to join the conference at Lahore but returned to his baithak evidently with the intention of being on the spot to guard against the threatened aggression. Under these circumstances it is in the highest degree improbable that he would shut himself up in his baithak the whole time while the occurrences of the 20th February were going on. The evidence which we have referred to above coupled with the facts that Ranjha and Rehana were armed with the Mahant's guns and were firing at the Sikhs inside the Gurdwara, and that the Mahant took no steps to prevent them, satisfies us beyond all doubt that the Mahant did incite his followers to kill the Sikhs who had gone inside the Gurdwara.

We next come to the evidence as to the shooting of Mehnga Singh. It is in evidence that after the Sikhs, who were taking refuge in the Darshani deorhi and the rooms adjoining it, had all been killed the Mahant's men came out, some by the Darshani deorhi and some by the southern door. As they emerged from the latter a party of Sikhs, variously estimated as 8 to 15 in number, came round the corner from the direction of the Mahant's baithak. It is said that Rehana aimed his gun at these men and that one of them struck him with a chhavi, wounded him on the arm and caused him to drop the gun. Some of them are then said to have run in a south-easterly direction towards the potter's kiln while others turned back and ran in the direction of the Railway pursued by Ranjha, Wasakha Singh and Amli, absconders, and others. The witnesses go on to say that the Mahant, who was at that time riding on a grey mare near the south eastern corner of the Gurdwara enclosure and was armed with a pistol, fired at the men who were running in the direction of the potter's kiln and hit one of them who fell down, and that this man was finished off by chhavi blows. The party of Sikhs, who came from the direction of the Mahant's baithak is said to have consisted of the following :—

Sadhu Singh, Bhagat Singh, son of Bhagwan Singh, Asa Singh and Gurdial Singh (P. W. Nos. 35 to 38), Mehnga Singh, Narain Singh, Karm Singh and Dasondha Singh (P. W. No. 214). Mehnga Singh is the man who is said to have been shot at by the Mahant. He as well as Narain Singh and Karm Singh are said to have been killed and their bodies burnt in the potter's kiln. P. W. Nos. 35 to 38 belong to Bundala village and the three men, who are said to have been killed, and Dasondha Singh belong to the village of Lohki. They are said to have been coming to Nankana along with Mangal Singh (P. W. No. 50), Labh Singh (P. W. No. 55) Ram Singh and Mota Singh (P. W. Nos. 39 and 40), all of Bundala. This lot of four men say that they lagged behind near the Railway in order to ease themselves. Whether these men were part of Lachhman Singh's jatha or separate from it is not very material, but all of this party who have been produced as witnesses say that they were coming to Nankana to arrange for the langar in anticipation of the Diwan of the 5th March. The evidence that the Mahant was riding on a grey mare and firing a pistol at Mehnga Singh is fully detailed in the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge, from the bottom of page 39 to page 41. In addition to the Bundala witnesses (P. W. Nos. 35 to 38) Gomi, Ladha and Takiullah, approvers, have all deposed that the Mahant did fire his pistol at the men who were running away towards the potter's kiln. Sant Singh (P. W. No. 23) is another witness to the same occurrence, but in cross-examination he gave a very confused account as to the direction in which the Sikhs at whom the Mahant was firing were running. Moreover, he admits that on one occasion the Mahant had him shoe-beaten by a sweeper, and the Government Advocate frankly admits that he does not rely upon his evidence so far as the Mahant and the latter's near relations are concerned. Narain Singh (P. W. No. 29) is another witness to this occurrence. He is the Mahant of Labana Gurdwara in Nankana and states that on the morning of the occurrence he heard the sound of guns and went up on to his roof from which he saw two men with guns on the southern well of the Gurdwara and on the roof of the Darshami deorhi. He came down from his roof and went into the open. He then saw the Mahant on a mare on the road leading from the south-east corner of the Gurdwara to the potter's kiln. He saw four Sikhs pass the southern gate and go down the road leading from the southern gate to the potter's kiln. When they got to a point, which he showed on the model in Court, the Mahant fired a pistol and one of the Sikhs fell down, and a man ran up and struck him with a chhavi and the Mahant said that the body was to be taken to the potter's kiln. This was the first witness to tell the Police that he had seen the Mahant firing at the Sikhs and he did so on the 22nd February, which was the first day of the systematic investigation by the C. I. D. This man struck the learned Sessions Judge as a reliable and respectable witness, and the Judge says that he was favourably impressed also by Bhagat Singh, son of Bhagwan Singh, and Ata Singh and points out that these two, as well as Sadhu Singh and Mota Singh, were examined by the Police on the 25th February. It is important to remember that Gomi and Ladha, in all their three statements before Diwan Mahesh Das, under section 164, Criminal Procedure Code, in the Committing Magistrate's Court and in the Sessions Court stated that the Mahant did fire at these Sikhs. As we have shown elsewhere in this judgment, Gomi and Ladha, after their arrest, were kept apart and had no opportunity of collaborating before their statements were recorded by Diwan Mahesh Das. Their evidence in this respect is fully supported by that of the witnesses already mentioned, and we agree with the learned Sessions Judge that it is proved that Mahant Narain Das fired a pistol shot at these Sikhs, whose only object apparently was to get away from the vicinity of the Gurdwara. The learned Sessions Judge on pages 40 and 41 of his judgment has discussed the evidence of P. W. No. 53, Bhagat Singh, son of Kika Singh, of Bandala, P. W. No. 54 Bhagat Singh, son of Nihal Singh of Bandala, P. W. No. 55 Labh Singh of Bandala and P. W. No. 214 Dasondha Singh of Lohki. It was argued before him that the evidence of these witnesses proves indirectly that the story of shooting by the Mahant is false. Labh Singh and Dasondha Singh's evidence in Court certainly differs from the statements made by them and duly recorded under section 164, Criminal Prosedure Code, during the Police investigation. The differences in their statements merely show, in our opinion, that it would not be safe to place much reliance upon these witnesses. The Sessions Judge is correct in his view that the previous statements of those witnesses are not substantive evidence in the case and cannot be used to contradict the evidence of other witnesses for the prosecution. We agree with the remarks of the learned Sessions Judge in regard to these four witnesses and in regard to discrepancies in the statements of the witnesses to the shooting of Mehnga Singh. It has been argued by Mr. Hasan Imam that even if the Mahant did fire at these Sikhs he was justified in doing so because he had a reasonable apprehension that they would otherwise attack him. In support of this argument he has referred us to Ladha's statement in cross-examination at the bottom of page 73 of the printed record where he says: "After being struck Rehana ran along the southern wall in the direction of the Mahant. Rehana ran in front with the Akalis behind him." Now, Ladha is the only witness who says that these Sikhs ran along the southern wall in the direction of Mahant while all the Bandala witnesses, who were the men most concerned and others say that they were running along the road in the direction of the potter's kiln when the Mahant fired at them. We are not prepared to accept Ladha's statement in this respect.

Considering the whole of the evidence, we see no reason to suppose that these men were running in the direction of the Mahant or had any intention of attacking him. We agree with the learned Sessions Judge that there can be no inference from the evidence that they tried to attack the Mahant, and we do not think that he could have had any reasonable ground for supposing that they intended to attack him. The evidence shows that there were a number of his armed retainers near the Mahant at the time and this fact also negatives the theory that the Sikhs who were greatly outnumbered were intending to attack him. Some of these Bandala witnesses gave evidence of direct incitements by the Mahant. Sadhu Singh (P. W. No. 35) says that the Mahant called out, that more Sikhs had come, and should not be allowed to escape. Bhagat Singh (P. W. No. 36) says that there was a man on a grey mare who said: "more Sikhs have come, kill them." He did not identify the man on the grey mare, but there is no evidence that there was any one else in that vicinity who was riding a grey mare. Asa Singh (P. W. No. 37) says that the Mahant called out, "kill them too." Gurdial Singh (P. W. No. 38) says that the Mahant shouted, "kill them don't let any Sikh escape." There is ample evidence that some of the Sikhs were pursued beyond the Railway line and several of them received slight wounds from buckshot. Ladha and Takiullah, approvers, both state that t ey were directed by the Mahant to join the pursuit in the direction of the Railway after Mehnga Singh had been shot, but no one else supports them on this point.

After the men returned from the pursuit beyond the Railway, news is said to have been brought by a Sadhu called Gurdit Singh that he could not open the doors of the chaukhandi and that there were probably some Sikhs hiding there. Upon this the Mahant's men went inside the enclosure and the evidence of the approvers is to the effect that all the men to the number of some 40, who were taking refuge inside the chaukhandi, were massacred. Gomi, in his statement at the bottom of page 48 of the printed record, says: "A Sadhu came and said that perhaps there were Sikhs inside the chaukhandi. By this time the party which had pursued in the direction of the Railway line had returned. The Mahant told us to go and see whether there were men in the chaukhandi, and if there were, to kill them. Ranjha, Wasakha Singh and others naming them) went I remained by the Mahant. I heard shots and the Mahant told me to go too." This is the only evidence that the Mahant directly incited his followers to kill any Sikhs who might be in the chaukhandi. Ladha, in his statement at page 69 of the printed record, merely says that, after Ranjha and others came back from the pursuit beyond the the Railway, Gurdit Singh came up and said that he could not get the doors of the chaukhandi opened and that there were probably men inside. Upon this all the men who were with the Mahant went inside by the Bazar gate. Ladha himself went to the langar to drink water. Now, in his statement in the Committing Magistrate's Court (see page 79 of the printed record) he states that when Gurdit Singh brought the news that the doors of the chaukhandi were closed, the Mahant said: "Go and see if there are any Sikhs inside." It would be unsafe to rely on this statement, especially as in the statement recorded by Diwan Mahesh Das he made no mention of the Mahant saying anything about the men in the chaukhandi. In our opinion it would not be safe to hold that the Mahant directly incited his followers to kill the Sikhs in the chaukhandi, but we see no reason to doubt that he was still riding his mare outside the Gurdwara enclosure when his adherents returned from pursuing the Sikhs beyond the Railway and that he heard it said that there were probably some Sikhs in the chaukhandi and that thereafter he saw his men going into the enclosure and heard shots being fired. We have no doubt that he must have known that if there were any Sikhs concealing themselves in the chaukhandi they would be killed and he did nothing to prevent the killing of any men that might be there.

The next point to be dealt with is, that of the burning of the dead bodies, both those inside and outside the Gurdwara. Gomi, at page 48 of the printed record, states that after the shooting of Mehnga Singh, the Mahant told Arjan Das, his nephew, to bring oil and burn the bodies. Arjan Das and another brought two tins of oil and some wood, and that five corpses, which were outside the enclosure, were then collected, were taken to the potter's kiln and there set fire to. He also states that after the killing of the men in the chaukhandi the Mahant went into the enclosure and gave orders that the bodies of Sant Ram and of three Sikhs which were lying there should be left as they were and not burnt, so that it might appear that there had been a fight. Ladha, at page 68 of the printed record, states that the Mahant sent Gurdit Singh inside the Gurdwara to fetch oil for the burning of the bodies and that before the chaukhandi affair the Mahant was riding about outside while the bodies were burning in the potter's kiln, and while the Pathans were burning bodies inside the Gurdwara. This witness also deposes like Gomi to the Mahant going into the enclosure after the chaukhandi incident and giving orders that the bodies of Sant Ram and three Sikhs should not be burnt. Gomi and Ladha both detailed this incident in their original statements before Diwan Mahesh Das and in the Committing Magistrate's Court—see pages 42 and 52 of the book of Exhibits, and pages 69 and 79 of the printed record. As already pointed out, they had no opportunity of collaboration, if we are to believe the evidence of responsible Police Officers, and we see no reason for not believing it, before their statements were recorded by Diwan Mahesh Das. The bodies of Sant Ram and of the three Sikhs were the only ones which had not been burnt and there must have been some reason why they were left unburnt, and we see no reason to disbelieve the statements of Gomi and Ladha that it was done by the Mahant's order and for the reason stated by him. Takiullah, at the trial, made a similar statement, but we find that he said nothing about this incident in the original statement before Diwan Mahesh Das and we, therefore, are of opinion that his statement in this respect should not be relied upon. Narain Singh (P. W. No. 29), as we have already noted, stated that he heard the Mahant order the body of the man whom he had shot to be taken to the kiln, and Nihal Singh (P. W. No. 30) says that he was dragged there apparently in the presence of the Mahant. The learned Sessions Judge has also referred to the evidence of Lakhmi Das (P. W. No. 66) and says that he sees no reason to disbelieve him. He is, however, a partner in contracts with Uttam Singh (P. W. No. 103) who is an Akali Sikh and whose evidence on this account we do not think we should accept. Even, however, if we ignore the evidence of Lakhmi Das there is still ample proof that the Mahant ordered the burning of the bodies in the potter's kiln. Nur Ahmad, Head Constable (P. W. No. 18), was the first Police Officer to arrive on the spot. He arrived about noon and found the Mahant riding about outside. The bodies at that time were burning inside and the Mahant refused to open the door of the Gurdwara saying that he would not do so until some more responsible officer arrived. The Deputy Commissioner, Mr. Currie, and Narain Singh, District Engineer, arrived soon afterwards and went into the enclosure. There is no evidence to show that the Mahant gave the first order for the burning of the bodies inside the enclosure. It is in evidence that the Pathans were burning bodies inside before the chaukhandi incident while the Mahant was riding about outside ordering the burning of other bodies in the potter's kiln. He took no steps to stop the burning of bodies inside. He went into the enclosure subsequently while the burning was going on and ordered the bodies of Sant Ram and three Sikhs which were found by the Police on arrival, not to be burnt and gave the reason referred to by Gomi and Ladha in their evidence. He took no steps to prevent the burning of the other bodies which was still in progress when Nur Ahmed arrived at 12 noon. All the evidence shows that the Mahant specifically ordered some bodies to be burnt and acquiesced in the burning of others. He was in full control of the whole enclosure after the occurrence as is clear from the evidence of Nur Ahmed and Narain Singh, District Engineer, and all the circumstances show that he was in control during the occurrence and fully identified himself with his adherents.

There are one or two other points to be noticed before we deal with the points upon which Mr. Hasan Imam laid very special stress, namely, whether in what he did the Mahant acted in the exercise of good faith and in the right of private defence and whether, if so, he exceeded that right.

The first intimation of the occurrence which the Police received, was in the form of a telegram, Exhibit P. A. A. This purports to have been sent by Mahant Narain Das from Nankana Railway Station at 9.40 A. M. and was recivd at the thana at Warburton at about 10.30. It is worded as follow:—"Sikhs have been attacked. Come soon." The original form shows that the actual sender was one Ram Lal. He has not been produced by either side. The original form was put in merely at the request of the defence who wanted to see all telegrams despatched from Nankana on the 20th February. It has never been admitted by the prosecution that Mahant Narain Das sent this telegram or had it sent. It was produced by the prosecution merely to show what was the first information received by the Police. We agree with the learned Sessions Judge that the telegram helps neither side, though it is possible that the Mahant may have had it sent. A number of telegrams were sent by Uttam Singh (P. W. No. 103), the first as early as 8 20 A. M., in other words, an hour and 20 minutes before Exhibit P. A. A. was sent. If the Mahant was innocent and stayed in his baithak during the whole time that the massacre was in progress, as he would have us believe, we think he would certainly have sent a telegram to the Police long before 9-40 A. M.

He produced five witnesses, D. W. Nos. 64, 65, 66, 68 and 69 to say that he passed them on horseback on the morning of the 20th February on his way to look for the Deputy Commissioner, who was encamped at Mangtanwala. The learned Sessions Judge has referred to their evidence on pages 42 and 43 of his judgment and we agree with him that it is not at all convincing. We think it extremely improbable that he would have ridden off alone to a place several miles off because he would certainly have been afraid of being attacked on the way by some of the Sikhs. As already remarked by us, the Mahant possessed and was licensed to carry two double barrelled guns and a revolver. In his written statement he said that one gun and the revolver were placed where they could be easily accessible, and the other gun was out of order. A gun was taken from him when he was arrested after 4 P. M. on the 20th February. This was taken to Walter Locke and Co., Lahore, on the 7th April by Mr. Bowring, Superintendent of Police, and was examined by the Manager of the Gun Department, Mr. Webb (P. W. No. 169). He found that the breech action was jammed with sand and dirt, that it had not been cleaned since last fired and that otherwise it was all right. We agree with the Sessions Judge that the possibility of Ranjha or Rehana having used this gun is not excluded by the fact that the breech was jammed when the Mahant was arrested several hours after the occurrence. There is evidence to which we have already referred that Rehana pointed his gun at the Bandala and Lohki party of Sikhs and that one of them hit him with a chhavi knocking the gun out of his hand. Rehana is said to have run away and there is no evidence that the gun was immediately picked up. If it lay on the ground for any time the breech may easily have become jammed with dirt and sand. When Nur Ahmed, Head Constable (P. W. No. 18), arrived at 12 noon the Mahant had no thing in his hand and it is not clear what object he had in carrying a useless gun afterwards, because he certainly had it in his hand when he was arrested. He may have done it with the object of showing that the only gun in his possession was not in working order.

Though it is not proved that the Mahant ordered the first attack from the southern wall, we consider it to be clearly proved that soon after it commenced and whilst Rehana, Ranjha and two others, said to be absconding, were firing at the Sikhs inside the enclosure, he was standing on the roof of his baithak and was inciting his followers to kill the Sikhs, that subsequently he was riding about on a mare outside the Gurdwara and was instigating his followers to kill Sikhs who had never entered it, and that he himself participated in the attack on those Sikhs from which murder resulted. We also hold it proved that in his presence his followers entered the enclosure in order to kill any Sikhs who might be hiding in the chaukhandi, that he took no steps to prevent them, and that he ordered some of the dead bodies to be burnt and acquiesced in the burning of others.

We proceed now to examine the plea that the Mahant acted in good faith in the exercise of his right of private defence. We have in an earlier part of this judgment described how the Mahant in vain approached the authorities with the object of getting Police protection for the shrine, and how, as he himself admits, upon failure of his representations he engaged guards and took steps to protect himself and the shrine against possible aggression by the Sikhs. We hold that he was entitled to take such steps and we do not think any inference that he intended to repel attacks by any means, lawful or unlawful, arises from the fact that he engaged for the protection of the shrine persons like Ranjha, Rehana, and the Pathans.

Mr. Hasan Imam urged that the Mahant's adherents who gathered outside the south gate did not constitute an unlawful assembly, that they had no common object except perhaps to turn out the Sikhs and that every man acted on his own initiative. The common object must, in our opinion, be judged from a consideration of all the facts. It is possible that the men did not assemble with the common object of killing the invading Sikhs but the scaling of the wall, the throwing of bricks and firing of guns from the wall, the opening of the south door so as to let more of the Mahant's men in and the systematic killing of the Sikhs in and outside the enclosure satisfy us that the above common object was very soon formed. The question is whether this killing was justified.

The burden of proving the existence of circumstances bringing the case within any of the general exceptions in the Indian Penal Code rests upon the accused, and section 105 of the Indian Evidence Act says the Court shall presume the absence of such circumstances.

It is contended that the Mahant and his followers were justified in causing the death of the invading Sikhs in accordance with the provisions of section 103 of the Indian Penal Code, fourthly. In other words, it is urged that the invading Sikhs by forcibly entering and taking possession of the shrine committed house trespass, and did so under such circumstances as might reasonably cause apprehension that death or grievous hurt would be the consequence, if such right of private defense were not exercised.

Now, we have no difficulty in holding that the Mahant was up to the morning of the 20th February 1921 in possession of the Janam Asthan shrine and that the members of Lachhman Singh's jatha took forcable possession with the intention of ousting the Mahant from his office. Under sections 97 and 104, Indian Penal Code, the Mahant had the right to defend his possession and in doing so to cause, if necessary, any harm to the invaders other than death. But we quite fail to see how the acts of the Sikhs who, though they turned out Thakur Das and others, did not attempt to cause death or grievous hurt to any one, could have caused reasonable apprehension in the minds of the Mahant and his followers that death or grievous hurt would be caused to any of them unless the Sikhs were exterminated.

We see no reason to the suppose that the Sikhs intended to use any violence to any one once they had entered the enclosure and shut the doors. It is quite probable that had the Mahant's followers gone in and tried to turn out the invaders by force there would have been a fight and people on both sides would have been killed, but this probability did not justify the wholesale killing of the invaders in the way deposed to in order to regain possession and complete control of the shrine.

With regard to the killing of Sikhs outside the Gurdwara Mr. Hasan Imam's argument was as follows: The Mahant saw the Bundala men and various other small parties of Sikhs arriving, and this led him to think that reinforcements were coming to the help of Lachhman Singh's party. He, therefore, thought it necessary to kill all who appeared so as to lessen the number of his enemies. Now, section 100, Indian Penal Code, gives the right of private defence of the body only against actual assailants, it does not authorize the killing or causing of hurt to persons who may in the future when reinforced by others become assailants. The right arises only on the occurrence of an offence, or of an attempt to commit an offence, and, in the words of section 107, "as soon as a reasonable apprehension of danger to the body arises from an attempt or threat to commit the offence though the offence may not have been committed."

No right of private defense of the body arose in favour of the Mahant under section 100, Indian Penal Code, because no offence against him was committed, attempted or threatened and any right of defending his possession of the Janam Asthan shrine was greatly exceeded and we find it impossible to hold that he exceeded it in good faith.

Mr. Hasan Imam has very eloquently set forth the difficult position which the Mahant was in before the 20th February by reason of his failure to secure protection from Government, and we have already stated that in our opinion he was fully justified in taking steps for his own protection both by engaging Pathans as guards and by importing men who were reputed to be good fighters, such as Ranjha and Rehana.

We fully realize that he must have been in constant expectation of an attack and in a highly nervous state. He did not, as already pointed out, anticipate an immediate attack when he retired to rest on the night of the 19th February and must have been greatly dismayed on the morning of the 20th when he heard that the Sikhs had actually arrived and entered the Gurdwara. He probably heard that there was a large body and that many of them were armed, and either at once ordered his gunmen and other adherents to attack them, or if the attack had begun before he issued any orders he subsequently encouraged and incited his men to kill all the Sikhs. He was suffering doubtless under a deep sense of wrong and helplessness, and it is not surprising that he lost his head and acted as he did. Taking all the circumstances into consideration and in view of the facts that we do not hold it proved that he ordered the final massacre in the chaukhandi and that the evidence shows that he did not enter the enclosure till all the killing was over, we are of opinion that he should not suffer the extreme penalty of the law. We accordingly so far accept the appeal of Mahant Narain Das as to reduce the sentence to one of transportation for life. His conviction is maintained.

Before dealing with the individual cases of the other appellants, it will be convenient to refer to the arguments advanced by the learned Counsel in connection with the evidence of the approvers.

Mr. Herbert for the Crown contended that it was not illegal to base a conviction on the uncorroborated statement of an accomplice witness, and further that so long as the evidence of an accomplice was corroborated generally it was not necessary that each incident referred to by such witness should be corroborated by unimpeachable evidence. He relied on Balmokand v. Emperor (1), Mamun v. Queen Empress (2) and Emperor v. Nilakanta (3). On the other hand, Mr. Hasan Iman and his colleagues contended that, while it was not illegal to base a conviction on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice witness, as specifically provided for by section 133 of the Indian Evidence Act, experience had shown that it was, as a general rule unsafe to do so and that it had become an almost universal rule of practice, adopted by all Courts, to require material corroboration of tainted testimony and to raise the presumption referred to in section 114 of the Evidence Act. After a careful consideration of the subject, and an examination of the authorities cited, we are in agreement with what was laid down in Barkat Ali v. Emperor (4) and consider that section 133 of the Evidence Act contains the rule of law regarding the testimony of accomplices, and section 114, illustration (b) is merely a guide to assist the Court, though as stated by Johnstone, O. J., in Balmokand v. Emperor (1), in a vast majority of cases prudence requires that there shall be corroboration. No hard and fast rules can, however, be laid down to regulate the extent and nature of such corroboration, this being dependent entirely on the circumstances of each case.

In the present case, the learned Sessions Judge has held that the testimony of Gomi can be regarded as supporting or corroborating that of Ladha Ram, and that their testimony can similarly be supported or corroborated by that of Takiullah and Farid for the reason that Gomi and Ladha Ram were carefully kept apart by the Police from the moment of their arrest, and that, therefore, they had had no opportunity of discussing the evidence they should give or collaboration in any way. Similarly, Farid and Takiullah had been in the Central Jail and thus unable to see or consult with Gomi or Ladha Ram, at any rate, up to such time as they had made their statements before a Magistrate.

Section 114 of the Evidence Act, illustration (b), lays down that the Court may presume that an accomplice is unworthy of credit unless he is corroborated in material particulars. At the same time, it is also laid down that the Court shall have regard in considering whether this maxim does or does not apply to the particular case before it, to such a fact as the following: "A crime is committed by several persons, A, B and C, three of the criminals, are captured on the spot and kept apart from each other and each gives an account of the crime implicating D, and the accounts corroborate each other in such a manner as to render previous concert highly improbable."

Now, in the present case Farid and Takiullah were arrested on the evening of the 20th of February and removed, along with others arrested on the same date, to the Central Jail at Lahore where they remained until such time as they were granted a pardon under section 337, Criminal Procedure Code. During this period these two persons had no opportunity whatever of seeing Ladha Ram and Gomi so that the chance of any previous concert can be excluded.

Again, Ladha Ram and Gomi are said to have been kept apart, as it was considered that they would ultimately agree to appear as witnesses for the Crown. This fact is deposed to by (P. W. No. 17) Hakim Ikram-ul-Haq, Deputy Superintendent of Police, and (P. W. No. 20) S. Gopal Singh, Inspector of Police. There is no direct or concrete evidence to contradict the definite and clear assertions made by these two witnesses, who also swear that Gomi was told nothing of what Ladha Ram had said beyond the fact that he had mentioned Gomi's name. As pointed out by the learned Sessions Judge, this evidence can only be disbelieved by assuming that these officers are thoroughly dishonest and untruthful merely because they are Policemen. We agree in thinking that to discredit these witnesses for that reason alone is impossible. They are both Police Officers holding responsible positions and there is no reason whatever to doubt their veracity. Mr. Bhagat Ram Puri suggested that as both Ladha Ram and Gomi had been taken to Lahore from Nankana on the 5th March 1921 they must have travelled in the same train and that, therefore, it was possible for them to have discussed the situation. Both these witnesses give a detailed account of the occurrences of the 20th February 1921 and we consider it highly improbable, if not impossible, that there could have been any previous concert between them. We accept the statements of Hakim Ikram ul-Haq and S. Gopal Singh that, as a matter of fact these two persons were kept strictly apart, and consider, therefore, that the deposition of one can support the deposition of the other.

Takiullah and Farid, however, are not on the same plane. Admittedly, they were arrested together and were together in the Central Jail. They, therefore, might have had opportunities to consult one another as to what they were to say. The presumption laid down by section 114 of the Evidence Act, therefore, arises in their case. They were first examined by (P. W. No. 22) Amir Muhammad Khan, Sub-Inspector and (D. W. No. 70) Khan Bahadur Abdul Hakim, Deputy Superintendent of Police. These witnesses depose that they were deputed on the 12th of March 1921 to question the Pathans who had been arrested in connection with the affair at Nankana. They both swear that they were not informed of the details of the occurrence and had not been told what Gomi and Ladha Ram had said. We see no reason to doubt the veracity of these two witnesses, but as the statements of Takiullah and Farid were not recorded till the 22nd and 23rd of March 1921 and the depositions of Ladha Ram and Gomi had been recorded on the 10th, 11th and 15th March 1921, we cannot attach the same value to any corroboration or support that the statements of Takiullah and Farid may afford to the evidence of Ladha Ram and Gomi.

There is another matter that needs reference. At the trial one of the persons arraigned before the learned Sessions Judge was Hari Nath who, at the opening of the trial, pleaded guilty. He was not convicted on this plea but kept in the dock as one of the persons under trial. On the conclusion of the case for the prosecution when Hari Nath was examined he made a statement admitting his participation in all the events which formed the subject matter of the trial. He implicated himself to the hilt and his incriminating or confessional statement appears to have been utilised by the learned Sessions Judge as supporting the depositions of the four approvers. No doubt, the confession made by a person can be taken into consideration as against persons who are being tried along with him; such a statement, however, is always regarded as tainted, and in the present case we consider that it cannot be used to corroborate the testimony of the accomplice witnesses. It is to be borne in mind that Hari Nath made his statement at the end of the prosecution case when the whole of the evidence had been freshly detailed in his presence. It can be rightly used as evidence against Hari Nath himself whose appeal will now be considered.

Hari Nath has been convicted of the offences of rioting and murder under sections 148, 302 and 149, Indian Penal Code and has been sentenced to death. He preferred an appeal through the Jail, in which he alleged that, while inside the Gurdwara, a jatha of Akali Sikhs attacked the shrine in order to take possession of it, that he was set upon by two or four Sikhs and fought with them in self defence, and had, therefore, killed no one intentionally. Subsequent to this he submitted another memorandum of appeal, also through the Jail, in which he alleged that the confessional statement made by him had been made at the instance of the C. I. D. Police Officials who had promised him immunity, that they had not carried out their promise and that his confession was wrong. We may say at once that there is no indication whatever that the confession made by this appellant was in any way induced by the Police or any other person in authority, and that we consider that it was voluntarily made. Apart from this confession, however, there is the evidence of (P. W. No. 23) Gomi, (P. W. No. 24) Ladha Ram, (P. W. No. 25) Tak'ullah, (P.W. No. 26) Farid, (P. W. No. 28) Sant Singh (P. W. No. 35) Sadhu Singh, (P. W. No. 36) Bhagat Singh, (P. W. No. 5) Bhagat Singh(P.W.No. 39)Ram Singh,(P.W.No. 31) Atma Ram, (P. W. No. 43) Sunder Das and (P. W. No. 55) Labh Singh. The last named witness, Labh Singh, states that he was personally attacked and struck by Hari Nath. The evidence of this witness is not convincing and at the identification parade held in the Jail he identified no one saying that he was feeling too ill to do so. According to (P. W. No. 23) Gomi, Hari Nath was in the crowd outside the southern door armed with a long takwa or chhavi, and also threw bricks from the deorhi roof. (P. W. No. 24) Ladha Ram mentioned this appellant as having been in the crowd at the southern gate and also in the Darshani deorhi where "he killed men". (P. W. No. 25) Takiullah identified Hari Nath as one of those concerned in the killing of men at the Darshani deorhi, and also attributes to him the death of two Sikhs on the southern wall. (P. W. No. 26), Farid says that this appellant was armed with a chhavi and was seen by him assisting in dragging dead bodies at the chaukhandi. (P. W. No. 28) Sant Singh states that he saw Hari Nath in the vicinity when the Mahant shot Mehnga Singh. There is no reason to doubt the statement of this witness so far as this appellant is concerned. (P. W. No. 35) Sadhu Singh, (P. W. No. 36) Bhagat Singh, son of Bhagwan Singh, and (P. W. No. 53) Bhagat Singh, son of Kikar Singh, are Bundala witnesses who give similar evidence to that given by Sant Singh as having seen this appellant armed with a chhavi outside. (P. W. No. 39) Ram Singh identified Hari Nath as one of those who pursued the Bundala men towards the Railway line. (P. W. No. 31) Atma Ram also identified this appellant as one of those returning from the pursuit of Sikhs in the direction of the Railway line. The evidence of this witness is, however, not convincing. (P. W. No. 43), Sunder Das, deposes to having seen Hari Nath killing persons with a chhavi in the Darshani deorhi. There is no reason whatever to think that Hari Nath has been falsely implicated by any of the witnesses. He is closely connected with the shrine and his presence there on the 20th February, 1921, is not unnatural. The evidence of the approvers is amply corroborated by the statements of the witnesses detailed above whose testimony qua this appellant there is no reason whatever to doubt. Further corroboration is to be found in Hari Nath's own confession in which he fully admits his guilt. We have no hesitation whatever in holding that he has been rightly convicted and we accordingly dismiss his appeal and confirm the sentence of death.

The next case argued was that of Surain Singh who has been convicted of offences of rioting and murder under sections 148, 302 and 149, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to death. He was arrested in Kasur on the 25th February 1921. His village is at a considerable distance from Nankana.

His conviction is based on the evidence of (P. W. No. 23) Gomi, (P. W. No. 24) Ladha Ram and (P. W. No. 26) Farid, the learned Sessions Judge holding that the evidence of these approvers is corroborated in respect of this appellant by the fact that he fabricated evidence of an alibi. Mr. Herbert contended that corroboration was also to be found in the statement of P. W. No. 213 Jharda Singh.

While it is true that at the trial P. W. No. 26 Farid picked out Surain Singh as one of those men who were armed with chhavis and "were dragging bodies and striking the wounded" (page 97 lines 4 to 7) he did not identify him either in the Jail or in the Committing Magistrate's Court. In these circumstances, his evidence cannot be regarded as of any value against this appellant.

P. W. No. 23 Gomi and P. W. No. 24 Ladha Ram were kept apart from each other, at any rate, up to such time as their statements had been recorded by Diwan Mahesh Das. In the present case, however, this fact cannot afford any assistance, for, in his statement to Diwan Mahesh Das, Ladha Ram did not name or give any description of Surain Singh. His subsequent statements in Court, therefore, cannot add any weight to the statement of Gomi. This witness states that he went to Nankana on the 19th February and found Surain Singh there among those who had come to assist the Mahant (page 46). On the morning of the 20th February 1921 Gomi says he saw the appellant armed with a chhavi standing among some forty men collected at the southern gate (page 47) and that he went inside on to the southern wall (page 48) and after that on to the roof of the Darshani deorhi from where he joined in throwing bricks (page 48) Later, Gomi includes him as being in the number of those who went into the Gurdwara for the chaukhandi incident (page 49) and also states that Surain Singh actually went into the chaukhandi itself. This witness made a similar statement to the Committing Magistrate (pages 57-58) and to Diwan Mahesh Das on the 15th March 1921.

Ladha Ram's evidence involves Surain Singh as having been in the assembly at the southern gate (page 67) and as having taken part in the deorhi incident (pages 68-70). He refers to him in connection with the same incidents in his statement to the Committing Magistrate (page 78). He, however, did not know him before, nor did he see him at Nankana on the 19th February 1921.

As has been said above, Ladha Ram's statement in the present case cannot be regarded as strengthening the evidence of Gomi and we consider that there must be some independent corroboration of the evidence given by these two witnesses. The learned Sessions Judge finds this in what he holds to be the fabrication of a false alibi In the first place, the fabrication of a false defence cannot be regarded as clearly established on the record, and secondly, we consider that it would be unsafe to hold such a circumstance as sufficient. The learned Government Advocate urged that ample corroboration is to be found in the statement of P W No. 213 Jhanda Singh (page 276) which is to the effect that he saw Surain Singh with Ranjha, Rehana and others at 3 P. M. or 4 P M. on the 20th February, 1921, at the well of Sahib Das. Sahib Das has been produced by the defence as D. W. No. 27 (page 378) and flatly denies the incident. We note that, although the learned Sessions Judge does not refer to the evidence of Sahib Das, he does not appear to have placed any reliance on the statement of P. W. No. 213, Janda Singh, and, in all the circumstances, we consider that it would be wholly unsafe to accept Jhanda Singh's statement as affording the necessary corroboration. We must, therefore, accept this appeal and acquit Surain Singh.

The next case taken up was that of Ranjha son of Ghulam, a machhi. He has been convicted under sections 148, 302 and 149, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to death. He was arrested in the Lyallpur District on the 19th March 1921. According to the prosecution he took a very prominent part in all that occurred on the 20th February 1921. P. W. No. 23 Gomi says that when he reached the Gurdwara he saw some 10 or 11 men on the top of the southern wall, four of whom were firing guns in the Gurdwara, Ranjha being one of these four (page 47). Later on he says he saw him on the north of the roof over the staircase from where guns were fired and bricks thrown, and that, at the suggestion of Ranjha, the assailants went down below into the deorhi and killed Sikhs who had taken shelter there. Again, at Ranjha's instance the kothris in the southern wall were searched for hidden Sikhs. After the Sikhs had been disposed of there they all went out and Ranjha is stated by the witness to have joined in the pursuit of the Sikhs in the direction of the Railway line, Ranjha being armed with a gun (page 48-51). After this Gomi says that Ranjha was among those who went into the chaukhandi and took an active and prominent part in shooting the Sikhs hidden therein (page 49). Gomi made a similar statement to the Committing Magistrate, and in his statement to Diwan Mahesh Das on the 15th March 1921, he implicated Ranjha in the same manner.

P. W. No. 24 Ladha Ram gives similar evidence He refers to Ranjha as having been engaged by the Mahant as "body guard" some seven or eight months prior to this occurrence (page 66). On his arrival at the Gurdwara on the morning of the 20th of February he says that Ranjha was one of those on the southern wall firing a gun into the Gurdwara. Ladha Ram says he himself went on to the roof soon after this and found Ranjha there firing a gun (page 67). He includes him in the number of those who went into the Darshani deorhi and killed Sikhs (pages 68-69). He also says that the gun used by Ranjha belonged to the Mahant (page 72) and further states that Ranjha had told him that he had killed two Sikhs in the direction of the Railway line. In his statement to the Committing Magistrate and Diwan Mahesh Das, Ladha Ram mentions Ranjha as having been concerned in the same incidents. The appellant was obviously well-known to Ladha Ram and was identified by him, as well as by Gomi, in the presence of Mr Bowring on the 20th March, 1921, (vide Exhibit, P. B). Having regard to the fact that Gomi and Ladha Ram had had no opportunity of consulting each other prior to the time when they made their statements to Diwan Mahesh Das, their statements may be taken to mutually support each other. P. W. No. 24 Takiullah and P. W. No. 25 Farid also depose to having seen Ranjha on the scene. The former says that he saw him firing a gun from the wall in the Darshani deorhi and at the chaukhandi. The latter deposes to having seen the appellant firing a gun at the chaukhandi. The evidence of these two witnesses must, however, be eliminated from consideration, as Takiullah failed to identify him before Mr. Bowring, and Farid only pointed him out as a man whom he suspected. There is, however, other evidence which corroborates the statements of Ladha Ram and Gomi. P. W. No. 32 Harnam Singh states that he saw Ranjha on the wall by the southern gate firing a gun (page 118). This witness is a resident of Nankana and obviously knew Ranjha. There is no reason to doubt his veracity. P. W. No. 35 Sadhu Singh (page 124), P W No. 37 Asa Singh (page 129) and P. W. No. 38 Gurdial Singh (page 130), Bundala witnesses, agree in saying that Ranjah was armed with a gun and standing on the thara near the southern gate about the time when Mehnga Singh was killed. P. W No. 59 Amar Singh deposes to having seen Ranjha on the southern wall armed with a gun (page 172) and says he had seen Ranjha for two or three months prior to the occurrence and that he lived with the Mahant (page 173). This witness resiled from the statement made by him to the Committing Court and asserted that that statement was false. He is a Patwari and a resident of Nankana and had every chance of knowing Ranjha if Ranjha had been in the employ of the Mahant as stated by Landa Ram. He certainly cannot be regarded as a witness unduly favouring the prosecution and we think the learned Sessions Judge has rightly regarded his statement that Ranjha had been living with the Mahant for two or three months as strong corroboration of Ladha Ram's statement to that effect. P. W. No. 61 Piara, another resident of Nankana, deposes to having seen Ranjha on the southern wall with a gun in his hand (page 180). Then there is P. W, No. 75 Kapur Singh, a resident of Kot Sadha Ram, who states that he was one of the guards on duty at Nankana on the night preceding the occurrence. He states that as he was returning home after he had finished his watch duty on the early morning of the 20th February he met Ranjha in the Bazar near the Mahant's dwelling house. Finally, there is the statement of P. W. No. 213, Jhanda Singh, to the effect that he saw Ranjha and others at the well of Sahib Das on the afternoon of the 20th February. The evidence of these last two witnesses is not of any great importance and we do not attach weight to that of Jhanda Singh. The other witnesses, however, have corroborated the testimony of Ladha Ram and Gomi, and we consider that the evidence against this appellant establishes his guilt. His defense is that he has been dragged into this case at the instance of one Kada who had enmity against him owing to the fact he, Ranjha, had abducted the sister of one Malli machhi, a connection of Kada. While it is true that this Kada was instrumental in getting Ranjha arrested (vide the statement of Mr. Bowring P. W. No. 128, page 240), we are unable to see any reason for thinking that a false case has been brought against this appellant. He took a prominent part in killing the Sikhs on the wall, in the Darshani deohri and in the chaukhandi. We accordingly dismiss his appeal and confirm the sentence of death.

The next case argued was that of Rehana who has been sentenced to death under sections 148, 302 and 149, Indian Penal Code. His name appears in the ruqa P.A.J. written by Inspector Fazl Imam who has deposed to the fact that the names entered in this ruqa were given to him by Ladha Ram. The ruqa is dated 24th February 1921 and Rehana is named as one of several persons who had been brought by Arjan Das from Thamman. P. W. No. 23 Gomi states that a month or so prior to the fair at Nankana he had gone to a wedding at village Kalu Khara and from there had gone on to Mauza Thamman which is close to Kalu Khara. At Thamman he met Arjan Das, son of Khushal Das, and was told by him that his father Khushal Das had gone to collect men on behalf of Narain Das. Arjan Das asked Gomi to go with the party. Soon after Khushal Das arrived with 15 or 16 men among whom was Rehana of Thamman. They formed a party of about thirty men and together went to Lahore and on to Nankana. They all, with others, stopped there for a day or so and then were dismissed by the Mahant who told them to return in time for the fair. Rehana was given money at that time. Gomi went to Nankana again at the fair and found Arjan Das, son of Khushal Das, with a number of men including Rehana. No disturbance took place at this time and the men were dismissed being told that they would be sent for when required. Gomi went to Lahore on the 18th February 1921 in connection with the congress called by the Bedis. He went to the house of the Mahant in Ram Gali and there found, among others, Rehana. On the following day the party returned to Nankana as already stated (pages 45-46). On the morning of the 20th February 1921 on hearing the sound of firing Gomi went to the Darbar Sahab and says that he saw four men on the southern wall firing guns, Rehana being one of the four men (pages 47 48). In his statements to the Committing Magistrate and Diwan Mahesh Das he refers to Rehana in connection with the same incidents on the 20th February 1921. P. W. No. 24 Ladha Ram deposes to having seen Rehana on the 19th February on his arrival from Lahore, and to having seen him firing a gun on the southern wall on the morning of the 20th of February (page 67). He includes Rehana in those who were concerned with the killing in the Darshani deohri (page 68). Later on he refers to him as having been struck by a Sikh outside the southern gate just about the time when Mehnga Singh was killed (pages 69-73). He made similar statements to the Committing Magistrate and Diwan Mahesh Das. It may also be noted that on a previous occasion Rehana had been brought by Arjan Das to assist in repulsing any attack that the Sikhs might make on the Gurdwara. The evidence of these two witnesses has been consistent throughout so far as Rehana is concerned, and, as in the case of Ranjha, we consider that the testimony of these two approvers gives mutual support to one another. P. W. Takiullah states that Rehana was firing a gun while on the roof and that a man was killed outside the Gurdwara but that he did not fire during the chaukhandi incident (pages 87-89). P. W. No. 26 Farid deposes to having met Rehana outside the Darshani deohri coming from the north and going towards the Bazar having a wounded hand (page 97). At an identification parade held on the 2nd April 1921 both Takiullah and Farid identified this appellant (vide Exhibit P. H. I.). P. W. No. 35 Sadhu Singh identified as being outside armed with a gun (page 124). P. W. No. 37 Asa Singh deposes to having seen Rehana at the southern gate armed with a gun (page 129). P. W. No. 38 Gurdial Singh says the same (page 130). P. W. No. 36 Bhagat Singh son of Bhagwan Singh deposes to having seen a man armed with a gun at the southern gate who aimed at Kaim Singh (one of the killed) but was struck by Karm Singh with a tabua before he could fire, (page 126), and that the man with a gun was Rebana (page 127). At an identification parade held on the 4th April 1921 Bhagat Singh picked out Rebana but was not quite certain of him (Exhibit P. D.). P. W. No. 44 Ichhar Singh alleges that he was pursued by a number of men of whom Rebana was one, being armed with a gun (pages 149 150). This witness identified Rebana at an identification parade held on the 2nd April 1921, (Exhibit P. H. I.). P. W. No. 47 Jhanda Singh (pages 152-153) corroborates Ichhar Singh. P. W. No. 54 Bhagat Singh and P. W. No. 213 Jharda Singh also refer to this appellant, but their evidence is not of any great weight. The learned Sessions Judge has utilised the confessional statement of Hari Nath against this appellant, but, as stated above, we do not think that this can properly be done. Rebana declined to make any statement before the Committing Magistrate but the trial admitted that he was wounded by a chhavi near the eastern gate (page 365). He does not admit that his arm was broken and in all probability it was not. In a written statement filed by him he admits his presence at Nankana and states that on the morning of the 20th a great noise was heard and it was stated that a fight had taken place in the Gurdwara. All the people went in that direction and he went with them. As he reached there an Akali Sikh struck him a blow with a chhavi on his arm after which he ran away. After a careful consideration of the case, we are satisfied that the approvers' statements have been materially corroborated against Rebana, and that he has been rightly convicted. We accordingly dismiss his appeal and confirm the sentence of death.

The next case is that of Piara Singh, son of Hari Singh, who has been sentenced to transportation for life, having been convicted of offences under sections 148, 302 and 149, Indian Penal Code. His conviction is based by the learned Sessions Judge on the evidence of P. W. No. 23 Gomi, P. W. No. 25 Takiullah, P. W. No. 26 Farid, taken together with the confessional statement of Hari Nath. As pointed out above, Hari Nath's statement was made after he had heard the whole of the evidence for the prosecution, and we cannot regard it as safe to use his confession for the purpose of corroborating or strengthening the testimony of the approvers. The evidence of P. W. No. 23, Gomi, that this appellant was in the crowd at the southern gate with a stick in his hand (pages 47, 50, 58) but that he was some ten yards behind the others and did nothing (page 55). P. W. No. 25, Takiullah, states that Piara Singh was going about with a chhavi (page 85), and that he took part in the occurrence (page 93). He assigns no definite part to the appellant, probably because he was not properly examined on the point. P. W. No. 26, Farid, is more specific and includes this appellant in those men who were armed with chhavis and dragged bodies and struck the wounded (page 97). He also attributes the killing of the two Sikhs on the south wall to Piara Singh (pages 99, 100).

Farid and Takiullah cannot, however, be regarded as independent witnesses and their evidence does not corroborate the testimony of Gomi. Ladha Ram P. W. No. 24, not only does not mention this appellant, but definitely states that he did not see him at all (page 75). There is thus no corroboration of the approvers' evidence, for the only other witness who speaks of this appellant is P. W. No. 28, Sant Singh, who says that he was the last of the crowd of men following the Mahant, but that he had nothing in his hand. Sant Singh is on bad terms with Lal Das, brother of the appellant, and his evidence, therefore, cannot be regarded as very satisfactory. In these circumstances we accept this appeal and acquit Piara Singh son of Hari Singh.

The next case discussed was that of Lal Das son of Hari Singh, who is the brother of Piara Singh. He has been found guilty of an offence under section 201, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment. The learned Sessions Judge apparently bases the conviction of this appellant on the evidence of P. W. No. 25, Takiullah, and P. W. No. 26 Farid, taken along with the confessional statement of Hari Nath. As has already been stated, Hari Nath's confession cannot safely be used as corroboration of the evidence of the approvers.

According to P. W. No. 25 Takiullah, Lal Das was the manager or agent of the Mahant, and took part in the engagement of the Pathans on the 4th February 1921 (page 83). On the day of the occurrence under orders of the Mahant he and others, went towards the Railway line to dispose of any enemies that might be in that direction (pages 85, 89). Later, at the time of the chaukhandi incident, Lal Das is said to have told the Pathans and the other Mahant's supporters that the Mahant had said "we could do what we liked with these men" (page 86), and directed the proceedings inside, though he was armed only with a small bit and attacked no one (page 87). In his statement to the Committing Magistrate Takiullah refers to a Lal Das who joined in the pursuit towards the Railway line (page 85), but that he meant this to refer to the appellant is not quite clear, as, at the end of his statement, he includes the appellant in the list of those who took part in the occurrence in addition to those already named by him.

It should be noted that more than one Lal Das, "Munshi of the Mahant" has figured in the case (see the evidence of P. W. No. 28 Sant Singh, page 107). In his statement to the Magistrate on the 22nd March 1921 Takiullah referred to Lal Das as the Munshi who had taken down the names of the Pathans at the time of their engagement and his having taken part in the pursuit towards the Railway line, but not as directing the proceedings in the chaukhandi.

P.W. No. 23 Farid states that Lal Das had a white bit in his hand and was directing the proceedings inside at the time of the chaukhandi incident (page 97). Before the Committing Magistrate he referred to him in general terms as having been one of those concerned in the occurrence.

In his statement to Dewan Mahesh Das on the 23rd March 1921 he did not refer to the appellant as having taken part in any of the incidents of the 20th February 1921. P. W. No. 23, Gomi, also mentioned Lal Das, but after including him among those who were at the southern gate he says later that he saw him for the first time at the tank outside after the shooting of Meha Singh, and that he did not see him at the chaukhandi at all. He also says that Lal Das had a thin stick in his hand and did nothing in this presence. P.W. No. 24 Ladha Ram states that he saw Lal Das at the tank only doing nothing. From the above it will be seen that the evidence of Gomi and Ladha Ram does not assist the prosecution, and, if anything, indicates that Lal Das was merely a looker on; Farid's statement cannot be treated as corroborating Takiullah's evidence.

The only other evidence is that of P. W. No. 31, Atma Ram, who deposes to having seen Lal Das pursuing Sikhs towards the Railway line and later directing the burning of three dead Sikhs near a tree (page 116). He, however, admits having had a dispute with Lal Das over a lease of some land (page 117), and his evidence does not carry any weight. In the absence of any clear and satisfactory corroboration of the evidence of Takiullah and Farid, we are unable to maintain the conviction and, accepting his appeal, acquit Lal Das.

The next case taken up was that of Jiwan Das, who has been sentenced to transportation for life under sections 148, 302 and 149, Indian Penal Code. P. W. No. 23 Gomi deposes to having seen this appellant (described by him as a man with cut moustaches) outside the southern gate armed with a chhavi or takwa (pages 47, 58) and joining in the attack on the kothis inside (page 58). Neither in his statement to the Committing Magistrate, nor in that made to Diwan Mahesh Das on the 15th March 1921 is he recorded as having referred to a man with a cut moustache.

P.W. No. 24, Ladha Ram, states that Jiwan Das went with the Mahant to Lahore on the 18th February 1921 and returned with him from there on the 19th February. He says that on the morning of the 20th February 1921 he saw the appellant in the crowd at the southern gate (page 67) and also saw him go upstairs on to the roof (page 70). He again saw him coming down (page 68) and was told by him that he had killed two men below (pages 76, 78). As, however, he failed to identify Jiwan Das at the Jail identification parade on the 28th March 1921, there is a possibility of error on his part which, in our opinion, vitiates his evidence. P. W. No. 25, Takiullah, refers to this appellant as one of those who killed two Sikhs on the southern wall. The learned Sessions Judge has held (we consider rightly) that there is some uncertainty as to Jiwan Das's complicity in this incident, but has accepted Takiullah's testimony as showing his presence in, and membership of, the unlawful assembly. At the identification parade held in the Jail, however, Takiullah was not certain of Jiwan Das, a fact that materially reduces the value of his evidence.

The only other witness against Jiwan Das is P. W. No. 28, Sant Singh, who professes to have seen him with the Mahant at the time of the killing of Mehnga Singh (page 104) and says that he had a dang in his hand (page 105). He, however, failed to identify him at the Jail, as well as in the Court of the Committing Magistrate (page 105) and admits that Jiwan Das's mother complained that he had broken into her shop (page 107). No reliance can, therefore, be placed on his evidence so far as this appellant is concerned. We are unable to hold that Jiwan Das's complicity has been established beyond doubt, and, accepting his appeal, acquit him.

The next case taken up was that of Piar Singh son of Sundar Singh, who has been convicted of rioting and murder and sentenced under sections 148, 302 and 149, Indian Penal Code to transportation for life. The evidence against him consists of the statements of P. W. No. 23 Gomi, P. W. No. 24 Ladha Ram, and P. W No. 26 Farid Of these, P. W. No. 26, Farid (who includes him among those who dragged bodies and killed wounded men at the chaukhandi) failed to identify him at the Jail identification (a circumstance not referred to by the learned Sessions Judge), and for this reason his evidence is not of any value.

P. W. No. 23 Gomi says that on his arrival he saw this appellant (whom he refers to as Wasakha Singh's nephew) on the southern wall armed with a chhavi and throwing bricks (pages 47, 54). In his statement to Diwan Mahesh Das on the 15th March 1921 while he refers to the nephew of Wasakha Singh" as having come on previous occasions to Nankana he does not refer to him as having been at Nankana on the 20th February 1921.

P. W. No. 24, Ladha Ram, deposes to Piar Singh having come from Lahore with the Mahant on the 19th February 1921 and states that on the morning of the 20th February 1921 he saw him in the crowd at the southern gate (page 67) and taking part in the killing in the Darshani deorhi (pages 68, 69 and 76). In his statement to the Committing Magistrate, Ladha Ram refers to Piar Singh as having come on a previous occasion, and as having been in the crowd at the southern gate on the morning of the 20th February 1921 (page 77). He does not refer to him specifically in connection with the incident at the Darshani deorhi. It is true, as pointed out by Mr. Herbert, that Piar Singh appears in the ruqa (Exhibit P. A.) either by Inspector Fazal Imam to Inspector Sardar Gopal Singh on the 24th February 1921, the names therein having been given by Ladha Ram. But the value of this is done away with by the fact that in his statement to Diwan Mahesh Das made on the 10th-11th March 1921 Ladha Ram does not mention the appellant as having been concerned in the events on the 20th February 1921, although he refers to him as having come to Nankana on a previous occasion. From the foregoing it will be seen that Piar Singh was not implicated by either Gomi or Ladha Ram in the earliest statements made by them to Diwan Mahesh Das. In these circumstances we accept this appeal and acquit Piar Singh son of Sunder Singh.

We now come to case of Balak Das alias Babali who has been sentenced to transportation for life under sections 148, 302 and 149, Indian Penal Code. P. W. No. 23 Gomi says that Balak Das was present in the crowd outside the southern gate and was armed with a stick. To the Committing Magistrate as well as to Diwan Mahesh Das he made the same statement. P. W. No. 24 Ladha Ram supports Gomi in saying that Balak Das was in the crowd at the southern gate, for he says that he, Gopal Das and Balak Das were together drinking sardai where they heard the sound of firing and together went towards the Bazar, Balak Das having a stick (page 67). He also says that this appellant accompanied him on to the north-east corner of the Mahant's baithak where the Mahant was at the time. He next refers to him as being on the roof, and states that it was just as they were going down the stairs that Balak Das was struck on the forehead by a brick, though he does not know where the brick came from (page 68), and that he told him to go and get his head bandaged (page 69). P. W. No. 25, Takiullah, picked out Balak Das as one of the Mahant's supporters and armed with a chhavi who killed men in the Darshani deorhi (page 89). P. W. No. 26, Farid, says that he saw him with a chhavi in his hand at the chauk andi dragging bodies and striking wounded Sikhs, but was unable to identify him in the Court of the Committing Magistrate, although he had identified him at the parade in the Jail. In addition to the evidence of these approvers, we have the statement of P. W. No. 28, Sant Singh, who deposes to having seen him with a dang in his hand outside the Gurdwara with the Mahant, and P. W. No. 43, Sunder Das, gives similar evidence (page 137), although he cannot say what Balak Das had in his hand. Finally, there is his own statement (Exhibit P. C. D.). This statement was recorded by Diwan Mahesh Das as a confession. As pointed out by the learned Sessions Judge, however, it can scarcely be regarded as a confession in true sense of that word. It is, however, an admission of his presence at Nankana on the day of the occurrence and in it he also admits that he climbed on to the roof by means of a ladder. He goes on to say that some one struck him on the forehead with a brick which made him feel weak and, therefore, he retired to the tank to wash his wound. In his statement in the Sessions Court he states that he had gone to Nankana to get ghee, and had slept the night at Wiram Das's baithak, Ladhu being in another kotha. He also admits that he had followed Ladha Ram to the scene, and that he was standing bowing down at the southern gate of the Gurdwara when a brick struck him from above, after which he went to Kot Sudh Das, but was arrested at Waigal in Kasur Tahsil some eight days later. He alleges no enmity with Gomi or Ladha Ram. His account of how he received the injury is unsatisfactory, and there is absolutely no reason to think that either Gomi or Ladha Ram is falsely implicating him. He is a resident of Bhai Pheru, and his presence at Nankana on this occasion was evidently due to the fact that he had been enrolled by the Mahant or his relatives to protect the Gurdwara. This defence witness, D. W. No. 139, Sulakhan and D. W. No. 140, Sher Singh, do not say anything that can be regarded as contradicting the story told by Ladha Ram and Gomi. Ladha Ram gave his name to the Police at a very early stage, for we find Balak Das's name in the ruqa, Exhibit P. A. K., dated 24th February 1921 from Inspector Fazal Imam to Inspector Sardar Gopal Singh. Having regard to all the circumstances we are of opinion that Balak Das has been correctly convicted and dismiss his appeal.

Next, we come to Jetha Singh who has been sentenced to transportation for life under sections 148, 302 and 149, Indian Penal Code. His conviction is based on the evidence of P. W. No. 23 Gomi, P. W. No. 24 Ladha Ram and P. W. No. 32 Harnam Singh. Gomi states that Jetha Singh was in the crowd at the southern gate (page 47) and went up on to the south wall (page 50), but saw him doing nothing in particular, and in his statement to the Committing Magistrate he refers to Jetha Singh only as having been in the crowd at the southern gate (page 58). Ladha Ram deposes that Jetha Singh was outside and went up on to the roof (page 70). His statement to the Committing Magistrate was similar. Neither of these two witnesses appear to have named or clearly described the appellant in their depositions to Diwan Mahesh Das, which circumstance detracts considerably from the value of their evidence. Harnam Singh states that he saw Jetha Singh in front of the Darbar Sahib with a lathi in his hand going towards Kot Sadhu Ram, (i. e, away from the scene) before the chaukhandi incident had taken place. Harnam Singh and Jetha Singh both live at Kot Sadhu Ram. This evidence does not sufficiently connect Jetha Singh with the crime and cannot be regarded as a sufficient corroboration of the statements of Ladha Ram and Gomi. We accordingly accept Jetha Singh's appeal and acquit him.

The next case discussed by Mr. Hasan Imam was that of Jaggat Singh alias Jaggu, who has been sentenced to transportation for life under sections 148, 302 and 149, Indian Penal Code. In his statement to Diwan Mahesh Das on the 15th of March 1921, P. W. No. 23, Gomi said that Jaggu of Sidwani was at Nankana when he and others returned there at kh'o pio wela on the 19th of February 1921 after the Mahant had been warned at the Railway Station of the proximity of the Sikhs, and that the same Jaggu of Sidhwani armed with a chhavi had along with others entered the Gardwara by the southern gate as soon as it had been opened and had gone on to the roof. He also said that he had seen Jaggat Singh alias Jaggu of Sidhwani among those concerned in the chaukhandi incident. The appellant, though now residing in Aulakh Hithar, admits that till four years ago he lived at Sidhwani (page 38).

In his statement to the Committing Magistrate he referred to Jaggu Sidhwaniwala in connection with the same incidents (pages 57, 59). At the trial he said he had seen Jaggu of Sidhwani with a chhavi in the crowd of the Mahant's supporters at the southern gate, and that when the door had opened they had all gone inside (page 47). Later on he saw him taking an active part in the chaukhandi incident (page 49).

P. W. No. 26, Farid, states that this appellant was one of those who dragged bodies and killed wounded at the chaukhandi (page 97). In his statement to the Committing Magistrate he pointed him out as among those who had taken part in the occurrences. As Jaggat Singh was not known to the witness he could not refer to him by name in his statement to Diwan Mahesh Das but he identified him at the identification parade held on the 2nd of April 1921 [vide Exhibit P. H. (i)]. P. W. No. 33 Amir Singh identified Jaggat Singh as one of five or six men who had chased him and his companion (page 120), but though he identified him at the identification parade on the 2nd April 1921 he states that to the Committing Magistrate he said he could not identify any of his pursuers. This circumstance renders his evidence of little or no value.

P. W. No. 34, Gurdit Singh, is one of the Sikhs who claims to have gone into the Gurdwara that morning. He states that while he and his companions were reciting hymns firing commenced. He sought shelter by the eastern wall, and saw a man with a gun and three or four others with chhavis standing on the wall to the west of the southern gate and says that this appellant was one of the chhavi men. He identified Jaggat Singh at the parade on the 2nd April 1921 [vide Exhibit P. H. (i)].

P.W. No. 43, Sundar Das, deposes to having seen Jaggat Singh with the Mahant, but saw nothing in his hand (page 137). In his statement to the Committing Magistrate he pointed the appellant out as having had a chhavi. He identified him at the parade on the 2nd April 1921, [vide Exhibit P. W. (i)].

P. W. No. 114, Ismail, deposes to having seen Jagat Singh at Nankana on the 19th February 1921 (page 228). He identified him at the parade on the 2nd April 1921, but said he was not quite certain of him.

Jaggat Singh denied his complicity and urged that he was in his own village of Aulakh Hithar, and that as he is on the register of bad characters (No. 10), he could not have absented himself without a report of the fact being made by the Lambardars. In his defence he produced D W. No. 133, Babal Singh, and D. W. No. 134, Allah Din, the Lambardar and Chaukidar of Aulak Hithar, who state that Jaggat Singh was not absent from the village on the night in question, and that they would have reported the matter had he been. D. W. No. 161, Sultan Alam, Head Constable, had also been produced to show that no report of the appellant's absence had been made. As pointed by the learned Sessions Judge the absence of a report is no valid proof that the appellant was in the village, as it is a notorious fact that Lambardars and Chaukidars are slack in the discharge of their duty.

It was also alleged that Jaggat Singh was an Akali and, therefore, could not have joined in this affair. It is true that D. W. No. 168, Kartar Singh, of Jhabbar, admits having baptized Jaggat Singh, but he says this was five years ago, and he does not know if he is an Akali or not.

We are not impressed by the defence set up which does not, in our opinion, rebut the case for the prosecution. No reason has been suggested why Gomi should have falsely implicated Jaggat Singh, and it will be seen that this witness has been consistent throughout in his account of the part taken by this appellant. Eliminating the evidence of Amir Singh and Ismail the corroboration of Gomi's statement is to be found in the deposition of Sundar Das and Gurdit Singh. No valid reason has been given for thinking that these two witnesses are not worthy of credence against the appellant, and that the learned Sessions Judge has pointed out that there is no real contradiction of Gomi's statement in the evidence of Gurdit Singh. After a careful consideration of the evidence we think that Jaggat Singh has been rightly convicted and dismiss his appeal.

Next the case of Atma Ram was discussed by Mr. Puri. This appellant has been sentenced to death under sections 148, 302 and 149, Indian Penal Code. He is a resident of Nankana and was arrested on the 20th February 1921. The evidence against him is that of the four approvers, P W. No. 23, Gomi, refers to him as a Brahman who arrived with a stick and was in the crowd outside the southern gate (page 47). Before the Committing Magistrate he made no reference to any Brahman, but pointed out Atma Ram as having been in the crowd at the southern gate (page 58). In his statement on the 15th March 1921 he made no reference to any Brahman, and did not refer to the appellant, unless he is to be taken as included in the expression "the Mahant's men." At the most, ther, according to Gomi, Atma Ram was at the southern gate in the crowd that had collected there.

Mr. Puri contended that Gomi was the only witness who placed this appellant at the southern gate. But this is not correct for P. W, No. 24, Ladha Ram, also says that he saw him there (page 67). He also saw the appellant going on to the roof by way of the stairs and coming down again (page 68). Mr. Puri contended that there was a discrepancy as to this, as Ladha Ram also says that he could not tell who went up by way of the stairs, and who used the ladder (page 72). There is, however, no force in this, as it is obvious that Ladha Ram meant that he could not give all the names of those who went up by one means, and those who went up by the other. Before the Committing Magistrate he says that Atma Ram was at the southern gate and among those who were trying to climb on to the roof (pages 77, 78), and in his statement to Diwan Mahesh Das he said that he had seen Atma Ram at the southern gate and on the roof. This witness, therefore, depores to the appellant having been at two places, firstly in the crowd at the southern gate, and then on the roof.

P. W. No. 25, Takiullah, identified him in the Jail on the 25th March 1921 (Exhibit P. C.) and in his statement to Diwan Mahesh Das he refers to the killing of two Sikhs on the southern wall by the Mahant's men. In his statement to the Committing Magistrate he again referred to this incident and pointed out Arjan Das as one of the men who killed two Sikhs. He definitely stated that the other assailant was not present in Court (page 95). In his final statement at the trial, however, he pointed out Atma Ram as one of those who took part in this incident (page 86).

In the statement recorded by Diwan Mahesh Das, Farid makes no reference to Atma Ram, but identified him at the parade on the 25th March 1921. In the Committing Magistrate's Court he pointed him out as one of those who took part in the occurrence (page 101). In his statement at the trial, however, he pointed him out as being one of two men who were present at the chaukhandi incident, and who killed two wounded Sikhs who had tried to get out of the fire (pages 97, 99, 100).

The identification of Atma Ram by Takiullah and Farid is not impressing seeing that he was arrested on the 20th February 1921 and sent to the Central Jail with the Pathans. Each of them makes him take part in totally different incidents, and though the differences in the three statements made by Farid may be due to his not having been properly examined, these differences exist and tell against the prosecution. Neither Gomi nor Ladha Ram referred to Atma Ram in connection with these incidents, and there being no corroboration of the stories told by these two Pathan approvers, we cannot regard that evidence as sufficient. Similarly, Ladha Ram alone referred to Atma Ram as having been on the roof. He and Gomi agree only as to his presence at the southern gate. Hari Nath refers to him in his confessional statement, but the confession of this man cannot be utilised for the purpose of strengthening the story of the approvers. Atma Ram himself says that he was at the Bazar, the whole time, and as neither Ladha Ram nor Gomi attribute any definite act to him, it is not improbable that after going to the southern gate on hearing the firing (as doubtless many others must have done) he went off to the Bazar to carry out his duties there. We have carefully considered the evidence against this appellant and cannot regard it as sufficient. We accordingly accept his appeal and acquit him.

Arjan Das's appeal was argued by Mr. Ram Lal. This appellant has been sentenced to transportation for life under sections 148, 302 and 149, Indian Penal Code. He is a nephew (brother's son) of the Mahant. The witnesses who depose against him are P. W. No. 23, Gomi, P. W. No. 24 Ladha Ram, P. W. No. 25 Takiullah, P. W. No. 26 Farid, and P. W. No 28 Sant Singh, and he is also implicated by Hari Nath. As in the case of others, we do not think that Hari Nath's confession can carry any weight against this appellant. Of the witnesses Sant Singh admittedly has enmity with the Mahant and Mr. Herbert conceded that he would be prejudiced against the Mahant's relatives. Takiullah and Farid failed to identify him at the identification parade in the Jail, so that their subsequent identification in the Court when they both give him an active and prominent part cannot be regarded as of any value. P. W. No. 23, Gomi, says that he saw Arjan Das in the crowd at the southern gate (page 47), and that he procured oil at the instance of the Mahant (page 48) and later went off in the direction of the chaukhandi just before killing there commenced. He referred to him in connection with the same incidents to the Committing Magistrate (pages 56-59) and to Diwan Mahesh Das, on the 15th March 1921. P. W. No. 29 Ladha Ram states that he saw this appellant at the southern gate (page 57) but not again till the occurrence was over when he saw him taking people away to Kot Ladha Ram (page 70). In his statement to the Committing Magistrate he says he saw Arjan Das at the southern gate among those who were trying to get on to the roof (pages 77, 78). He made a similar statement to Diwan Mahesh Das. From above it will be seen that Gomi and Ladha Ram agree only as to having seen the appellant at the southern gate. It is curious that Ladha Ram should not have noticed him again at any stage of the proceedings if he had taken the somewhat prominent part allotted to him by Gomi, and seeing that he was a relative of the Mahant and known to Ladha Ram we are unable to regard the evidence of these two approvers as sufficient to warrant the conviction of this appellant. Finally, there is Arjan Das's own admission as to his presence at the Nankana on the day of the occurrence, but this statement does not incriminate him in any way. It was urged by Mr. Herbert that having regard to his relationship with the Mahant, it was highly probable that Arjan Das took part in the happenings at the Gurdwara. While recognizing the force of this, we are unable to hold that the evidence on the record is sufficient to prove the case against him in the absence of any corroboration of the approvers' statements. We accordingly accept his appeal and acquit Arjan Das.

Mr. Ram Lal then dealt with the case of KammanMachhi who has been found guilty of rioting and murder and sentenced to transportation for life under sections 148, 302 and 149, Indian Penal Code. The only witnesses against this appellant are the three approvers P. W. No. 23 Gomi, P. W. No. 25 Takiullah, and P. W. No. 26 Farid. Gomi refers to a stammering Musalman whom he identified as Kamman as being present in the crowd at the southern gate armed with a stick, and he picked the appellant out in the Court of the Committing Magistrate, but at the identification parade held on the 25th March 1921, he is recorded as having said that he suspected him to some extent. Takiullah pointed him out as one of those armed with a chhapi (page 87), but attributes no particular act to him, and in the Court of the Committing Magistrate he pointed him out as one of those who took part in the occurrence (page 93). Farid includes him in those who were dragging bodies and striking wounded Sikhs. Thus, while all these three approvers identified him, Gomi was not sure of him at the outset, and only said that he saw him at the southern gate. Takiullah and Farid do not allot the same parts to him. As to their identification of him it has to be borne in mind that Kamman Machhi was in the Central Jail from about the 2nd March 1921. Kamman denies his presence at Nankana on the date in question and alleges that he was in his own village at Mangu Tara. There is no corroboration whatever of the statement of the approvers and a point in his favour is that while Ladha Ram referred to a Musalman Machhi when he gave information to the Police (vide Exhibit P. A. J.) he does not identify Kamman. We accept his appeal, set aside his conviction and acquit him.

The cases of the Pathan appellants were then taken up by Mr. Miran Bakhsh who, however, contented himself with referring us to those parts of the record where the word 'Pathans' happened to be written and then asked us to disbelieve the evidence of the approvers on the ground that they had been induced to make their statement. We may say at the outset that there is ample evidence on the record to show that all these Pathan appellants were engaged by the Mahant on the 3rd February 1921 to act as guards. From a perusal of the whole record, we consider that the learned Sessions Judge is right in thinking that they played a minor part, and that it is quite possible "that some of them did not venture to play any part at all." With the exception of Nur Sadin and Kadir who have been sentenced to death under sections 148, 302 and 149, Indian Penal Code, the other Pathan appellants have been convicted under section 201, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment. Before any individual Pathan can be convicted, however, we think there should be some definite evidence against him, and that evidence of a general character that Pathans, as a whole, did this or that, cannot be looked upon as sufficient. The conviction of these appellants are based almost, if not entirely, on the statements of Takiullah and Farid. In regard to these two witnesses it has to be borne in mind that they undoubtedly knew their comrades and were with them for a considerable period in the Central Jail. It was, therefore, to be expected that they could identify them. As has been said above, Takiullah and Farid had ample opportunity while in the Central Jail to discuss the situation and they, therefore, cannot be regarded as independent witnesses and the testimony of one cannot afford support to the testimony of the other. With these remarks we proceed to deal with the individual appeals, and take up that of Gul Akbar.

Against him there is the evidence of Takiullah and Farid. The former says that Gul Akbar went up on to the roof (page 84) and threw bricks. He was armed with a stick. The latter says that Gul Akbar was armed with a stick and was dragging bodies and striking wounded Sikhs at the chaukhandi. There is no corroboration of their statements, although Ladha Ram pointed him out as one of those who went on to the roof from the southern gate. The case against Abdulla is precisely the same, Ladha Ram, in addition, saying that Abdulla was the man who introduced the Pathans (page 70). We cannot regard this evidence as sufficient as we consider that it would be unsafe to convict on the uncorroborated statements of Takiullah and Farid. We accordingly accept these appeals and acquit Gul Akbar and Abdullah.

The cases against Mahomed Azim, Abdul Karim, Abdul Wali, Mohammad Ali, Gul Ahmad, and Ismail depend entirely on the evidence of Takiullah and Farid, there being no corroboration of their statements. We are unable to uphold their convictions and accepting their appeals acquit all these men.

Ashiq, Nek Muhammad, and Aziz Ullah have been dealt with together by the learned Sessions Judge. Takiullah and Farid say that they were concerned in the occurrence having gone up on to the roof, dragged bodies and struck wounded Sikhs at the chaukhandi and, according to Takiullah, brought oil and wood. Here again there is no corroboration and accepting their appeals we acquit all three.

Against Lal Mahomed there is the evidence of Takiullah and Farid. P. W. No. 43, Sundar Das, identified this appellant as one of those who were killing men with chhavis. As, however, he did not identify him in jail, and as according to both the approvers, Nur Sadin was the only one who had an axe, the others having sticks, it is obvious that Sundar Das's identification can carry no weight. In the absence of any corroboration we accept Lal Mahomed's appeal and acquit him.

The learned Sessions Judge dealt with the cases of Nur Muhammad and Rahman together. Farid and Takiullah are the only witnesses against them. According to Farid, Rahman had been dragging the bodies for burning before the attack on the chaukhandi, while Takiullah omitted Rahman in his list of those who went on to the southern wall. It was urged that as against Nur Muhammad corroboration of the approvers' story was to be found in the fact that the pair of shoes which he was wearing (O. 14) have been proved to have belonged to Sewa Singh, one of the persons who is alleged to have been killed inside. Nur Muhammad admits that he was wearing the shoes, but says that they belonged to him, P. W. No. 233, Dalip Singh, and P. W. No. 234, Makhan Singh have been produced by the prosecution to prove that these shoes belonged to Sewa Singh. Dalip Singh says that Sewa Singh was his sister's husband and lived a quarter of a mile from him. He identified these shoes as the pair that Sewa Singh was wearing on the 6th Phagan when he came to see him at his own village. Makhan Singh is the brother of Sewa Singh, and says that he had seen Sewa Singh wearing these shoes for some time There is nothing on the record to show that there were any marks on the shoes which could render them capable of identification, and we are not satisfied with the evidence of these witnesses as to their having belonged to Sewa Singh. Thus, as in the former cases, there is no corroboration of the approvers' evidence against these two appellants, and accepting their appeal we acquit them.

The case of Said Fakir is very similar to that of Nur Muhammad. According to Takiullah he saw Said Fakir bringing wood but doing nothing else. Farid says that Said Fakir helped to collect bodies for burning before the attack on the chaukhandi, and also robbed the dead of Rs. 71, and a pair of shoes (Exhibit P, 15). There can be no doubt that Said Fakir was found in the jail wearing these shoes Farid also says that out of the Rs. 71 taken by this appellant, Rs. 50 had been deposited with one Bishen Singh. Bishen Singh denies that Said Fakir made any such deposit with him. Farid's story is thus not corroborated on this point. As to the shoes, P.W. No. 259. Hazura Singh, says that they belonged to his maternal uncle, Dalip Singh, with whom he lived. We are unable to regard this evidence as sufficient to prove that Dalip Singh owned them. There is thus no corroboration of the approvers' statements against Said Fakir and we accordingly accept his appeal and acquit him.

As to Imam Gul, Takiullah states that he was one of those who climbed the ladder on to the south wall and threw bricks on to the Sikhs below, dragged bodies at the chaukhandi and wall and brought away a bundle of clothes belonging to the dead persons. Farid's story is that Imam Gul dragged bodies out of the chaukhandi, struck wounded man and carried away a bundle of loot. P. W No. 43, Sunder Das, pointed out Imam Gul as having had a gun on the deorhi roof as well as down below. As, however, this witness did not identify him in the Jail or in the Court of the Committing Magistrate, it is obvious that this identification at the trial can carry no weight. Here again there is no corroboration of the approvers' story, and we accept this appeal and acquit Imam Gul.

The next Pathan is Kadir, who has been sentenced to death under sections 148, 302 and 149, Indian Penal Code. There is against him the evidence of Takiullah and Farid, but no corroboration of any kind whatever. In his statement to Diwan Mahesh Das, Takiullah said that where the heaps of the dead bodies were burning two of the wounded Sikhs who were on the burning heaps got up and attempted to escape but were knocked down and killed, one by Farid and the other by Kadir. In the Court of the Committing Magistrate he said that Farid and Kadir were among those who killed wounded Sikhs (page 93). At the trial he stated that Kadir struck down a man who got up from the fire (page 87).

Farid, in his statement to Diwan Mahesh Das, stated that when the fire set to the dead had begun to burn, two Sikhs got up and tried to run away. At a distance of two paces, one was killed by him with a danda, and the other by Kadir. To the Committing Magistrate he said that when the bodies were set fire to two men supposed dead got up out of the heap but Kadir and he killed them (page 101). At the trial he stated the same thing saying that Kadir and he had attacked two men who stood up from the burning heap and knocked them down with sticks, the Mahant's men striking them with chhavis. It will thus be seen that both these approvers have been consistent in their accounts of the part taken by Kadir. As, however, these two approvers had ample opportunity to consult each other in the Central Jail, we cannot use the statement of one to support the statement of the other. We do not doubt that the incident related took place and we think that both these approvers are speaking the truth, when they say that two Sikhs got up from the burning heaps and were knocked down by Farid and another. We think, however, that it would be unsafe to convict Kadir as being Farid's associate in this incident without some corroboration, and we accordingly feel constrained to accept his appeal and acquit him.

Nur Sadin. Finally, there is the case of Nur Sadir, who has also been sentenced to death. This appellant, according to Takiullah and Farid, was the only one of the Pathans who was armed with an axe, the axe belonging to him and not having been provided by the Mahant. In this connection we may refer to the evidence of Uttam Singh, P. W. No. 108, contractor and factory owner of Nankana. He says that on the 19th February, at 6 P. M., he went to the Darbar Sahib and found the Mahant distributing chhavis to his men. This evidence is not supported by anything on the record and is in flat contradiction of the story told by Takiullah and Farid, and we regard it as untrue. Takiullah and Farid both agree in saying that Nur Sadin had an axe. According to Takiullah, Nur Sadin went with all the Pathans first to the Darshani deorhi, which they found shut, and then on to the southern gate where Nur Sadin was one of those who went on the roof by means of a ladder. Later on, referring to the shooting of Mehnga Singh, he says that when Mehnga Singh fell, Nur Sadin attacked him with his axe. He places Nur Sadin inside at the chaukhandi incident and says that Nur Sadin cut holes in the western door with his axe (page 85), and later includes him in the number of those Pathans who dragged the corpses out of the chaukhandi. In his statement to the Committing Magistrate he makes Nur Sadin play the same part (pages 92, 93), and in his statement to Diwan Mahesh Das we find the same incident attributed to this appellant by this witness. Farid says that Nur Sadin made a hole with his axe in the western silver door (of the chaukhandi) and was one of those who dragged corpses out of the chaukhandi, and attacked the wounded Sikhs with an axe (pages 96, 97). To the Committing Magistrate he stated that Nur Sadin made a hole in the western door of the chaukhandi with kulhari (page 101). In his statement to Diwan Mahesh Das he says that Nur Sadin broke the silver plate of the western door (of the chaukhandi) with his hatchet and dragged corpses out of the gaddi of the Gurdwara. As in the case of Kadir, so in that of this appellant, these two witnesses have been consistent in their accounts of the part played by Nur Sadin. Ladha Ram identified Nur Sadin, at the jail parade, and in the Court of the Committing Magistrate as one of those who were trying to climb on to the roof at the southern gate (page 78). At the trial he picked him out as a man who killed men (page 70). In this statement to Diwan Mahesh Das, however, his statement in connection with the part played by the Pathans is somewhat different. According to him the Pathan went into the Gurdwara through the Darshani deorhi after that had been opened and it was the Pathans who were engaged in burning the dead bodies and killing any of the Sikhs who were still alive, the Pathans having dangs and chhavis with them. As, according to Takiullah and Farid, Nur Sadin was the only Pathan armed with an axe, it is curious that this fact was not mentioned by Ladha Ram.

Hari Nath in his confession states that a Pathan with his own takwa cut a hole into the western door of the chaukhandi obviously referring to the same incident as that deposed to by the two Pathan approvers. Doubtless this incident occurred, but there is only the evidence of Takiullah and Farid connecting Nur Sadin with it. We cannot accept the statements of these two approvers without corroboration, and as none is forthcoming, we feel constrained to accept this appeal and acquit Nur Sadin.

From our analysis of the evidence against the appellants individually it will be seen that we have given full effect to the maxim that the evidence of an accomplice must, as a rule, be considered untrustworthy unless it is corroborated in material particulars. At the same time we admit that the present case is an exceptional one inasmuch as Gomi and Ladha Ram had no opportunity of collaborating inter se before they were examined by Dewan Mahesh Das, or with the Pathan approvers before the latter were examined. But we cannot hold that the evidence of one approver can be said to corroborate another except where both have, at the earliest opportunity, and before there has been any chance of collaboration, deposed to the same acts as having been committed by a particular accused person. The learned Sessions Judge has shown great care and diligence in his trial of a very difficult case, and has dealt with every point in his very exhaustive judgment, but we think that, as a matter of prudence, he should have insisted on there being unanimity as to the incidents deposed to, or a sufficient number of them, by two approvers before their uncorroborated testimony was deemed sufficient to warrant a conviction thereon.

He has also attached great weight to the opinion of the Assessors, and this he was certainly entitled to do. But we doubt whether Assessors, even the most intelligent, pay much attention to the aforesaid maxim, and their opinion cannot be taken as a substitute for untainted evidence where a prudent person would require it.

We direct that those appellants whose convictions we have set aside be released forthwith.

Z. K.

Order accordingly.

PATNA HIGH COURT.
FULL BENCH.
CRIMINAL REVISION No. 293 OF 1922.
June 19, 1922.

Present:—Sir Dawson Miller, Kt., Chief Justice Justice Sir B. K. Mullick, Kt., and Justice Sir Jwala Prasad, Kt.

KAMARUDDIN MANDAL AND OTHERS—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 144, scope of—Order under section, when may be rescinded—High Court, power of, to interfere—"Made under this section", meaning of—"Alter or rescind," meaning of—Possession, dispute as to, remedy, proper—Proceeding under s. 144—Magistrate, power of, to convert, into inquiry under s. 145—High Court, when to be resorted to—Interpretation of Statutes—Court, duty of.

Clause (4) of section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code is not confined to cases where there has been a change of circumstances since the original order was made, and, although a Magistrate ought not to interfere with an order once made under the section unless very good reasons are disclosed for doing so, he may rescind such an order, if he is satisfied that it ought never to have been made. [p. 150, col. 2]

Per Mullick, J.—The expression "made under this section" in clause (4) of section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code, means, "legally made or purporting to be made" under this section. [p. 152, col. 1.]

Section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code is of general application and contains nothing which ousts the Magistrate's jurisdiction in cases of bona fide dispute as to possession of land. But where section 107 or section 145 will meet the requirements of the case, section 144 is not an appropriate remedy, and ought not to be used as a substitute for those sections. [p. 152, col. 2.]

The words "alter or rescind" in clause (4) of section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, clearly empower a District Magistrate to modify or cancel an order under that section upon any ground whatsoever. [p. 151, col. 2.]

Per Jwala Prasad, J.—When one party is clearly in the wrong and threatens to usurp the rights of another who is in actual possession of the land in dispute, the proper remedy is an order under section 144 or section 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code. [p. 154, col. 1.]

Where in a proceeding under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, a Magistrate comes to the conclusion that there is a bona fide dispute as to the possession of the parties, then he is bound to start an enquiry under section 145 either in continuation of his order under section 144 or in supersession thereof, for section 145 is the only section under which an enquiry in the case of a danger of a breach of the peace concerning a dispute as to land can be made. [p. 155, col. 1.]

The words "rescind or alter" in clause (4) of section 144 are wide enough to vest the Magistrates mentioned in that clause with unlimited power to deal with an order passed under clause (1) of the section on the question of jurisdiction as well as upon the merits. [p. 156, col. 1.]

Ordinarily, a party should exhaust all remedies in the Courts below before he comes to the High Court. This is a very desirable practice, but there is, however, no absolute bar in law to the party coming direct to the High Court under section 107 of the Government of India Act. [p. 156, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—The petitioner in this case moved the Sub-Divisional Magistrate to take action under section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code against the opposite party and pass orders restraining them from interfering with his possession of certain land. The petitioner's case was that he purchased the land at a Court sale and obtained delivery of possession from the Court in August 1921 and that a speedy remedy was necessary to prevent him from being obstructed, annoyed or injured by the interference of his possession by the opposite party. When the parties presented themselves before the Magistrate it appeared that the opposite party were the usufructuary mortgagees of the land under a mortgage dated November 1920, and that the sale to the petitioner in 1921 had been declared at the time to be subject to the mortgage and that the mortgagees were in actual possession; and at the instance of the latter, who complained that their possession had been obstructed by the petitioner, the Magistrate passed an order under section 144 directing that the petitioner should abstain from interfering with the possession of the opposite party for a period of two months.

The petitioner then moved the District Magistrate to rescind or alter the order under clause (4) of the section. The grounds of the application, as stated by the District Magistrate, were, (1) that the order of the Sub Divisional Magistrate was not sound, and (2) that the Sub Divisional Magistrate should have referred the opposite party to the Civil Court and upheld the petitioner's possession.

The District Magistrate, in view of certain rulings of this Court, considered that he had no jurisdiction under section 144 (4) to interfere and refused to entertain the application. The rulings upon which he relied are to the effect that the powers conferred by the fourth clause of the section are only exercisable when it is shown that the circumstances existing at the time the order was made had changed rendering the order no longer necessary. The petitioner now moves this Court against the order. He does not contend before us that the District Magistrate had power to rescind the order of his subordinate; on the contrary, he says that the District Magistrate had no powers either of appeal or revision under section 144 (4), his powers of interference under the fourth clause being confined to cases where circumstances have arisen, since the original order was made, rendering the continuation of the order unnecessary or an alteration of its terms desirable, as laid down by the rulings referred to, and as no new circumstances have arisen in the present case he admits that the District Magistrate could not have taken any action. Why he approached the District Magistrate at all, if this contention is right, I have some difficulty in appreciating and no satisfactory explanation was forthcoming. The only reason that I can conceive for adopting the course taken is, that he apprehended that this Court might refuse to exercise its powers of superintendence until all possible remedies by a subordinate Court had been exhausted. For my own part, I can see no reason why the powers given in the fourth clause of the section should be confined to cases where there has been a change of circumstances since the original order was made. It seems to me that, if the Magistrate has power to rescind an order previously made by himself or his predecessor or his subordinate under the section because the circumstances no longer require it to remain in force, he should equally have power to rescind it if he is satisfied that it never ought to have been made. There is nothing in the wording of the fourth clause which limits the powers of the Magistrate in the sense indicated, and I can see no valid reason why words of limitation should be read into the section which would have the effect suggested. It is clearly desirable that a Magistrate should not interfere with an order once made under the section unless very good reasons are disclosed for doing so. It may be equally desirable that those reasons should be clearly defined in the section itself, but that is a matter for the Legislature, and, as the section at present stands, the powers given are in no way limited to cases in which the circumstances have altered. To read into the section words limiting its operation in the sense contended for would be to usurp the functions of the Legislature, which it is not within the competence of this or any other Court to do.

It was argued before us, however, that the order originally made was one which was outside the scope of section 144 (1), and was made without jurisdiction, and that, in such circumstances, it should not be treated as an order made under that section at all, but as an unauthorised order made without jurisdiction, and that this Court should exercise its powers of superintendence under section 107 of the Government of India Act and set aside the order. No doubt this Court has interfered and exercised its jurisdiction in such cases, and if it could be shown that the order in the present case did not come within the powers conferred by the first clause of section 144 we would be entitled to interfere and set it aside.

It was also contended that an order which purported to be made under the first clause of the section but was not in fact authorised thereby could not be dealt with by the Magistrate under the fourth clause, not being an order made under the section at all, and that the Magistrate had no powers of revision in such a case. It is unnecessary to determine this question or even to determine the exact limits, if any, of the Magistrate's power under the fourth clause of the section, as, in my opinion, the order originally made appears to have been properly made under the powers granted by clause 1, and no ground for interference either by this Court or by the District Magistrate is made out. We might have sent the case back to be dealt with by the District Magistrate under the fourth clause, but as the order appears to have been properly made by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, acting under the first clause of the section, and as no other ground for interference is made out it would be a waste of time to remand the case to the District Magistrate merely for him to refuse the application. In my opinion, this application should be rejected.

MULLICK, J.—I am of the same opinion. If I have understood correctly, the learned Vakil for the petitioner puts his argument in two alternative forms.

"First," he says, "assume that this was a case in which the Sub-Divisional Officer had jurisdiction to make an order under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code. In that event the District Magistrate had jurisdiction to alter or rescind that order and he having declined to hear the petitioner's application to this end, the Court might, but for the objection about to be mentioned, have sent back the case to him to be dealt with according to law. I admit that this course is in conformity with the practice of this Court which requires that the petitioner shall exhaust his remedies in the Courts below before invoking the aid of this Court. But in this case the District Magistrate had no jurisdiction to grant my prayer and so I have a right to come direct to the High Court. He only had jurisdiction to alter or rescind the order on the ground that there had been a change in the circumstances since the making of the order, but as I am attacking the propriety and legality of the order he had no jurisdiction to entertain my application."

The reply to these contentions appears to be this. It is true that there are some decisions of this Court which support the learned Vakil's construction of clause (4) of section 144, but I think, with the greatest respect, that they unduly restrict the plain and unambiguous terms of the Statute. The words "alter or rescind" clearly empower the District Magistrate to modify or cancel the order upon any ground whatsoever. I am not impressed by the argument that to give the District Magistrate the power to examine the propriety and legality of the order would be to confer upon him powers higher than the Code accords to the High Court. The Legislature has chosen, in appropriate language within the section itself, to vest the District Magistrate with a wide and unrestricted power of review and to render him independent of the provisions relating to appeal and revision and it is not open to us by reference to questions of policy to endeavour to give that language an arbitrary and limited meaning. The High Court of Calcutta took a somewhat similar view in regard to section 125, Criminal Procedure Code, which relates to the cancellation by District Magistrates of bonds for keeping the peace. [Nabu Sardar v. Emperor (1)].

I think, therefore, that the District Magistrate had jurisdiction to entertain the petitioner's application, but as the whole case is before us we should, in order to avoid delay, deal with the application ourselves in exercise of our powers of superintendence.

The learned Vakil's alternative contention is that the Sub-Divisional Officer had no jurisdiction to make an order under section 144 in a case where there was a bona fide dispute between two parties as to possession; that his order in this case was not an order under the section and that he had no jurisdiction to alter or rescind it; in other words, the District Magistrate had no jurisdiction to cancel an order even if satisfied that it was made without jurisdiction.

The conclusion is startling, and is clearly not supported by the section. It would, indeed, be a strange result if the District Magistrate could interfere where his subordinate had acted with perfect regularity and not when he had been guilty of clear error and irregularity by assuming jurisdiction where he had no jurisdiction. The words "made under this section," in clause 4 of section 144, clearly mean "legally made or purporting to be made under this section."

No other interpretation would make the section intelligible.

As for the contention that a bona fide dispute as to possession ousts the jurisdiction of Magistrates to make an order under section 144, we have been referred to a number of decisions of this Court which may possibly seem to give some support to that view but in this particular case it cannot be said that the point directly arises. Here it is clear that there was no bona fide dispute as to possession and that the petitioner was acting unlawfully in attempting to disturb a zurpeshgi mortgagee whose interest had been declared not to have passed by the sale at which petitioner purchased.

But as the question has been argued at some length and is of some importance I think that I should state my view of the law.

Section 144 is of general application and contains nothing which ousts the Magistrate's jurisdiction in cases of bona fide dispute as to possession of land. But where section 107 or section 145 will meet the requirements of the case, section 144 is not an appropriate remedy, and if it is found that the danger was not so imminent that it could not be otherwise averted, an order under section 144 will generally be held to have been made without jurisdiction. Where it is clear upon the materials before the Magistrate that one party is in possession and that another, whose claim to possession is a mere pretence, is threatening to interfere with that possession, the Magistrate is clearly entitled to resort to the special summary procedure of section 144, if immediate prevention or speedy remedy is desirable. Sometimes it may even be necessary to take action against the party who is actually in possession, but in every case it must be shown that the conditions required by the section exist. What the Court deprecates is the habitual and unjustifiable use of section 144 as a substitute for sections 107 and 145.

The expression bona fide dispute as to possession is ambiguous. A party may be acting with perfect bona fides in asserting a right to possession though he has no justification in law for doing so. On the other hand, the materials before the Magistrate may show that evidence of possession on both sides is more or less equally balanced and that both are acting bona fide. Though jurisdiction to issue an order under section 144 exists in either case the question will arise wether the issue of an order under section 144 will not involve the recognition of conditions which will coerce the Magistrate into taking action under section 145. The language of section 145 seems mandatory but on this point I need express no final opinion here.

(1) 34 C. 1; 11 C. W. N. 25; 4 C. L. J. 428; 4 Cr. L. 399; 1 M. L. T. 368 (F. B.).

It remains to consider what order should now be passed by us.

We have, as stated above, decided not to insist upon the petitioner's invoking the aid of the District Magistrate but to dispose of the whole matter ourselves. As to our jurisdiction there can be no doubt.

Now, if it had been shown that upon the information before the Magistrate, the conditions required by section 144 had not been established so that the use of section 144 instead of section 107 or section 145 was a mere abuse of the process of the Court or that though made with jurisdiction the order had resulted in something akin to the denial of the right of fair trial, we should certainly have interfered in exercise of our powers of superintendence.

But here the proceedings disclose no such defects and consequently there is no reason whatsoever to interfere.

JWALA PRASAD, J.—I would dismiss this application.

True, this Court has powers under section 107 of the Government of India Act to set aside an order passed under section 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure if the order is outside the scope of section 144, clause (1), is ultra vires or has resulted in the denial of the right of fair trial, as my learned brother, Mullick, J., puts it. Mr. Pal, who has argued the case on behalf of the petitioner has failed to make out any such ground. He relies upon what he calls "the recent delivery of possession through the Civil Court" (to quote the words of ground No. 1 in his petition) as giving him khas possession of the land in dispute. The petitioner, however, purchased the property in execution of a money-decree obtained in a Small Cause Court. At the time of the sale the opposite party filed an usufructuary mortgage-deed, dated the 8th November 1920, on the basis of which he alleged that he was in possession of the property. The fact was noted, and the petitioner purchased the property subject to the usufructuary mortgage. He could not possibly, therefore, obtain khas possession under the writ of the Civil Court, dated the 17th August 1921. Mr. Pal contends that inasmuch as he had obtained possession under O. XXI, r. 95, of the Code of Civil Procedure he must be deemed to have been put in [khas] possession of the land by the Civil Court. Assuming for the sake of argument that the writ of the Civil Court, dakhaldehani, purported to have been executed under O. XXI, r. 95, it cannot possibly have the effect of ousting the mortgagee whose rights were expressly declared and protested at the time of the sale. The writ of the delivery of possession upon which the whole contention of Mr. Pal is founded is of no avail to him, inasmuch as no actual possession of the land was delivered to his client. Mr. Pal then says that the dakhaldehani at least raised a bona fide dispute as to the possession of the property in question, which can only be enquired into in a proceeding under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. There is no substance in this contention. The petitioner purchased the property with full knowledge of the possession of the opposite party. His initial move in the matter by petitioning the Magistrate to take action under section 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure was obviously an attempt to obtain an order of the Magistrate with a view to interfere with the lawful possession of the opposite party. He must thank himself if the Magistrate finding that the opposite party, and not he, was in possession of the land, passed an order against him under section 144 restraining him from interfering with the possession of the opposite party. His claim for possession was, therefore, a mere pretence and with a view to interfere with the undoubted possession of the opposite party. There was, therefore, no dispute, not to speak of a bona fide dispute, as to the possession of the land in question. The case clearly comes within the observations made in the cases of Gouri Dutt v. Gobind Singh (2), Lukan Singh v. Fryag Singh (3), Jhaman Mahton v. Thakuri Mahton (4), Kali Pershad Gope v. Dhodhai Gope (5) and Nandkishore Sao v. Bikan Singh (6).

SHIB LAL SINGH v. KAMARUDDIN MANDAL.

In those cases it has been laid down that when one party is clearly in the wrong and threatens to usurp the rights of another, who is in actual possession of the land in dispute, the proper remedy is an order under sections 144 or 107 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. In such a case section 145 has no application inasmuch as there is no dispute as to the possession of land. The petitioner has, therefore, failed to show that the Magistrate's order was without jurisdiction. He has equally failed to show that there was any denial of a fair trial of the case. The order sheet of the Magistrate shows that he passed the order in question after having heard the parties and considered the documents produced by them. The finding of the Magistrate that the opposite party was in actual possession, and not the petitioner, is unimpeachable.

In this view it is unnecessary to decide as to whether in a bona fide dispute as to possession of the land the jurisdiction of the Magistrate under section 144 is ousted and that the only section applicable is section 145 of the Code. The point has been strenuously argued at the Bar and we have been invited to give our opinion. My learned brother, Mullick, J., has gone into this question. I would venture to give my own view on the point.

To me it appears that when in the course of a proceeding under section 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure the Magistrate finds that there is a bona fide dispute as to possession of a land likely to cause a breach of the peace he is bound to immediately take action under section 145. Chapter XII comprising that section is headed, "Disputes as to immoveable property."

The section says:—

"Whenever a District Magistrate...is satisfied from a Police report or other information that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists concerning any land or water or the boundaries thereof... .....he shall make an order in writing," and enquire into the fact of actual possession of the subject matter in dispute. The word "shall" is mandatory. Therefore, when the conditions laid down in the section, namely, (1) that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists, and (2) that the dispute is with respect to any land or water, the Magistrate is bound to take action under section 145 and to declare that the party found in possession shall be so maintained until evicted therefrom in due course of law, or if he is unable to decide which of the parties is in possession, to attach the subject matter under section 146. The object of section 145 is to provide effectively against a breach of the peace by making a permanent order regarding the possession of the parties.

Section 144 is a temporary measure which the Magistrate in his discretion may adopt for the immediate prevention, amongst others, of "a disturbance of the public tranquility, or a riot, or an affray." Now, the threatened breach of the peace may be in connection with land. In this sense the Magistrate may, in the first instance, pass an order under section 144 against both or any one of the parties threatening to commit a breach of the peace in connection with the possession of land. Therefore, the real question is not as to the power of the Magistrate in the first instance to issue an order under section 144 to prevent a breach of the peace concerning any land, but that what action the Magistrate ought to take after he comes to know at any stage of the proceeding under section 144 that the danger of a breach of the peace is due to a bona fide dispute and not a mere pretense as to the possession of land. The answer is that the Magistrate must then at once start an enquiry, under section 145 of the Code, either in continuation of the order passed under section 144 or in supersession thereof, inasmuch as the condition laid down for an enquiry under section 145 "that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists concerning any land," to quote the words of the section, will then have been satisfied. The section is imperative and enjoins upon the Magistrate to start an enquiry under that section whenever (directly) he "is satisfied from the Police report or otherwise, such as an enquiry under section 144, that a dispute (real and bona fide, and not a mere pretense) exists."

The Magistrate cannot refuse in such a case to initiate a proceeding under section 145, for in that case he will be refusing to exercise jurisdiction vested in him by law and shirking the duty enjoined upon him by the section; in such a case the retention of the order under section 144 must lead to an irreparable injury to one of the parties who must be in actual possession of the land by his possession being interfered with, though for a temporary period, for one of the objects of section 144 is to prevent an obstruction, annoyance or injury, etc, to "any person lawfully employed." There will then be obviously an improper use of section 144 and an abuse of the process of the Court, which my learned brother, Mullick, J., lays down as affording valid grounds to vacate an order of a Magistrate under section 144. Therefore, though the Magistrate may initiate a proceeding under section 144 and issue an order under that section in disputes concerning land, he will be justified in converting the proceeding into an enquiry under section 145 when he finds that there is a bona fide dispute concerning the possession of land. In this case the Magistrate was informed by the petitioner that there was a danger of a breach of the peace concerning the possession of the land in dispute. He issued notice and made an enquiry as to possession on the date fixed. He came to the conclusion that the opposite party was in undoubted possession of the land and there was no dispute as to possession of the land in question. He, therefore, properly made his order under section 144 as against the petitioner. If, on the other hand, he had upon the evidence placed before him by the parties come to the conclusion that there was a bona fide dispute as to the possession of the parties, then he was bound to start an enquiry under section 145 either in continuation of his order under section 144 or in supersession thereof, for section 145 is the only section under which an enquiry in such a case, i.e., where there is a danger of a breach of the peace concerning a dispute as to land, could be made. The continuance of the order under section 144, without forthwith instituting proceedings under section 145, as observed above, would then have been an improper use of section 144 and an abuse of the process of the Court and a refusal to exercise jurisdiction vested by Statute, and we would have directed the Magistrate to exercise his jurisdiction under section 145 of the Code. Section 144 is a larger and more general section than section 145. An order under that section can be made under various circumstances including a danger of a breach of the peace. Section 145 is of limited scope and applies only when there is a danger of a breach of the peace.

The former is discretionary; the latter is mandatory The latter provides for a thorough enquiry into the dispute as to possession of the parties which tends to a breach of the peace. Therefore, when the special condition of section 145 is fulfilled, section 144 then yields to section 145 in the same sense that when he finds that there is a real dispute tending to a breach of the peace the Magistrate is bound to institute a proceeding under section 145 and enquire into the possession of the parties irrespective of any order that he might have originally passed under section 144. This is a legal obligation cast upon the Magistrate under section 145.

I have carefully considered the authorities on the subject and particularly the language of sections 144 and 145, and the above appears to me to be the true scope and meaning of these sections. The language is clear and unambiguous. We have simply to interpret the sections as they are and cannot in any way limit or extend their scope on grounds of policy and other considerations which my learned brother, Mullick, J. rightly deprecates and which is not our function but that of the Legislature. In addition to the authorities already quoted, the following may also be referred to: Parkar Mahton v. Ram Khelwan (7), Kanis Amina v. Emperor (8), Tarapada Bhattacharji v. Emperor (9) and Joyanti Kumar Mookerjee v. J. B. Middleton (10).

The next question raised by Mr. Pal is as to power of the Magistrate under clause (4) of section 144 to rescind or alter any order made under clause (1) of the section by himself or any Magistrate subordinate to him or his predecessor-in-office. This question also does not really arise, for Mr. Pal did invoke the power of the Distrtiet Magistrate who refused to interfere with the order passed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate. He has come to this Court. We have, no doubt, jurisdiction to deal with the order of the Magistrate and to interfere or set it aside in case it was without jurisdiction or resulted in a denial of a fair trial. No doubt, we insist that a party should exhaust all his remedies in the Courts below before he comes to this Court. This only is a practice and a very desirable one; but there is no absolute bar in law to the party coming direct to us under section 107 of the Government of India Act when there is no right of appeal. Even if it was necessary that Mr. Pal should have gone to the District Magistrate, which he actually did, and the District Magistrate, whether for reasons good or bad, refused to interfere, I do not know why he has raised this question now. In ground No. 2 of his petition to this Court he has attacked the order of the District Magistarte of the 3rd of May as being without jurisdiction and has urged that "the learned District Magistrgte ought to have interfered under section 144, clause (4) of the Code of Criminal Prosedure even on the merits of the case," to use the exact wording of the petition; yet Mr. Pal curiously enough argues that the District Magistrate had no power to interfere with the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate inasmuch as the order was attacked as being without jurisdiction. Why Mr. Pal is anxious to limit the power of the District Magistrate is better known to himself, but the words in that section "rescind or alter" are wide enough to vest the District Magistrates mentioned in that clause with unlimited power to deal with an order passed under clause (1) of the section on the question of jurisdiction as well as upon the merits. Mr. Pal was trying to limit the meaning of the word "rescind" which it naturally bears. The word "rescind" literally means "re" again, "scindere" to cut off, to cut short, to remove. In the Imperial Dictionary the word "rescind" is said to bear the following meaning: "to abrogate, to revoke, to annul, to re-call, to reverse, to vacate, by the enacting authority or by superior authority; as to rescind a law, a resolution or a vote; to rescind an edict or decree, to rescind a judgment." This makes quite clear the sense in which the word has been used in clause (4) of section 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The Magistrate himself who passes an order under clause (1) of the section, or his superior authority can set aside or vacate the order when it is found to be void ab initio for want of jurisdiction, or is bad on merits or is rendered unnecessary by subsequent event, such as the danger of a breach of the peace ceasing or for any other cause. Under this clause the Magistrate, who issues an order under clause (1) in the first instance, often discharges or sets aside the same against both or one of the parties as the case may be, or alters by drawing up a proceeding under section 145 of the Code when he finds that the case is a fit one for an enquiry under that section. The clause, therefore, is not capable of bearing the limited meaning sought to be imposed upon it by Mr. Pal. I confess that I had not so clear a view of the clause when in the case of Madan Lal v. Fulchand Ram (11) I followed the view expressed in the case of Lala Gopal Nath Sahi v. Rai Bahadur Baldeo Das Birla, Criminal Revision No. 299 of 1919. The point arose only incidentally in that case and my attention was not drawn to the Full Bench decision of the Calcutta High Court in the case of Nabu Sardar v. Emperor (12) and the case of Mare Gowd, In re (12), where a similar clause in section 107 of the Code of Criminal Procedure has been interpreted to have a wide meaning. I, therefore, agree with the view of the learned Chief Justice and Mullick, J., on this point.

MADHO PATWARI—ACCUSED.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 21 (10), 24, 403, 405—"Wrongful loss"—"Wrongful gain"—Temporary wrongful loss or gain, meaning of—Criminal breach of trust, what constitutes—Patwari, whether "public servant."

Temporary wrongful loss and temporary wrongful gain are within the meaning of "wrongful loss" and "wrongful gain", contained in section 24 of the Penal Code. [p. 58, col. 1.]

Reading sections 403 and 405 of the Penal Code together, it is clear that criminal breach of trust is a species of criminal misappropriation, being a criminal misappropriation by a person entrusted with the property misappropriated, and as regards criminal misappropriation, a dishonest misappropriation for a time only is misappropriation. The same principle applies to temporary misappropriation [p. 15, cols. 1 & 2]

Emperor v. Tulsidas Chhaganlal, 8 Bom. L. R. 951; 5 Cr. L. J. 5, referred to.

Under section 158, Land Revenue Code, cesses can be collected as if they were land revenue, and as it is within the duties of a Patwari to collect land revenue and cesses due on land in his village he is a public servant within the meaning of section 21, clause (10) of the Penal Code. [p. 159, col. 1.]

Appeal from the judgment and finding of the Sessions Judge, Akola, in Criminal Appeal No. 289 of 1921, dated the 15th March 1922.

Mr. G. P. Dick, for the Appellant.

Messrs. A. V. Khare and D.T. Mangalmurti, for the Accused.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal under section 417, Criminal Procedure Code, made under the directions of the Local Government against the order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Akola, in appeal, acquitting Madhorao Patwari of the offences under section 409, Indian Penal Code, of which he had been convicted by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate.

Madhorao, or Madho son of Trimbak was Patwari of Kuram, a village on the Railway in Murtizapur Taluk. The charge against him was of three offences under section 409, Indian Penal Code. The first charge was that he collected Rs. 16-0-3 cesses and process-fee from Abdul Aziz on 21st August 1921 but failed to remit the money to the Treasury, and did not pay it until 20th October 1921 when he paid the money to the Tahsildar. The second charge relates to a sum of Rs. 9-5-9 collected from Mohammad Khan on 21st August, but not paid until 20th October when the money was paid to the Tahsildar. The third charge relates to a sum of Rs. 2-14-6 collected from Ismail Beg and paid by Madho to the Tahsildar on 20th October. This amount is said to have been collected from Ismail Beg about the 15th August. Madho admits that the amounts covered by the first two charges were collected by him on the 21st August, but as regards the money collected from Ismail Beg he says it was collected only a few days before he paid it to the Tahsildar. The Additional Sessions Judge finds that the accused did spend the money for his own use but that this action cannot be called dishonest. The learned Judge says: "I have read Exhibit P-12 and Exhibit P 13 and do not find anything therein to show that the accused admitted that he committed criminal breach of trust. In these letters he asked for mercy and in the first letter he begs to be excused till Dasera is over. He obviously suggested that he would pay up the amount after Dasera is over. Exhibit P 3 inquiry papers purport to contain statement of the accused before the Tahsildar. The statement is not formally proved and it cannot, therefore, be admitted in evidence but section 91 of the Evidense Act is no bar to admit Tahsildar's statement which proves appellant's admission to him with rerpect to having spent the money for his own use. Exhibits P-12 and P 13 would seem to suggest that the accused was in pecuniary difficulty and had probably spent the amount for his personal use, but they do not go to show that he had spent the amount for his own use dishonestly within the meaning of the term as defined in section 24, Indian Penal Code. There is nothing to show that he had a dishonest intention when he spent the money for his own use. He could, no doubt, retain the money realized with him for some time before depositing it in the Treasury. If he thus in the meantime spends the amount for his own use intending to make the deposit out of the money he may have or expect to get shortly after, it could not be said that he committed criminal breach of trust if he made the deposit in time. Similarly, if he for any reason was unable to get the money expected or to raise any expected loan for making the deposit and there occurred some delay could it be said that the offence of criminal breach of trust was committed. In my opinion no dishonest intention can be safely attributed to the appellant simply because he retained money for two months in the absence of any distinct act showing such intention and in the absence of any rule or order requiring him to pay the amount to the Patel or to deposit it in the Treasury within a specified period."

In other words, the Additional Sessions Judge has held that the accused did temporarily appropriate the money to his own use but that, as it is not proved that he intended to misappropriate the money permanently, his conduct was not dishonest and does not amount to criminal breach of trust. This is a most dangerous doctrine, and would excuse the theft of money if the thief intended or hoped to replace it. In appeal it is urged on behalf of the Local Government "that the view of the law laid down by the learned (Additional) Sessions Judge is wrong to the effect that if a person entrusted with money is in pecuniary difficulty and uses the trust money for himself, that is not using it dishonestly."

Within the meaning of section 24, Indian Penal Code, wrongful loss covers temporary wrongful loss, and wrongful gain covers temporary wrongful gain. As a matter of fact, the record of the proceedings before the Tahsildar is formally proved. The accused has distinctly admitted to the Tahsildar and in his letter to the Naib Tahsildar, Exhibit 14, which was written before he paid up the money to the Tahsildar, that he had spent the money which he was holding as trustee for the Local Board. If he had died before he refunded the money there would have been a total loss of the money to its rightful owner. If sections 403 and 405 of the Penal Code be read together, it will be seen that criminal breach of trust is a species of criminal misappropriation, being criminal misappropriation by a person entrusted with the property misappropriated, and as regards criminal misappropriation it is distinctly laid down that a dishonest misappropriation for a time only is misappropriation. The same principle applies to temporary misappropriation by a person entrusted with the property. In Emperor v. Tulsidas Chhaganlal (1) it has been held that the offence of criminal breach of trust is committed even when the act of the accused was to cause wrongful loss for a time only.

For the accused it is urged that mere delay in remitting money to the Treasury does not necessarily involve breach of trust, and rulings to that effect have been cited. These rulings refer to cases where the delay was put forward as the sole proof of dishonest intention, but in this case we have the clear admission that the accused used the money for his own expenses, which in itself amounts to dishonest use of the money. For the time the money was not available to its rightful owner It is, therefore, clear to me that as regards the money to which these admissions relate the accused Madho is guilty of the offence of criminal breach of trust. There is no doubt that the admissions cover the money referred to in the first two heads of the charge and the accused is guilty of criminal breach of trust as regards these sums. As regards the third head of the charge the circumstances are different. The money paid by Ismail Beg was for cesses of 1921-22, and the enquiry of the Naib-Tahsildar on 5th September was only as regards the arrears of cesses of 1920-21. The letter to the Naib Tahsildar Exhibit P.-12, did not relate to this item, the man who had paid this money was not examined by the Naib-Tahsildar and produced no receipt, and the Tahsildar on the 20th October made no enquiry about this item, and the admission to the Tahsildar did not refer to this amount. It was the accused who volunteered to the Tahsildar that he had collected this amount and not yet paid it in. Moreover, on carefully examining the evidence I am not satisfied that the money was paid to the accused before the date on which he admits it was paid. The money not being the arrear of the previous year the Naib-Tahsildar had not passed any special order regarding it, it was paid voluntarily by Ismail Beg, and as there is no written record of the date of collection, the receipt admittedly given by the accused being lost, I do not consider the evidence that it was paid long before the 20th October is convincing. I decline to interfere with the order of acquittal as regards this head of the charge.

The argument in the lower Appellate Court that the offence does not amount to criminal breach of trust by a public servant has not been repeated in this Court. The question is somewhat academical since the offence could be sufficiently punished under section 406, Indian Penal Code. But I have no doubt that the offence was committed by the accused in his capacity of a public servant. Cesses can, under the Land Revenue Code, section 158, be collected as if they were land revenue, and it is within the duties of a Patwari to collect land revenue and cesses due on land in his village. Under the tenth clause of section 21, Indian Penal Code, an officer whose duty it is to collect cesses is a public servant. Though it may not have been the express duty of the accused to collect cesses from people resident in his village for lands belonging to other village, yet under the orders of the Naib-Tahsildar the accused accepted this function and the person who paid him the cesses paid them to him in his capacity of a public servant. Moreover, and this is a point not noticed by the lower Courts, of the cesses collected by the accused the sum of Rs. 1-0-3 included in the second head of the charge, was cess due on land in the accused's own village. It may be noted that Exhibit P-14 refers to this item and the fact that this money was due for Kuram explains the fact that the letter does not refer to the other sums collected on the same date. It is explained in this Court, no doubt truly, that when writing Exhibit P-14 the accused forgot that the money collected from Mohammad Khan included cesses due for 1921 22 on land in Kuram.

All the circumstances mentioned in the judgment of the Additional Sessions Judge, though not grounds for acquittal, are grounds for holding that a very serious view need not be taken of the conduct of the accused. It is quite certain that he did not intend permanently to misappropriate the money. He had given receipts for it, and if he had been present on the 5th September and the Naib-Tahsildar had questioned him, he would have admitted having collected the money, and would probably have been able to raise the money just as he did on the 20th October when he paid it to the Tahsildar. The Tahsildar has not been carefully questioned, but it would appear that though the appellant had not the money with him when questioned by the Tahsildar, he produced it at the Railway Station before the Tahsildar left. The Magistrate's main reason for imposing so heavy a sentence as rigorous imprisonment for one year appears to have been his belief that the accused showed Abdul Aziz and Mohammad Khan as defaulters for the cesses of 1920 21 in the list said to have been given to the Naib-Tahsildar on 5th September. As the learned Standing Counsel admits, there is no evidence whatever that this was the case, and as the Additional Sessions Judge points out it is extremely unlikely that the accused would have shown them as defaulters on 5th September when he knew he had given them receipts on 21st August. But the occasion of the accused acting as he did was the irregular action of the Naib-Tahsildar, apparently approved by the Tahsildar, in throwing on the Patwari of Kuram the task of collecting cesses not due on lands in his village. The collection of such cesses was not within his regular duties, and the returns he had to render were not designed to cover such collections. There is no evidence, moreover, that between the 21st August and 20th October the accused made any remittances to the Treasury in which he omitted to include the cesses recovered from these two persons.

The duties of Patwaris are prescribed by Notification under the Patels and Patwaris Law and are to be found in Berar Revenue Book, Circular V. 4 (page 219, Berar Land Revenue Manual, Volume II). The wording of the rules is not very precise, but it seems to be meant that a Patwari has no responsibility for any work arising outside his circle. Naosal, the village for which the cesses in question (except Re. 1 0-3) were recovered, is not one of the accused's villages.

He was, therefore, not legally bound to recover these cesses.

Land revenue and cesses are recoverable under section 119, Berar Land Revenue Code, the rules being at pages 144 onwards of Volume I of the Berar Land Revenue Manual. Regular cases were stated for the recovery of the cesses in arrears for 1920-21, but though the Tahsildar says the records are complete, it is clear from the evidence of the Naib Tahsildar that the recoveries were made by "executive action," that is, the Potwari was ordered in writing (orders not produced) and verbally to recover the amounts without reference to the revenue cases and to the processes authorised by law. I am informed that this is a practice which is much too common in Berar.

The main object of this appeal has been effected by it being laid down that the view of the law taken by the Additional Sessions Judge is wrong and dangerous. A severe sentence is not in the circumstances called for, especially as the Patwari has lost his appointment. The accused has already suffered imprisonment under his sentence for one day. In addition to this he has been 47 days under arrest, 41 days before conviction and 6 days after appeal. I convict the accused, Madho, son of Trimbak, under section 409, Indian Penal Code, for the two offences contained in the first two heads of the charge, and sentence him to suffer the period of the imprisonment already undergone, viz., one day under each head, the sentences to run concurrently. He will also pay a fine of Rs. 25 under each of the first two heads of the charge, namely, Rs. 50 in all, or in default will suffer rigorous imprisonment for one month for each offence.

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Jurisdiction—Non-British subject retaining stolen property in Native State—Theft committed in British India—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 180, application of.

A non-British subject retaining property in a Native State, stolen from British India, is not amenable to the jurisdiction of British Courts, and section 180 of the Criminal Procedure Code does not confer any such jurisdiction on them.

Queen-Empress v. Kirpal Singh, 9 A. 523; A. W. N. (1887) 131; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 787, Samanda v. Empress, 22 P. R. 1888 Cr, Hazarmir v. Empress, 16 P. R. 1880 Cr. followed.

Petition, under section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of an order of the Sessions Judge, Jullundur, dated the 16th October 1919, modifying that of the Magistrate, First Class, Jullundur, dated the 29th September 1919.

Mr. Ghulam Rasul, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—In this case one Muhammad Hussain was prosecuted under section 457, Indian Penal Code, for an offense of house-breaking which took place in Jullundur District. The learned Sessions Judge considered that no offense of house-breaking was made out but that the accused was guilty of an offence under section 411. The applicant is a subject of the Kapurthala State and the stolen property was found in his possession in that State. He has applied for revision of the order of the Sessions Judge on the ground that the British Courts had no jurisdiction.

The Sessions Judge was of opinion that section 180 of the Criminal Procedure Code conferred such jurisdiction. I can, however, find no authority in support of the view that a non-British subject retaining stolen property in a Native State is amenable to British Courts. There are many clear authorities to the contrary, namely, Queen-Empress v. Kirpal Singh (1), Samanda v. Empress (2) and Hazarmir v. Empress (3).

On these authorities I am compelled to hold that the Jullundur Courts had no jurisdiction and accept the application and acquit the accused.

Abwab—Stipulation for delivery of ghee and goat contained in mourasi mokurrari kabuliyat, if enforceable—"Goat and ghee" forming no part of the rent payable—Bengal Putni Taluks Regulation (VIII of 1819*)*, s. 3—"Engagements," meaning of.

A registered mourasi mokurrari kabuliyat executed in 1877 recited that "within the aforesaid Mouza you have granted me a potta of 12 bighas of land at an annual jama of Rs. 6 and Rs. 24 as premium," and after reciting how the money should be paid and in what instalments, the kabuliyat stated that the landlord should have right to the minerals, etc, and lastly there was the following clause:—"Also it should appear that I would deliver 1 seer of Shyama ghee and one kid every year." Held, (on the assumption that Regulation VIII of 1819 controlled all the incidents of the tenure in question) that the stipulation regarding the ghee and goat was, in its term and effect, the imposition of an abwab and as such not enforceable. [p. 164, col. 2.]

That the "goat and ghee" did not form part of the rent and the stipulation regarding delivery thereof was not legalised by Regulation VIII of 1819, but was subject to the law relating to 'abwabs' in force at the time of the creation of the lease. [p. 163, col. 2.]

The word "engagements" mentioned in section 3 of the Bengal Putni Taluks Regulation connotes engagements as to rent and other terms connected therewith. [p. 163, col. 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Assansole, Burdwan, dated the 13th of January 1920, affirming that of the Munsif, Assansole, dated the 5th of December 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Pyari Mohan Chatterjee, for the Appellants.—The plaintiffs are the appellants. The appeal arises out of a suit for a rent. Both Courts have given a partial decree. The suit was brought on the basis of a mourasi mokurrari kabuliyat of the year 1877. Rent was fixed at an annual jama of Rs. 6 and also the tenant agreed to pay that he would deliver 1 seer of ghee and one kid every year.

I submit the ghee and the goat are not abwabs but are part of the consideration for which the lease was granted. The tenancy is governed by section 3 of Regulation VIII of 1819 as we are putnidars. The lease was created before the Bengal Tenancy Act came into being. Therefore, although section 179 of that Act does not apply, still our position is the same even if the ghee and the goat be considered abwabs. We would be entitled to them. Section 3 of the Putni Regulation makes all engagements between a putnidar and his lessees on whatever terms, binding on the parties. Refers to Ebbs v. Boulnois (1). Section 3 of the Putni Regulation creates an exception to the general rule against abwabs. Refers to Assanulla Khan Bahadur v. Tarthabashini (2), Krishna Chandra Sen v. Sushila Soondury Dassee (3).

Babu Kanai Lal Shaha, for the Respondent.—The stipulation for the payment of ghee and goat are clearly illegal. I submit all impositions upon all classes of tenants, including a permanent tenure-holder, in excess of the specified rent are illegal. Payments over and above the actual rent fixed are abwabs. Refers to Aparna Charan Ghose v. Karam Ali (4), Tilukhdari Singh v. Chulhan Mahton (5), Radha Prosad Singh v. Bal Kowar Koeri (6).

As regards their second point I submit the case is not governed by section 3 of the Putni Regulation but by section 3 of Regulation V of 1812. The plaintiffs have not proved their status as putnidars. Refers to Beejoy Singh v. Krishna Behari Biswas (7). The Legislature clearly did not intend that the Putni Regulation should restrict the application of the general law of abwabs as laid down in section 3 of Regulation V of 1812. I submit the appeal ought to be dismissed.

RAM TARAN TEWARY v. KUMEDA DASI.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this appeal are these.

The plaintiffs sued to recover arrears of rent for the years 1321 to 1324 B. S. with cesses and damages on a registered mauras mokurrari kabuliyat executed in 1877.

The lease recites that "within the aforesaid Mouza you have granted me a patta of 12 bighas of land at an annual jama of Rs 6 and Rs. 24 as premium." After reciting how the money should be paid and in what instalments, the lease states that the landlord should have right to the minerals, etc., and, lastly, the words appear: "Also it should appear that I would deliver 1 seer of shyama ghee and one kid every year." No amount is mentioned as payable in lieu of the ghee and goat in case of default.

The Trial Court held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover rent at the rate of Rs. 6 per annum and that he was not entitled to recover the ghee and the goat.

This finding was upheld by the Appellate Court on the ground that the ghee and goat are not mentioned as part of the rent.

The plaintiffs have appealed.

They contend that the ghee and goat are part of the consideration for which the lease is granted and are not abwabs. They argue that they are patnidars and so the tenancy is governed by terms of section 3 of Regulation VIII of 1819 and that, therefore, though section 179 of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not help them, because the lease was created before the passing of the Tenancy Act, still their position under the Putni Regulation is the same as it would be under the Tenancy Act. So that, even if it be considered as an abwab and not part of the rent, they are still entitled to get it.

The respondent contends that the case is not governed by section 3 of the Regulation referred to but by section 3 of Regulation V of 1812 and that there is nothing to show that the plaintiffs are putnidars. With regard to the last objection of the respondent it appears that in the plaint the plaintiffs describe themselves as putnidars which averment has not been traversed in the written statement. We, therefore, accept the plaintiffs' statement that they are putnidars and proceed to determine the case on that basis.

A number of cases have been cited at the Bar, of which we will notice the following:—

In the case of Krishna Chandra Sen v. Sushila Soondury Dassee (3), it was held that, even if the imposition were an abwab still it was recoverable. This case was governed by the Bengal Tenancy Act and it was held that section 74 did not control section 179 of the Act. This case has no application to the present case.

The next case we have been referred to is the case of Aparna Charan Ghose v. Karam Ali (4). This was a case of a permanent tenancy created by a lease dated 1260. In that case it was held that section 10 of Act X of 1859 or section 3 of Regulation V of 1812 made all impositions upon all classes of tenants, including a permanent tenure-holder, in excess of the specified rent illegal.

The next case to be considered is the case of Tilukhdari Singh v. Chuthan Mahton (5), a decision of the Privy Council. In that case it was decided that payments over and above the rent were abwabs and could not be recovered. The Judicial Committee do not seem to make any distinction between what was arbitrary or uncertain and what was not.

This case was discussed in the case of Radha Prosad Singh v. Bal Kowar Koeri (6), and Sir Comer Petheram, C. J., (page 740*), considered that the meaning of section 74 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was that no imposition under any name whatever shall be recovered from the tenant for or in respect of the occupation or tenure beyond the sum fixed for rent. O'Kinealy, J., in considering the meanig of the expression "abwab," states: (page 745*) "this, too, I think, is the sense in which abwabs were considered as arbitrary or indefinite in the old Regulations —arbitrary, in the sense they were unauthorized by law,—indefinite, in the sense that, though levied in a certain proportion to and upon the original assessment,...there was no definite rule guiding the Zemindar in fixing the proportion they bore to the produce of the land."

All these cases discussed and determined the law relating to abwabs and illegal taxations and are of not much help to us in the consideration of the question of the correct interpretation of section 3 of Regulation VIII of 1819 with reference to the law then in force prohibiting illegal impositions.

We may note that when the lease in the present case was created, i.e., in 1877, the law relating to illegal impositions was contained in sections 54 and 55 of Regulation VIII of 1793, section 3 of Regulation V of 1812, section 10 of Act X of 1859 and section 11 of Bengal Act III of 1869.

The appellants submit that the second clause of section 3 of the Patni Regulation overrides all previous prohibitions against such imposition and makes all engagement between a putnidar and his lessees, on whatever terms, binding on the parties to the same and hence even the stipulation regarding the payment of abwabs is enforceable as against the latter, being one of the terms on which the lands are let out. It is contended, on the principle that a special provision qualifies a general one [Ebbs v. Boulnois (1)], that this clause by its general terms abrogated all previous restrictions as to abwabs so far as relating to putni tenures. We may mention here that it is not seriously contended, in view of the clause imposing the delivery of the goat and ghee standing so completely isolated from the terms relating to the rent proper, its mode of payment and the penalty attaching to non payment, and appearing in the lease by way of post script as it were, that the goat and ghee are part of the rent as such, payable in respect of the demised premises, but it is urged that being part of the consideration of letting such stipulation is enforceable by virtue of the second clause of section 3 of Regulation VIII of 1819.

Regulation VIII of 1819 was enacted to govern a class of tenures known as putni taluks, the nature of which the preamble to the Regulation describes in these terms: "The character of which tenure is that it is a taluk created by the Zamindar, to be held at a rent fixed in perpetuity by the lessee and his heirs for ever." Section 2 of the Regulation validates leases fixing rent in perpetuity though in contravention of the provisions of Regulation XLIV, 1793. This is followed by section 3 which confers on the Zamindar and the putnidar the right of letting and under-letting on any terms. Clause 1 of the section recognizes the validity of "the terms of the engagements" between the Zamindar and the putnidar and clause 2 makes any engagements between the putnidar and his sub-lessee binding on both parties. Section 8 of the Regulation authorises the Zamindar to bring the taluk to sale for "any arrear of rent." There is no provision in the Regulation for enforcing any "terms of engagement" other than the payment of rent. Reading the Regulation as a whole, and considering its policy and scheme, it seems to us that the "engagements" mentioned in section 3 of the Regulation connotes engagements as to rent and other terms connected therewith. If the "goat and ghee" mentioned in the lease under consideration is not part of rent, as we hold it is not, the stipulation regarding delivery thereof is not legalized by Regulation VIII of 1819 but is subject to the law relating to "abwabs" in force at the time of the creation of the lease. It is hardly necessary to observe that if the above articles are not to be considered rent or part of the rent reserved by the lease, they are abwab or illegal cess.

The question as to whether section 3 of the Patni Regulation creates an exception to the general rule against abwabs as enunciated by Regulation V of 1812 and other enactments has not been yet directly raised in this Court. The reason for it may be that the answer to it was deemed too obvious for serious consideration. There have been cases in this Court in which the question whether certain impositions in a putni lease were abwab or not came up for consideration and was elaborately discussed. It will suffice to notice two of them.

In the case of Assanulla Khan Bahadur v. Tirthabashini (2) the question was whether chaukidari tax payable by the putnidar under the Patni Settlement is an illegal cess. After a careful review of various enactments relating to abwabs and the case-law on the point, it was held by Macpherson and Banerjee, JJ., that as chaukidari tax was part of the ground rent quite as much as the actual rent, it was not an abwab and was, therefore, recoverable. At page 633* of the Report their Lordships remark as follows:—"A stipulation for the payment of such an amount cannot, we think, be regarded as one for the 'imposition of an arbitrary or indefinite cess' within the meaning of section 3 of Regulation V of 1812, or for an imposition 'under the denomination of abwab mathaut or other like appellation in addition to the actual rent' within the meaning of section 74 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, for this simple reason, that the imposition here depends primarily, not upon the will of the Zemindar, but upon law of the land (Bengal Act VI of 1870). It is this Act which imposes the liability on the Zemindar, and the Zemindar merely stipulates with the putnidar when granting the putni that the latter should, among other sums, regularly pay him the amount levied from him under the Act." These observations clearly indicate that, had the imposition been one dependent upon the will of the Zemindar it would have been an imposition of an arbitrary or indefinite cess illegalised by Regulation V of 1812. It was not contended there that that Regulation was superseded by the Putni Regulation.

The next case demanding reference is the case of Bejoy Singh v. Krishna Behari Biswas (7). In that case the tenant, in the kabuliyat which was in respect of a putni tenure executed in the year 1882, stipulated to pay a sum of Rs. 15 every year in the month of Bhadra as the mamuli (usual) for the Iswar Thakur. This covenant was contained in a clause separate from that stipulating the yearly rent. The question was whether this sum of Rs. 15 was an abwab and irrecoverable. The Court held that this sum was not intended to be part of the consideration for the use and occupation of the land or as part of the rent and being an abwab was irrecoverable. As appears from the judgment of the Chief Justice it was agreed by both sides that the matter was governed by section 3 of Regulation V of 1812. Chatterjee, J., in a considered judgment in that case, held that the sum of Rs. 15 mentioned in the kabuliyat did not form part of the consideration for the lease, and even if it did, it did not form part of the rent. This observation affords an answer to the contention of the appellants before us that the stipulation for the delivery of the goat and ghee is a part of the consideration though not of rent.

Subsequent to Regulation VIII of 1819 the law against illegal cesses was re-enacted, though in indirect terms by section 10, Act X of 1859 and section 11, Bengal Act VIII of 1869. Both these Acts were of general application and having made no reservation in cases of Putni Settlements, there is no reason for holding that they did not apply to tenures or holdings created under the Putni Regulation. These enactments furnish ample ground to strengthen the supposition that the Legislature did not intend that the Putni Regulation should restrict the application of the general law against abwabs as embodied in section 3 of Regulation V of 1812. Even if it were otherwise, the provisions of Act X of 1859 and Act VIII of 1869, Bengal Council, which were applicable to permanent leases [Aparna Charan Ghose v. Karam Ali (4)] would govern section 3 of the Putni Regulation.

It is to be understood that we have proceeded on the assumption that Regulation VIII of 1819 controls all the incidents of the tenure in question, a point which, in view of the interpretation we put on the law, we have considered unnecessary to discuss.

For the reasons above, we hold that the stipulation regarding the ghee and goat is, in its term and effect, the imposition of an abwab and as such not enforceable.

The result is, that this appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Hindu Law—Widow—Mortgage—Legal necessity—Necessity for particular rate of interest and terms—Onus—Redemption postponed for long period—Reversioners of widow's husband, if bound—Suit before expiry of period, if competent.

In case of a mortgage made by a Hindu widow of her deceased husband's immoveable property, it is incumbent on the mortgagee to show not only that there was a necessity to borrow but also that it was not unreasonable to borrow at some such high rate and upon such terms, and if this is not shown, the rate and terms would not stand, even though the charge might be upheld. [p. 166, col. 2; p. 167, col. 1.]

Where in a mortgage executed by a widow the terms and conditions are such as to postpone redemption for an unduly long period without any corresponding advantage to the mortgagor and in fact to render redemption practically impossible, they are clearly oppressive and unreasonable, intended more to fetter the right of redemption than to secure any advantage to the mortgagor and a reversioner of widow's husband is not bound by them and can bring a redemption suit before the expiry of the stipulated period. JUDGMENT.—The dispute in this appeal relates to a two-annas share of the village Raipur, which belonged to Sheo Singh. On the 27th June 1883 Sheo Singh and his brother, Madho Singh, mortgaged their four-annas share of the village Raipur and one-anna share of the village Phulpur in favour of Jawahir Singh for Rs. 1,800, which was repayable with interest at 1 per cent. per mensem within ten years. It was agreed that, if the interest actually accruing due was not paid at the end of every year or if the entire money due on the mortgage was not re-paid within ten years, the mortgagee would be entitled to obtain possession of the mortgaged property (Exhibit 1). Sheo Singh subsequently died and was succeeded by his widow, Musammat Bitana. Musammat Bitana and Madho Singh paid up a portion of the money due on the mortgage by a sale of their share in the village Phulpur (Exhibit A 2). A sum of Rs. 900 still remained due by them, for the satisfaction of which they executed a fresh deed of mortgage in favour of Jawahir Singh on the 15th July 1890, mortgaging a one-anna share of the village Raipur and agreeing to re-pay the same with interest at 1 per cent. per mensem within two years and in case of failure to deliver possession of the mortgaged property (Exhibit 2).

On 5th December 1896 Madho Singh executed a fresh mortgage-deed in favour of Jawahir Singh about his half share of the money due on the above mortgage (Exhibit 3). Jawahir Singh sued Musammat Bitana for the remainder of the money due on that mortgage and obtained a decree on the 12th December 1898 for the sale of a six-pies share of the village Raipur (Exhibit 4). The amount due on that decree was Rs. 1,268-4-0. On the 15th June 1899 Musammat Bitana executed a deed of mortgage in favour of her brother, Kali Singh, for Rs. 1,300 to pay up the money due on account of the said decree (Exhibit A-3). In that mortgage-deed she mortgaged her entire two-annas share in the village Raipur. The effect of this mortgage was that the six-pies share of the village Raipur, which was liable to sale in execution of the above decree, was saved from sale at the expense of the entire two-annas share hypothecated in the new mortgage. Another result of this transaction was that the mortgaged property became liable for the payment of interest at Rs. 1-8-0 per cent. per mensem, compoundable half-yearly in lieu of the rate originally payable to Jawahir Singh. The amount due on that mortgage swelled up to Rs. 5,186-11-5 within a few years. In order to re pay that amount Musammat Bitana executed a fresh mortgage in favour of her brother Kali Singh on the 22nd June 1907, agreeing to deliver possession over a two-annas share of the village Raipur in lieu of interest on Rs. 3,000 and to pay interest on the remaining Rs. 2,255, which included some small amount received by her in cash, at 1 per cent. per mensem, compoundable yearly (Exhibit A-4). By virtue of this mortgage she agreed to allow the mortgagee to remain in possession of the mortgaged property for 40 years and undertook to redeem the mortgage after the expiry of that period on the last day of Jeth or in default to forego her equity of redemption and permit the mortgage to operate as a sale. In 1909 Kali Singh filed a suit for the recovery of possession of the mortgaged property and obtained a decree, in execution of which he got possession.

Musammat Bitana died on the 5th November 1920. The present suit was thereupon filed by the plaintiffs, who claim to be the nearest reversionary heirs of Sheo Singh, for possession of the mortgaged property on the ground that the mortgage in question was made without any legal necessity and was not binding on them. They further averred that the conditions entered in the mortgage-deed were unreasonable and oppressive.

The Court below found that there was a legal necessity for the mortgage to the extent of Rs. 3,250, representing the debt due to Jawahir Singh, with interest thereon on such debt at 1 per cent. per mensem, compoundable yearly. It, however, dismissed the claim on the ground that the terms and conditions entered in the mortgage-deed were fair and reasonable and binding on the plaintiffs and that the suit for possession of the mortgaged property was premature. The right of the plaintiffs to succeed Musammat Bitana as the nearest reversionary heir of her husband was found in their favour and the correctness of that finding is not challenged here.

The first question for consideration in this appeal is, whether the finding of the Court below on the question of legal necessity was correct. There can be no question that Musammat Bitana was liable for Rs. 1,268 4 0 to Jawahir Singh under the decree obtained by him on the 12th December 1898 (Exhibit 4). That decree represented a debt which was originally due by her husband and had been renewed from time to time after his death by his widow. There can also be no question that Musammat Bitana was not in a position to re-pay that debt except perhaps by the sale of the whole or a portion of the property hypothecated in that decree. In order to re-pay that debt she mortgaged the entire two-annas share in favour of her brother for Rs. 1,300 and undertook to pay interest at 1-8-0 per cent. per mensem, compoundable half-yearly. Madho Singh had managed to pay the money due to Jawahir Singh by executing another mortgage on the 5th December 1896, by which interest at only 6 per cent. per annum was payable (Exhibit 3). It cannot be said that Musammat Bitana could not have obtained a loan on similar terms from Jawahir Singh. At all events, there was no necessity for her to have mortgaged the entire two annas share, much less for agreeing to pay interest at 1-8 0 per cent. per mensem, compoundable half-yearly, in lieu of 1 per cent. per mensem, which the mortgage of Jawahir Singh originally bore. It might equally have been possible for her to have obtained the required money by a sale of the six-pies share or by a possessory mortgage of that share, so that the remaining share might have remained unincumbered. She made no effort to pay the interest which accrued due on that mortgage, although she was in possession of the entire two-annas share which yielded, according to the Court below, a net profit of Rs. 127 a year. It is possible that she might have needed that amount for her maintenance in addition to the sir land in her cultivation, but she had in any case no justification for making a fresh mortgage of a two annas share on the 27th June 1907 for Rs. 5,255 on terms which were still more onerous. By virtue of that mortgage she agreed to her brother remaining in possession of the mortgaged property for forty years certain, knowing full well that she could not expect to remain alive for such a long period and that she would be succeeded by persons who would not be bound by her acts, unless they were justified by legal necessity. She further agreed to restrict her right of redemption to one particular day in the month of Jeth in one particular year and to forego her right of redemption, if she failed to exercise that right on that particular day. As pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Nabakishore Mandal v. Upendrakishore Mandal (1), a person who deals with a Hindu widow, having a limited estate, is bound to establish the facts, which justified the transactions under which he claims. In the case of a mortgage made by the manager of a joint Hindu family, it was held in Nawab Nazir Begam v. Rao Raghunath Singh (2) that it was incumbent on the mortgagee to show not only that there was a necessity to borrow but also that it was not unreasonable to borrow at some such high rate and upon such terms, and that if this was not shown, the rate and terms would not stand, even though the charge might be upheld. The same principle applies to dealings with Hindu widows having a limited interest. A mortgage may be wholly or in part necessary and yet the terms and conditions entered therein may be unreasonable and oppressive, and the reversioners may not be bound by them. Such is the case here. The mortgage was executed by the lady in favour of her brother and the terms and conditions, which the mortgagee got the lady to agree to, were such as to postpone redemption for an unduly long period without any corresponding advantage to the mortgagor and in fact to render redemption practically impossible. The terms were clearly oppressive and unreasonable, intended more to fetter the right of redemption than to secure any advantage to the mortgagor, and the plaintiffs are not bound by them.

The only other question for consideration is, whether in view of these facts the plaintiffs should be allowed to avoid the mortgage by paying such money as was really taken for legal necessity. Out of Rs. 5,255 the amount taken for legal necessity, as found by the Court below was Rs. 3,250. The mortgagee has been in possession of the mortgaged property. He was given possession in lieu of Rs. 3,000 at 1 per cent. per mensem compoundable yearly till the date of suit. The covenant postponing redemption for 40 years being oppressive and unreasonable is not enforceable as against the plaintiffs. The suit is not premature.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed and the claim of the plaintiffs decreed for possession of the disputed property subject to the payment of Rs. 3,000, in lieu of which the mortgagee is in possession, and another sum of Rs. 250 with interest thereon at 1 per cent. per mensem compoundable yearly, from the 27th June 1907 to the date of the suit within six months from this date. The latter portion of the decree will carry simple interest thereafter at 1 per cent. per mensem, till payment. In case of non payment the suit will stand dismissed. The defendant-respondent will get two-thirds of his costs here and hitherto from the plaintiffs appellants, who will bear their own costs throughout.

CIVIL REVISION PETITIONS NOS. 859, 860 AND 439 OF 1921.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115, O. XIV, r. 2, O. XV, r. 3 (1)—Selection of preliminary issues for determination—Interlocutory order—Revision—High Court, interference by—Amendment of plaint not changing character of suit, if to be allowed.

A Court has power to select issues of law for determination as preliminary issues even after the date of the first hearing, specially when nothing is done in the suit beyond the settlement of issues and there has not been an actual first hearing [p. 169, col 1: p. 70, col. 2.]

Kuarmani Singha v. Wasif Ali, 28 Ind. Cas. 818; 19 C W N. 1193, referred to.

As a general rule, the High Court does not in revision interfere with interlocutory orders But no hard and fast rule can be laid down as interference may be justified when the order sought to be revised is in fact perverse or irreparable injury would be caused if the order were allowed to stand [p. 170, col 2.]

The mere fact that an interlocutory order may possibly result in inconvenience and expense to a party to the suit is not a sufficient ground for interference by the High Court in revision. [p 171, col. 1.]

A Court has discretion to allow an amendment of plaint and the High Court will not interfere in revision where the amendment does not change the nature of the suit or involve any material injustice to the defendant [p. 172, col. 1.]

Petitionr, under section 115 of Act V of 1908, and section 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise the orders of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Mayavaram, dated the 12th of November 1921, the 29th of November 1921 and 25th of February 1921 in Interlocutory Application No. 88 of 1921, respsetively, in Original Suit No. 56 of 1920.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Iyer, for the Petitioner.—These petitions are against the orders passed by the Subordinate Judge in a pending suit, to the effect that certain Issues Nos. 3, 4 and 9 should be tried first as preliminary issues. These orders are irregularly made without jurisdiction and if those issues are tried first, that will seriously prejudice me. Order XIV, r. 2 and O. XV, r. 3 (1) deal with trial "on preliminary issues," Order XIV, r. 2, clearly applies only when the Court thinks on settlement of issues there are questions of law upon which the case could be disposed of. Order XV, r. 3 (1) applies after issues on the first hearing. So after that day is passed, the Court has no power to select issues of law as preliminary issues for determination vide Yatindra Nath v. Hari Charan (1), a case of the Calcutta High Court. Secondly, these orders were passed without hearing my Vakil in the lower Court. And lastly if those issues are tried first, I shall suffer serious injury. Issues Nos. 1 and 5 are as preliminary as the other issues. They also should have been selected. My next submission is that the trial of this suit cannot go on, until Original Suit No. 8 of 1917 is disposed of. Section 10 of Civil Procedure Code is a bar to the trial of this suit. Vide Wahid-un nissa Bibi v. Zamin Ali Shah (2) and Sivaprosad Ram v. Tricomdas (3).

Mr. T. R. Venkatarama Sastri, for the Respondent.—This Court has no jurisdiction to interfere with interlocutory orders Nizam of Hyderabad, In re (4) and Ohinnu v. Sambanda Moorthi (5). Where there is an appeal against the decree where the aggrieved party could attack the orders, no revision lies against them, Buddhoo Lal v. Mewa Ram (6), Ventala Verrarazu v. Kuruvela Subbarayudu (7). Secondly, even if your Lordship has power to interfere, only in exceptional circumstances, should that power be exercised. There are no such circumstances in the present case.

As to the bar of section 10 of Civil Procedure Code, the second suit here is not between the same parties as to attract the provisions of section 10. Sultanat Jahan Begam v. Sundar Lal (8), Penumarti Vasantarayadu v. Reddi Subbamma (9).

Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Iyer, in reply.—This Court has jurisdiction to interfere with interlocutory orders if irreparable injury will result by non-interference. Yatindra Nath v. Hari Charan (1), Sitaramayya v. Ramappayya (10), Venkatachallam Pattar v. Parasu Pattar (11), Vuppuluri Atchayya v. Sri Seetharamachandra (12).

JUDGMENT.

C. R. Ps. Nos. 859 AND 860 OF 1921.

These civil revision petitions relate to two orders passed by the Subordinate Judge of Mayavaram, dated, respectively, 12th November 1921 and 29th November 1921, which run as follows:—

"It is argued on behalf of the plaintiff that Issues Nos. 3, 4 and 9 being preliminary Issues should be tried first. The case was being posted along with Original Suit No. 8 of 1917 on the belief that the parties in this suit will agree to the evidence recorded in Original Suit No. 8 of 1917 being treated as evidence in this suit also. But the learned Vakil for the plaintiff in this suit urges that on the pleadings without any further evidence being let in he is prepared to substantiate his case as against the defendant on Issues Nos. 3, 4 and 9 and I cannot say that he had no right so to contend.

"The suit is posted for argument on Issues Nos. 3, 4 and 9 to 1st December.

"NOTE:—The plaintiff's Vakil states that he does not give up thereby the other issues."

and 2. "This is opposed by plaintiff. The suit is posted for preliminary argument to 1st December after consideration. I see no reason to reconsider my order already passed. Rejected."

The suit in which they were passed is Original Suit No. 56 of 1920 and is brought by the plaintiff, a son, against his father, for the recovery of certain land which had come to the latter under a so-called "deed of indenture" dated 11th May 1905. This deed was made between one Tirunarayana Pillai and the present petitioner and recites that Tirunarayana had become entitled to certain properties as reversionary heir of one Venkatakrishna Pillai on the death of the latter's mother in 1905; that plaintiff (herein) contended that the mother of Venkatakrishna Pillai had adopted him, which adoption was admittedly not valid as no authority had been given by the sapindas. The father took possession of the properties given by the indenture on behalf of his son. In 1906 the father discovered that Tirunarayana was not an heir of the deceased Venkatakrishna Pillai at all and he thereupon instituted a Suit No. 8 of 1917 for, inter alia, setting aside the deed of indenture as having been executed by him owing to the fraud of Tirunarayana This suit has been partly heard but according to the note of the Subordinate Judge it has been adjourned from time to time along with the present suit and on 4th October 1921 an order was passed adjourning Original Suit No. 56 of 1920 to 1st November 1921 for arguments and orders whether this is to go with Original Suit No. 8 of 1917 or to be tried separately. The order was passed on 12th November 1921 and is one of those now sought to be revised. There has been a very full argument before me on both sides and the complaint of the defendant (father) in the suit is that not only was the order irregularly made but the action of the Subordinate Judge in directing Issues Nos. 3, 4 and 9 to be tried as preliminary issues will seriously prejudice him. The issues in question are as follows:—

"3. Whether the defendant is entitled to rely upon any such possession even after the deed of indenture dated 11th May 1905 and whether the defendant is not estopped from setting up such possession in his own right as against the plaintiff?

"4. Whether the defendant is estopped from setting up a title to the properties in himself by reason of the indenture?

"9. Whether the plaintiff has acquired a title by prescription by the properties having been held by his guardian on his behalf for over 12 years?"

Mr. Ramachandra Iyer for defendant complains that Issues Nos. 1 and 5 have been omitted, these being in character quite as preliminary as those selected by the Subordinate Judge.

The power to order trial on preliminary issues is contained in O. XIV, r. 2 and O. XV, r. 3 (1). Order XIV, r. 2 clearly applies when on settlement of issues the Court thinks there are issues of law upon which the case or some part thereof may be disposed of, then those issues are to be tried first and settlement of issues of fact may be postponed.

O. XV, r. 3 (1) applies after issues have been framed and allows the Court to determine issues of law, if satisfied that no further argument or evidence than the parties can at once adduce is required upon such of the issues as may be sufficient for the decision of the suit. If, however, the finding on those is not sufficient for decision, the Court shall postpone further hearing of the suit. Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Iyer argues that the former rule is prior to issues, the latter applies to the first hearing only and when that day is passed, the Court has no power to select issues of law for determination as preliminary issues. Reliance is placed on a judgment of Mr. Justice Mookerjee in Yatindra Nath v. Hari Charan (1), which held that an application to try certain issues first which was made long after the date for first hearing took it out of the application of O. XV, r. 3. As against this there was the ruling in Kuarmani Singha v. Wasif Ali (13), which lays down that O. XIV, r. 2 may be applied also when the settlement of issues of fact have not been postponed. I may add that, in my opinion, there is no reason that I can see to confine the application to try certain issues as questions of law to the date of first hearing, and especially to insist on that rule in the case of adjourned hearings, for it is common ground that only issues have been settled in this suit and the orders now sought to be revised made and there has been no actual first hearing so far. The question really is, (1). Can I interfere? (2). If I can, ought I to do so under the circumstances of the present case? As to (1) the older view here is expressed by Muttusami Iyear, J. in Nizam of Hyderabad, In re (4) and was against interference with interlocutory orders. See also Chinnu v. Sambanda Moorthi (5) which, however, excepted a wanton abuse of the powers of the Court. In Yatindra Nath v. Hari Charan (9) it was said that Court could interfere in very exceptional cases. In Sitaramayya v. Ramappaya (10) it was held that the Court can interfere if manifest injustice would otherwise be done; the question being one of jurisdiction, and the fact that there is a final appeal would not prevent interference. Here, as pointed out by Mr. Venkatarama Sastri, the question was the addition of a party and the matter was actually one of jurisdiction. In Venkatachalam Pattar v. Parasu Pattar (11) it was held that there might be interference for perversity, i.e., conscious deviation from rules of law or procedure. British India Steam Navigation Co. v. Secretary of State for India (14), Amjad Ali v. Ali Hussain (15), Khirode Chandra Ghoshal v. Saroda Prosad (16), Charu Chandra Dutt v. Sarat Chandra Singh (17) are a series of cases to all of which Mookerjee, J., was a party. The first of these cases lays down that the High Court is competent to set matters right when an interlocutory order has been made without jurisdiction or under such circumstances as are likely to cause irreparable injury to one of the litigants. In the second case the same test of irreparable injury is applied. In the third and fourth cases the jurisdiction of the High Court to interfere with the interlocutory order is affirmed, if such interference is necessary in the interests of justice. In Vuppuluri Atchayya v. Sri Seetharamachandra (12) the Munsif had returned a plaint on the ground that a Civil Court had no jurisdiction. On appeal the Subordinate Judge restored the suit to the Munsif's file. Held in revision by the majority, that the High Court could interfere under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure as the Appellate Court had erroneously decided in the exercise of its jurisdiction as an Appellate Court that Munsif had or had not jurisdiction. I doubt if this has any application to the facts of the present case. Wallis, C. J., based his decision on the third part of section 115 while Sundara Iyer, J., based his on the first. In Buddhoo Lal v. Mewa Ram (6) the majority of the Full Bench held that where one of several issues in a suit had been decided and there was a remedy by appeal no revision lay as there was no case within section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure and in Kumar Chandra Kishore Roy v. Basat Ali (18) the majority of the Calcutta High Court held that the Court cannot, by exercising its powers under section 15 of the Charter Act interfere with a decision of a Subordinate Court from which no appeal or revision under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure lies to High Court.

I have purposely refrained from citing all the cases that were quoted before me but I have attempted to make a selection which will give a fair view of the somewhat divergent opinions that have been expressed by the various High Courts.

It seems to me, as a fair result of these opinions, impossible to say that in no case whatever will the Court interfere with an interlocutory order, but that that interference must be exercised with extreme diligence, the general rule being against such interference. The latter may be justified when the order sought to be revised is in fact perverse or irreparable injury will be caused unless the revision is allowed. I, therefore, proceed to the second point.

The first objection is, that the order was made without hearing the Vakil for the defendant on a suggestion by Mr. T. R. Venkatarama Sastri to the lower Court. Under O. XV, r. 3 (1), the satisfaction of the Court can only be prima facie, otherwise there would be no scope for sub-rule (2). It appears, however, from the affidavit of the defendant that his Vakil did argue the question and I cannot say that the order is illegal or irregular on that ground. The next and much more serious argument is that defendant will suffer irreparable injury by the determination of Issues Nos. 3, 4 and 9 as preliminary issues. The contention of petitioner is that Issue (5) which is admittedly a question of mixed law and fact—being estoppel by conduct—will conclude the case one way or other, also that Issue No. 1 should have been included. This issue involves the question of invalidity of Tirunarayana's adoption which he had set up as entitling him as a reversioner to the property and also the invalidity of the deed of indenture. Issues Nos. 3 and 4, both flow from the indenture. The defendant put forward prior to the indenture a claim of adoption on behalf of the plaintiff by the mother of Venkata Krishna Pillai in order to make him a nearer agnate than Tirunarayana whose alleged adoption was to Venkatakrishna Pillai himself. The adoption of plaintiff is disclaimed in the indenture by his guardian (defendant) and the argument is to be that defendant cannot be heard to say that he has a prior and better title in himself. It is also to be argued that defendant by his execution of the deed of indenture is estopped. Defendant will admittedly have a right of appeal, however the decision on those preliminary issues goes. His complaint is that he will be put to inconvenience and expense by possibly having to file several appeals. But this is anticipating that the decision of the Court will be against him on those preliminary issues, or one or more of them. I do not think that I am warranted in making such assumption at the present time. I have in Ventala Verrarazu v. Kuruvella Subbarayudu (7) expressed the opinion that this Court will not interfere in revision where the party has a separate remedy. Can I say that the Court below acted perversely or in a way to cause irreparable loss to defendant? The issues selected are very material to the case; and I cannot find that, because it would suit the defendant better to have Issues Nos. 1 and 5 decided before the others, the order is perverse or is likely to cause injury which cannot be largely remedied by costs if he succeeds. There is no fear that his issues will not be eventually tried if the decision of the others is not sufficient to dispose of the case. If the Subordinate Judge comes to that opinion the defendant has the right of appeal. The Subordinate Judge certainly had, in my view, and for the reasons given, jurisdiction to make the order he did, and the fact that it may possibly result in inconvenience and expense to defendant is not a ground to interfere in revision. I cannot say there is any injury to defendant in the actual selection of those issues as preliminary and as I have said, it seems to me I cannot anticipate the possible consequences of a decision on them adverse to him. I, therefore, think that on this point defendant's petitions fail.

The next point argued is, that section 10 of the Code of Civil Procedure is a bar to the trial of this suit till No. 8 of 1917 is determined. It is said that Issues Nos. 1, 3 and 5 in that suit involve the determination of Issue No. 1 in the present suit. That suit as stated is between the present defendant as plaintiff and Tirunarayana Pillai. It is, therefore, not between the same parties as the present suit. Section 10 speaks of a previously instituted suit between the same parties or between parties under whom they or any of them claim litigating under the same title; no argument has been addressed to me to show that the present suit and No. 8 of 1917 would fall under the latter words of the clause, but I am referred to a judgment of Spencer and Ramesam, JJ., in Civil Revision Petition No. 657 of 1920 [Ramakrishna Pillai v. Balakrishna Aiyar (19)] which dealt with the propriety of certain Vakils appearing for the defendant in this suit, they having already acted for him in No. 8 of 1917 where he is the plaintiff. It is there said that in both suits questions arise as to the validity of the indenture and its binding character on defendant and also of estoppel. No doubt, some of the questions in the two suits are the same but the learned Judges had not to deal with the applicability of section 10 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Mr T. R. Ramachandra Iyer relies on Wahid-un nissa Bibi v. Zamin Ali Shah (2) and Sivaprasad Ram v. Trincomdas (3). In the former case it was held that the widow was claiming in both suits on the same title and that the Court below had done right in staying one of the suits. In Sultan-t Jahan Begam v Sundar Lal (8) it was held that an application under section 10 of the

SUBBARAYA PILLAI v. VENKATA PERUMAL.

Code of Civil Procedure is not a case and that no revision would lie under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In Sivaprasad Ram v. Tricomdas (3) the jurisdiction under section 10 is limited to stopping a suit if the circumstances mentioned in the section are found to exist. On the materials before me I clearly cannot so find here. In that case the Judge (page 931*) had come to no finding as to whether the parties were litigating under the same title but proceeded to decide the question of res judicata which was clearly materially irregular. Under these circumstances, I cannot say that section 10 applies here, and I must find this point against the defendant and these civil revision petitions must be dismissed with costs.

C. R. P. No. 439 of 1921.

This is a revision petition against the amendment of plaint and consequent settlement of an additional Issue No. 9 on 7th April 1921. The amendment is as to prescriptive title based on possession of defendant benami for plaintiff. It appears to me that Issue No. 3, is involved in Issue No. 9. If plaintiff is wrong on No. 3, he will go. In Penumalri Vasantarayadu v. Reddi Subbamma (9) it was held that the Court would not interfere with an order refusing amendment, as the plaintiff could attack the order on appeal if the decision was against him. In Vasudeva Padhi Khadanga Garu v. Magini Devin Bakshi Mahapatrulu Garu (20), it was remarked that prescriptive title need not be expressly pleaded as it is only evidence of a party's title.

The amendment was within the discretion of the Court (O. VI, r. 17), and for the reasons stated above I am unable to say that this amendment is a matter which I should deal with in revision. It has not been argued that the amendment changes the character of the suit or would involve any material injustice to the defendant. This civil revision petition must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

APPEAL FROM THE MADRAS HIGH COURT.

May 31, 1922.

Present:—Lord Phillimore, Lord Carson and Sir John Edge.

E. SUBBARAYA PILLAI, SINCE DECEASED (NOW REPRESENTED BY SUBRAMANIA PILLAI AND OTHERS) AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

versus

Rajah Kumara VENKATA PERUMAL RAJU BAHADUR VARU AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Document—Construction—Sale by legal and beneficial owner—Suit for specific performance—Limitation—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 113.

The suit villages originally belonged to the plaintiff's deceased father. They were sold in Court auction in 1879 and purchased by the defendant. The plaintiff alleged that this purchase was made on behalf of the plaintiff's father, that a part of the purchase-money was paid out of his funds and the balance obtained from one K to whom the suit villages were sold by the defendant subject to a condition of re-conveyance on payment of a stipulated sum. A suit to compel such re-conveyance was instituted and a decree directing the re-conveyance obtained in 1889. In 1883 during the pendency of the suit an agreement was entered into between the plaintiff's father and the first defendant which recited:—

"Under these circumstances, under the orders of M. (plaintiff's father) the accounts were looked into in respect of items due to S. (first defendant) relating to the said villages, and also relating to the transactions between S. and M. On looking into the accounts the amount found due to S. was Rs. 99,568-15-6. S. consented to receive the same and sell the aforesaid villages to M." The agreement further stated that on the defendant's succeeding in his suit against K. he should sell the suit property to the plaintiff's father on payment of the sum found due to the defendant. There was also a stipulation in the contract for the payment of interest until payment of the sum above mentioned and for the plaintiff's father's giving a mortgage to the defendant to secure the payment of the sum. The plaintiff in 1900 instituted the present suit for possession of the villages on payment of such sum, if any, as may be found due:

Held, that whatever might have been the nature of the original purchase by the defendant, the contract of 1883 treated him as the beneficial and legal owner and the plaintiff's suit, being one for the specific performance of a contract, was barred by Art. 113 of the Indian Limitation Act. JUDGMENT.

LORD CARSON.—In this suit the present Rajah of Karvetnagar seeks to recover possession from the defendants of certain villages on payment of such sum, if any, as may be found due.

Both the Subordinate Judge of North Arcot and the Judges of the High Court of Judicature at Madras were in agreement that the legal relation between the plaintiff and the first defendant is settled and determined by a contract in relation to the said villages entered into on the 25th August 1888 between Sri Maharajulangaru, the plaintiff's father, and the first defendant. Saravana Pillai, who was the first defendant, is now dead, but is represented in this appeal. The remaining defendants claimed to be bona fide purchasers for value from the first defendant without notice of any claim by the plaintiff. The Subordinate Judge held that upon the construction of the said contract Saravana Pillai was the owner of the villages, and agreed to sell the same to the plaintiff for a consideration of Rs. 99,568-15-6, to be paid or secured as stated in the fifth paragraph of the said contract of the 25th August 1888. The High Court, on the other hand, held that upon the true construction of the contract the plaintiff was the beneficial owner of the villages and Saravana Pillai only the legal owner, and that in the matter of pecuniary obligations incurred by Saravana Pillai in connection with the purchase of the villages, and in the matter of the other money dealings between him and the plaintiff, there was found due from the plaintiff a sum of Rs. 99,568-15-6 in settlement of accounts. It is admitted in the judgments of the High Court that if the said contract were a contract for sale the suit would essentially be one for the specific performance of a contract, and in that case it would be clearly barred under Article 113 of the Limitation Act. It is well to bear in mind that the terms of this section relate to any contract.

On the view taken by the High Court of the contract, however, it was held that the suit is really one for the possession of immoveable property by a beneficial owner thereof against the legal owner on payment, if necessary, of such sum, if any, as may be found due; that the execution of a conveyance by the first defendant to the plaintiff was not essential and is unnecessary if he gets a decree for the recovery of the villages as beneficial owner.

The villages in question originally belonged to the plaintiff's late father—the then Zemindar of Karvetnagar. They were sold in 1883 in Court auction in Original Suit No. 5 of 1879, and purchased by the first defendant as stated in the contract. It is alleged by the plaintiff that this purchase was made on behalf of the plaintiff's father, that a part of the purchase-money was paid out of his funds and the balance obtained from one Krishnama Chari, to whom the villages appear to have been sold by the first defendant subject to a condition of re-conveyance on payment of a stipulated sum. A suit to compel such re-conveyance was instituted in the High Court at Madras, and on the 16th October 1889 a decree directing reconveyance was made. In pursuance thereof a conveyance was duly executed on the 7th February 1890 and since that date the first defendant had, until he died, been in possession of the villages, acting as the absolute owner thereof. The contract of the 28th August, 1888, was entered into during the pending of the original suit. It recites briefly the facts above stated and refers to the pendency of the said suit, and then proceeds as follows:—

"Under these circumstances, under the order of Sri Maharajulangaru the accounts were looked into in their presence in respect of items due to the said Saravana Pillai relating to the said villages, and also relating to all money transactions between Saravana Pillai and Sri Maharajulangaru. On looking into the accounts the amount found due to the said Saravana Pillai was Rs. 99,568 15 6. Saravana Pillai consented to receive this sum of rupees, etc., and sell the aforesaid villages to Sri Maharajulangaru."

Whatever may have been the original nature of the purchase by Pillai or the arrangements entered into to raise the purchase-money this contract was a settlement of questions of account in relation to the said villages and other matters, and under the terms of it Pillai is treated as the legal and beneficial owner. The second clause of the contract further strengthens this construction. It provides that as soon as Pillai obtains a decree in the suit already referred to (which, as pointed out, he did obtain), he should sell the villages to Maharajulangaru, and the said Maharajulangaru should purchase the same for the sum of Rs. 99,568 15-6. "He should not sell to others without the consent of the Maharajulangaru"—a provision which would be meaningless unless he was the legal and beneficial owner. The fifth clause of the agreement provides for payment of interest on the purchase-money until paid, and that until the principal and interest are paid the Maharajulangaru should mortgage the villages "which Saravana Pillai has consented to sell, or other villages, etc."—properties which are acceptable to Saravana Pillai as security for the said principal and interest—and executed a document therefor. The plaintiff took no further action in the terms of the said contract. In the year 1899 his estate was taken under the management of the Court of Wards, and this suit was instituted by the Manager appointed by the Court of Wards on the 24th August 1900. Before instituting this suit, it is to be observed that on the 23rd August 1900, the Acting Secretary to the Court of Wards, by a notice in writing, called upon the first defendant to execute a conveyance of the villages to him on behalf of the plaintiff and to tender a mortgage for execution by him on behalf of the plaintiff.

Their Lordships agree with the Subordinate Judge that no charge is created by the contract over the villages in question, and that the plaintiff had no right to recover possession of the property absolutely or conditionally on his executing a mortgage-deed or making a payment to the first defendant.

The suit, therefore, becomes one for the specific performance of a contract which is barred by the section of the Limitation Act already referred to.

This Board are, for the reasons stated, of opinion that this appeal should be allowed and the judgment of the Subordinate Judge restored, and that the appellants should have their costs in the Courts below and of the appeal. It is unnecessary, having regard to this conclusion, to consider the case of the respondents, the legal representatives of defendant No. 3—for whom Mr. Parikh appeared—further than to say that it was agreed in the course of the argument by Mr. DeGruyther, Counsel on behalf of the appellants, that the interests of Mr Parikh's clients should not be affected by any question of any Statute of Limitation which might be raised in answer to their claim, owing to the delay which has been occasioned by the institution and the carrying out of the proceedings in this suit, and their Lordships so determine.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Messrs. K. G. Deshpande and R. R. Jaiwant, for the Applicant.

Mr. C. B. Parakh, for the Non-Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—The applicant, Miss A. K. Singh, obtained a decree for certain house property and adjacent land against one Baktavar and in execution thereof took possession of the same. Ramprasad, the uncle of Baktavar, alleging that he and Baktavar were members of a joint Hindu family and were jointly in possession of the property filed an application under O. XXI, r. 100, First Schedule, Civil Procedure Code, claiming to be put in possession of a half-share in the property. The lower Court held that Ramprasad had only a one-third share and directed him to be put in joint possession of it. The plaintiff seeks revision of the lower Court's order on the ground that, as Ramprasad's possession was joint with that of the judgment-debtor, Baktavar, he cannot be said to be in possession on his own account and no application by him lay under O. XXI, r. 100. Reliance is placed upon Coover i Hirji v. Dewsey Bhoja (1) in support of this plea but, in so far as that ruling lays down that a person who is in joint possession is not in possession on his own account, it has been held to be open to criticism: Radha Gobinda Missir v. Raghunath Missir (2). In the case last cited it was held, following Govinda Nair v. Kesava (3), that a claimant who has an interest in the land of which possession has been delivered in execution of a decree either as a member of a family or otherwise and who is affected by the delivery of possession can claim to be in possession of the property on his own account within the meaning of section 331 of the Code of 1882 corresponding to O. XXI, r. 100 of the First Schedule of the new Civil Procedure Code. I agree with the view taken in the Calcutta case. If the one taken in the Bombay case were followed, the result would be that a member of a joint Hindu family would be excluded from resorting to the remedy provided by O. XXI, r. 100. I hold that Ramprasad had the right to apply under O. XXI, r. 100, and that the lower Court had jurisdiction to entertain his application. This application fails and is dismissed with costs. SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 211 OF 1921.

KALLU MAL—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

KASHI NATH AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS RESPONDENTS.

Execution proceedings, revival of—Execution, application for, defective—Defect immaterial—Application returned for amendment—Re-filed after expiry of limitation—Decree-holder prepared to fall back on previous application—Previous application, whether revives.

On 24th September 1915 a preliminary decree for sale was passed. On 11th December 918 the decree-holder made an application for the preparation of a final decree for sale, but since it was not correct, the Court returned it to the decree-holder on 21st December 1918 for amendment, without fixing any time for its presentation after amendment The only amendment needed in the application was in respect of the amount claimable under the decree, which was entered less than what was actually due to the decree-holder, and a defective description of the mortgaged property. The decree-holder did not file the application after amendment till 29th May 1919, but was, however, prepared to accept a decree for the amount stated in the original application:

Held, that in view of the decree-holder's attitude the application dated 29th May 1919 was in any case an application for the continuation or revival of the previous application and was, as such, not barred by time. [p. 176, col. 2.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Saharanpur.

Mr. Pearey Lal Banerji, for the Appellant.

Mr. Nehal Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from an order, rejecting an application for the preparation of a final decree for sale. The preliminary decree for sale was passed on the 24th September 1915. It allowed time for the payment of the decretal money till the 24th March 1916. On the 11th December 1918 an application was made by the decree-holder for the preparation of a final decree for sale. On the same date the office reported that the amount of demand entered in the application was not correct and that some portion of the mortgaged property had also been omitted. On the 13th December 1918 the Court passed an order returning the application to the decree-holder for amendment without fixing any time for its presentation after amendment. The decree-holder received back the application on the 21st December 1918, but did not file it after amendment till the 29th May 1919. On the 6th March 1918 the Court ordered that, as the application had not been filed after amendment, the papers should be consigned to the record room.

The question for consideration in this appeal is, whether the amended application should be treated as a fresh application for the preparation of a final decree for sale, in which case it would be barred by time, or as a continuation of the previous application which was filed within time. The Courts below took the former view and held that it was barred by time. It is not clear under what provision the application was returned for amendment to the decree-holder. If the Court of first instance followed the analogy of the provision contained in O. XXI, r. 17 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it was bound to fix a time for amendment, and the effect of the amendment, if made, would have been to render the application valid as from the date on which it was first presented. That provision, however, applies to an application for execution. If the Court directed the amendment under section 153 or O. VI, r. 17 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it should have kept the application pending and required the decree-holder to amend it within a certain time or at all events within 14 days from the date of the order. The penalty for not making such an amendment under O. VII, r. 18 would have been to deprive the decree-holder of his right to make the amendment thereafter, unless the time was extended by the Court, leaving the application in that event to be dealt with on its merits.

When first presented, the application was a good application, so far as it asked for the preparation of a final decree for sale for the amount entered therein. The only amendment needed in the application was in respect of the amount claimable under the decree, which was entered less than what was actually due to the decree-holder, and a defective description of the mortgaged property, as the name of the village had been omitted and a small share in a certain house had also been left out. If these defects are left out of account, there would still be a valid application to the Court for the preparation of a final decree to the extent of the amount for which a final decree was claimed. The learned Counsel, who appears for the decree-holder, states that he is prepared to accept a decree for the amount entered in the original application. In regard to the mistake in the description of the mortgaged property, that could easily have been rectified at any time before the preparation of the final decree; and we do not consider that it was a defect which ought to have stood in the way of the application being accepted and acted on for the preparation of a final decree. In any case the Court was to blame for not fixing a time for amendment as much as the decree-holder for the delay in presenting it after amendment; and considering all the circumstances, we are disposed to treat the application, presented after amendment, as a continuation of the previous application. It was, in any case, an application for the continuation or revival of the same proceeding and as such it was not barred by time.

We allow this appeal accordingly, set aside the orders of the Courts below and direct the Court of first instance to reinstate the application under its original number and to dispose of it according to law.

As the decree-holder is content to ask for the sum entered in the original application, he should not be allowed to take out a final decree for a larger amount. We do not allow him any costs here or in the Court below. In view of the circumstances the judgment-debtors shall also bear their own costs throughout.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 141, 144—Suit by reversioners for possession of immoveable property—Adverse possession—Limitation.

A suit by the reversioners of a deceased person, for possession of immoveable property originally owned by him, against the person in occupation, would be governed by Art 141 of the Limitation Act, unless the defendant could show that adverse possession started in the lifetime of the deceased.

Second appeal from a decree of the Additional Judge, Jullundar at Ludhiana, dated the 7th February 1920, reversing that of the Munsif, First Class, Nakodar, District Jullundur, dated the 20th August 1918.

Lala Jagan Nath, for the Appellants.

Pandit Sheo Narain, R. B., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs in this case are some of the reversioners of Sardar Bhup Singh, who died in 1850, or 1851 leaving two widows, Musammat Chand Kaur and Musammat Kishen Kaur. Musammat Chand Kaur died about 25 years prior to suit but Musammat Kishen Kaur died only on the 30th of January 1906. The plaintiffs sued for possession of the certain site and obtained a decree from the First Court, the defendants, Salig Ram, etc., being allowed three months for removal of malba. The lower Appellate Court has dismissed the suit, holding that it is time-barred by reason of long adverse possession.

It has been found by the lower Courts that the site in question is part of a field which was the property of Sardar Bhup Singh. For some years past there has been a building on the site. Suba was the first person who occupied the building, and on behalf of the defendants it is pleaded that Suba sold it to Dasaundhi, who in turn sold it to Ram Lal, and in execution of the decree against Ram Lal it was bought by Salig Ram, etc. The learned District Judge has apparently applied Article 144 of the Schedule to the Limitation Act, but, unless the defendants can show that adverse possession commenced in the lifetime of Sardar Bhup Singh, the Article applicable is clearly Article 141, as is admitted by Rai Bahadur Sheo Narain, and this suit having been brought within twelve years of the death of Musammat Kishen Kaur, must be regarded as within time.

Mr. Sheo Narain, however, contends that there is no finding by the lower Appellate Court as to whether Suba held adverse possession even in the lifetime of Bhup Singh. The matter is, however, covered by the 4th issue framed by the Trial Court and I am myself come to a decision on the evidence on the record. The onus of proving adverse possession prior to the death of Sardar Bhup Singh lies on the defendants, but the evidence produced by them is that of three witnesses, two of whom were not even alive at the time of Sardar Bhup Singh's death while the third, an old man, who gives his age as 80, does not say that Suba held possession in Sardar Bhup Singh's lifetime, but, on the contrary, says, that Bhup Singh died before the witness's earliest recollections (meri hosh se pehle). Thus, there is no proof that Suba held adverse possession in the lifetime of Sardar Bhup Singh. The case is, therefore, governed by Article 141 and is within time.

Another point raised by Mr. Sheo Narain is that the plaintiffs are only some of the reversioners of Sardar Bhup Singh, defendants Nos 5 to 11 being also reversioners, and Mr. Sheo Narain urges, therefore, that the plaintiffs can only get a decree for possession of their shares and not for the whole site. No such contention, however, was raised in either of the lower Courts and I consider it is too late to raise it now.

Mr. Sheo Narain lastly contends that fresh time must now be given to the defendants for removal of the malba, the period originally allowed by the First Court having long since elapsed. This last plea is perfectly reasonable and is not contested by Lala Jagan Nath. The defendants, Salig Ram, Kushal Chand and Moti Ram, will be allowed three months from the date of this decree for the removal of the materials now standing on the site.

I accept this appeal and reversing the decree of the lower Appellate Court I give the plaintiffs a decree for possesion of the site in dispute. Plaintiffs will recover costs in all Courts from Salig Ram, Kushal Chand and Moti Ram, defendants-respondents. The same respondents are allowed three months from date for removal of their materials.

Berar Land Revenue Code, s. 78 (2)—Tenant of antiquity—Origin of tenancy traceable—Tenant neither proved to be perpetual nor ante-jagir—Presumption—Notice to quit—Delay in suing for ejectment, effect of—Fresh notice not necessary.

The protection afforded by section 78 (2) of the Berar Land Revenue Code is not available to a tenant the origin of whose tenancy is known, or can be proved to have commenced after a certain point of time; that section applies only where by reason of antiquity, evidence of the commencement of a tenancy is lost [p. 178, col. 2; p 179, col 1.]

Parashram v. Bapu, 42 Ind. Cas. 631; 14 N. L. R. 111, followed.

In the absence of any proof that a tenancy is perpetual or that the tenant is an ante-jagir tenant, it must be assumed that he is an annual tenant. [p. 179, col. 1.]

Where a notice to quit is served upon a tenant his possession thereafter is that of a trespasser. Mere inaction on the part of a landlord to sue for ejectment after a notice to quit has been served on a tenant, does not amount to acquiescence of his possession as a tenant on the part of the landlord, as no fresh notice is necessary. [p. 179, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decree of the Additional District Judge, Amraoti, dated the 30th November 1920, in Civil Appeal No. 90 of 1920.

Mr. W. H. Dhobe, for the Appellant.
Mr. A. V. Khare, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs were the izara proprietors of the village where the fields in suit were situate, and their suit, out of which this appeal arises, was for the defendant's ejectment from those fields on the ground that he was only an annual tenant of theirs and that his tenancy had terminated by a notice in writing given by them to him. The defence was that the tenancy was a perpetual one and that the defendant was a tenant of antiquity, and was not hence liable to be ejected. It was also urged in defence that the notice given to the defendant was not valid and sufficient. All these pleas taken in defence were found against the defendant and the plaintiffs were given a decree for possession of the fields.

2. In this second appeal the appellant confines his defence only in respect of field No. 2. In respect of the remaining two fields the concurrent finding of the Courts below is that the defendant's tenancy commenced in 1893 and it is admitted that this finding of fact is not open to any interference by this Court on second appeal. We are, therefore, in this appeal concerned with the plaintiffs' claim only in respect of field No. 2. It is urged for the appellant that as there was no evidence to show when the tenancy of this field commenced, the case should have been held as being governed by section 78, clauses (2) and (3) of the Berar Land Revenue Code, and that the defendant should have been held as not being liable to ejectment. The finding of the two Courts is that the defendant's tenancy of this field was in existence in the year 1873, and that it had commenced prior to that year. From this finding it is attempted to be shown that the origin and the commencement of the tenancy was uncertain. In this case there is no uncertainty on the point, as the defendant himself admitted that the lease of this field was given to his predecessors first about 45 or 50 years ago. This statement was made by him in 1918, and thus, according to the defendant himself, the tenancy could not have commenced before 1868. We cannot, therefore, say that the origin of the tenancy was unknown. If it can be proved with certainty that the tenancy did not commence till after a certain point of time, then it cannot be said of such a tenancy that evidence of its commencement has been lost by reason of its antiquity. A tenant of such holding is not, therefore, protected by section 78, clause (2) : see Parashram v. Bapu (1). In the absence of any proof that the tenancy was perpetual, or that the defendant was an ante jogir tenant, it must be assumed that he was an annual tenant. This disposes of grounds Nos. 1 to 4 of the appeal.

3. It is said that the notice to quit issued by the plaintiffs to the defendant was not proper and had exhausted itself, inasmuch as the plaintiffs permitted the defendant to continue in possession for two years afterwards and not sued him for ejectment so long. This, according to the contention of the defendant, amounted to an acquiescence of his possession as a tenant on the plaintiffs' part. It is admitted that for the subsequent years the defendant did not pay any rent nor was it accepted by the plaintiffs. There can, therefore, be no waiver, and as the defendant's possession was after the notice as a trespasser, no fresh notice was necessary. The notice was a perfectly valid and effective one. This disposes of the remaining grounds of appeal.

The plaintiffs were rightly given a decree for ejectment of the defendant, and the defendant's appeal is dismissed with all costs on him.

Miscellaneous first appeal from an order of the District Judge, Hissar, dated the 10th November 1919.

Lala Rama Nand, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—Ram Chandar, now deceased, was declared an insolvent. His sons, Shib Charn, major, and Tilok Chand, minor, objected to sale of their interests in ancestral house and shop being sold. Their objections being overruled they appeal to this Court. The Receiver has not appeared here.

The objections are, (1) that the family is a joint Hindu family, and (2) that the sons' estate is not liable as the debts incurred were badni transactions.

I need not consider ground (2). As to ground (1) there is authority [Sahaj Narayan Sahi v. Wajid Hussain (1)] for holding that the estate of the sons cannot be dealt with by the Receiver.

Another ground of appeal is that the late insolvent's mother has a right of residence. But she can reside in the son's share.

I accept this appeal and direct that the sale to be effected by the Receiver shall be limited to the insolvent's share in the estate.

The proper way to question such orders is by moving the High Court in revision. [p. 181, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decree and judgment of Mr. Justice Bakewell, dated the 6th February 1920, passed in the exercise of the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of the High Court made in Civil Suit No. 484 of 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. G. Krishnaswamy Iyer, for the Appellants.—The learned Trial Judge erred in dismissing the plaintiffs' suit in toto. The orders of the Presidency Magistrate under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, do give the plaintiffs a cause of action in so far as such orders infringe their rights. Defendants are persons interested in denying plaintiffs' rights. Valan Pakkiri Taragan v. Subbayan Samban (1). Though the orders under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, will stand notwithstanding the decision in this case, that does not affect plaintiffs' right to a declaration, as a decree upholding their claim might induce Government to cancel the orders.

Mr. V. V. Srinivasa Iyengar (with him Mr. Mohamed Ibrahim Sahib), for the Respondents.—The defendants have not denied the rights of the plaintiffs.

The plaintiffs have not moved the High Court to revise the orders under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code. They cannot now ask to declare the orders ultra vires, especially where the Government is not impleaded as a party.

After all the granting of a declaratory decree is in the discretion of the Judge and there is no reason why the Trial Judge's discretion should be interfered with. Valan Pakkiri Taragan v. Subbayan Samban (1).

JUDGMENT.

AYLING, OFFG. C. J.—The facts of the case are so succinctly stated in the first paragraph of the judgment of the learned Trial Judge that I cannot do better than quote therefrom:

"The plaintiffs are the trustees of a Hindu temple and the defendants are the worshippers at a neighbouring Muhammadan mosque. Between the two buildings there were formerly a lane and some other buildings. The latter have been acquired by the Temple trustees who desire to adopt and use these buildings for religious purposes. The worshippers at the Mosque, who, by the plaintiffs' acquisition of the intervening buildings, have been brought into proximity to the Temple, complained to the Police of the acts of the plaintiffs, in connection with the new buildings acquired by them. The Police took action under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code. Orders were passed by the Magistrate and notifications were made by the Local Government under sub-section 5. These orders and notifications are set out in paragraph 22 of the plaint as constituting the plaintiffs' cause of action together with certain further proceedings under the Magistrate's orders."

The reliefs claimed by plaintiffs are:—

1. A declaration that they are entitled to use the plaint property in any way they like for purposes connected with the Temple.

2. A perpetual injunction restraining defendants from interfering with them in so doing.

(1) 49 Ind. Cas. 533; (1919) M. W. N. 46; 42 M. 271; 25 M. L. T. 39; 36 M. L. J. 79; 9 L. W. 208 (F. B.).

3. A declaration that the orders of the Chief Presidency Magistrate and Government are ultra vires and illegal.

The suit has been dismissed on the grounds (1) that plaintiffs have no cause of action, and (2) that the validity of the orders of the Chief Presidency Magistrate and Government cannot be enquired into in a suit to which only plaintiffs and defendants are parties.

As far as the third prayer is concerned, the dismissal of the suit is certainly justified. The orders in question were passed under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, and if they were illegal or ultra vires the proper way to question them is by a criminal revision petition to the High Court. A perusal of them shows that they were passed in the interests of the public peace and without particular reference to the civil rights of the parties to the dispute; and even if it were possible to question their validity in a properly framed suit to which Government and its officers were parties, it is clearly impossible to do so in the present array of parties.

But, with all respect, it seems to me that the dismissal of the suit altogether is not justified. I do not think it can be said that plaintiffs have no cause of action or that the existence of the criminal orders justifies a refusal on the part of the Court to enquire into the civil rights of the parties.

It is not denied that the orders under section 144 were passed on the representations of the defendants, and their effect is to absolutely stand in the way of the exercise by plaintiffs of the rights they claim. It is, to my mind, impossible to hold that defendants are not persons denying or interested to deny plaintiffs' title to the right sought to be declared in their first plaint prayer: and the Full Bench decision in Valan Pakkiri Taragan v. Subbayan Samban (1) seems to me authority for treating the orders referred to as a good cause of action.

Mr. V. V. Srinivasa Iyengar for respondents has argued rather tentatively that there has been no denial by defendants of plaintiffs' rights, in spite of their representation to the Magistrate that those rights should be interdicted. I do not think this position is tenable. It is clear from Exhibit W, a magisterial order, dated 25th May 1902, in the early stage of the dispute that the Muhammadans then proposed themselves to file a civil suit against the Temple Dharmakarthas, obviously to restrain the latter from erecting a mantapam on the plaint site and though this was never done, yet the fact that this intention was recorded and the passing of orders delayed for sometime to enable the suit to be filed, shows that the defendants' party were actually denying plaintiffs' right. In the present suit, we have in paragraph 20 of the plaint an assertion of plaintiffs' right to use the property for any purpose connected with the temple. This right is specifically denied in paragraph 18 of the written statement, and on this denial, issue No. 4 has been framed in the suit:—Have the plaintiffs acquired the right claimed in the plaint, in respect of the use of the Temple properties, as against the defendants? In these circumstances, the view of the learned Trial Judge that, "Defendants do not, in fact, deny the right of the plaintiffs to act in that manner if it is otherwise (i.e., apart from the orders under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code) lawful to do so," appears to be wrong.

It seems clear that before they secured the orders under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code in their favour, defendants did, in fact, deny plaintiffs' right to use the property in the manner desired by them; and that they still do so even in the present suit.

Lastly, it is argued that the grant of declaration is always discretionary and that, in the present case, in the face of the orders under section 144, it would be waste paper. I do not agree with this It is quite true that the orders under section 144 will still remain in force unaffected by any declaratory decree in this suit. But such orders are always open to re consideration by Government, and if the result of this suit should be to establish plaintiffs' right it will be open to plaintiffs to go to Government and ask that it should be re-considered, whether in view of this adjudication the interest of the public tranquillity demand their permanent deprivation of the said right. I do not presume to say what answer would be given; but neither can I assume that the application would necessarily be infructuous.

We have been referred to Mathab Chandra Guro v. Kamala Kant Chuckerbutty (2) as authority in defendants' favour on this point. I have carefully considered the judgment in that case, and note that it proceeds very largely on the distinction between the bridge which had been removed under the magisterial order and any subsequent bridge which the plaintiff in that case might erect. That is a possible ground for distinction; but in so far as the judgment is relied on, as laying down a principle applicable to the present case, I must respectfully dissent from it.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the dismissal of the suit should be set aside, and that it should be remanded for trial, as regards plaint prayers (a) and (b) only.

The costs of this appeal should be provided for in the decree to be passed.

ODGERS, J.—I agree. There has clearly been no decision on the rights of the parties in the orders issued by the Chief Presidency Magistrate and by the Government, and there is equally no doubt that these rights have been put in issue in the suit under appeal. (Cf. plaint paragraph 20 and written statement paragraph 18.)

I think the case decided by the Full Bench in Velan Pakkiri Tarogan v. Subbayan Samban (1) is clear authority that the existence of the magisterial orders which, as here, the plaintiffs contend, constitute an infringement of their civil rights, gives a cause of action. With regard to the case in Madhab Chandra Guho v. Kamala Kant Chuckerbutty (2), which does not appear to have been considered by the Full Bench of this Court in Velan Pakkiri Tarogan v. Subbayan Samban (1), I think this case may be distinguished from the present. Macpherson, J., seems to have decided the case on the ground that a mere declaratory decree giving no consequential relief and from which in fact no relief could be obtained should not be given, and a suit for that purpose would not lie. Mookerjee, J., was of opinion that as the Magistrate's order was passed with jurisdiction, it could not be questioned in a civil suit and the latter should have been dismissed. With this latter I agree, and it may well be that a declaration, which is discretionary, should not be made, whereas in the Bengal case it would be useless. In the case before us, however, I am not clear that a declaration would be useless, especially as it is coupled with a prayer for consequential relief (i.e.) an injunction. This is sufficient to distinguish that case from the present.

I, therefore, think the learned Trial Judge was wrong in dismissing plaintiffs' suit and it must be restored and go back on prayers (a) and (b) only.

JUDGMENT.—In 1902 the plaintiffs bought a half share in certain land from Peman and Kallu, and in 1909 they obtained a decree for possession on the basis of the deed of sale. Execution was taken out and in May 1909 the Girdawar Kanungo was ordered to go to the spot. According to his report, the accuracy of which is not in dispute, symbolical possession was given to the decree-holders when both Kallu and Peman were present and a proclamation was made in the village by beat of drum. Kallu and Peman, however, objected at the time that possession should not be given because they had filed an appeal which was still pending. Subsequently, the plaintiffs filed the present suit alleging that after they were thus granted possession they were dispossessed by the judgment-debtors.

The fact that they are not now in possession is not denied but their suit has been dismissed as unmaintainable on the ground that, as there were other co-sharers and also a tenant in possession, a copy of a warrant should have been affixed in some conspicuous place on the property and that the failure to comply with this provision of O. XXI, rr. 35 (2) and 36 is a fatal defect, authority followed being Khub Ram v. Surat (1). In the case there under discussion there was no finding that the judgment debtors had knowledge of execution. The co-sharers are not parties to the present dispute, and it appears to us that where the persons particularly concerned have been made aware of the execution proceedings and the publicity, which is the object of the provisions of the law, has been clearly achieved, it must be held that there has been substantial compliance with it, and on this ground we regard the present case as distinguishable from Khub Ram v. Surat (1). We note that the Judge who delivered that ruling was one of the Judges who admitted this appeal and was apparently prepared to take the same view.

Accordingly, we allow the appeal and, setting aside the decree, remand the suit to the Court of first instance for disposal according to law. Costs will be costs in the cause.

moveable property under Hindu Law. Ghelabhai Gavrishankar v. Hargovan Ramji (3) and Girjashankar Doji v. Murlidhar Narayan (4). Possession may be given under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act. At any rate joint possession may be given with the trustee. Aiman Bibi v. Reasat Sheikh (5).

JUDGMENT.—This is an application to revise the order of the Subordinate Judge of Tinnevelly under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. In this case, the plaintiffs brought a suit under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act to recover possession of a temple building on the strength of title as trustees from the Varamamalai Jeer and his servants who dispossessed them. The defendants contended "that the plaintiffs were neither trustees of the temple nor the hereditary Archakas of temple, that they were merely ordinary servants in Perumal temple" and the shrines attached thereto and that they were removed for misconduct by the first defendant, the Jeer, and that they were not entitled to recover possession of the temple.

The Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiffs were not the trustees of the plaint temple and that first defendant was the trustee and that the Archakaship of the plaint Hanumar temple was hereditarily vested in the plaintiffs' family. He also found that "the plaintiffs were in possession as Archakas and in the exercise of their right as Archakas and not as trustees of the temple" and that "they were in a sense dispossessed within six months prior to suit."

The decretal portion of the judgment runs thus: "There will be a decree only for qualified possession and not exclusive absolute possession, namely, possession which Archakas are entitled by law to have for the proper discharge of their duties."

It is contended before me by Mr. Narasimha Aiyengar for the first defendant, that possession contemplated by section 9 of the Specific Relief Act is not the possession of a servant or joint possession of co owners. The first paragraph of section 9 reads thus, "if any person is dispossessed without his consent of immoveable property otherwise than in due course of law, he or any person claiming through him may, by suit, recover possession thereof, notwithstanding any other title that may be set up in such suit." This section is intended to provide a summary remedy for cases of dispossession of immoveable property, except in the course of law, on proof of dispossession within six months, the Court will direct the restoration of possession irrespective of the title of the parties. What the first defendant, the trustee, has done is to dismiss the plaintiffs who are only Archakas. It has been decided that hereditary Archakas are only servants of the temple subject to the disciplinary jurisdiction of the trustee: Seshadri Aiyangar v. Ranga Bhattar (2). They have a right of suit if they are improperly prevented from performing the duties of their office or dismissed without good and proper reasons. The possession, therefore, of the Archakas of the temple is only that of servants. The trustee is entitled to the possession of the trust property and an Archaka, or any other servant of the temple, has possession on behalf of the trustee or by his leave or license, implied or express. The learned Subordinate Judge has erred in thinking that he had jurisdiction to entertain a suit under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act by a servant against a master, no doubt the finding that plaintiffs are only Archakas was arrived at after the whole of the evidence was recorded. The Subordinate Judge should have dismissed the suit on this ground alone. The respondents' Vakil relies on Ghelabhai Gavrishankar v. Hargovan Ramji (3) and Girjashankar Doji v. Murlidhar Narayan (4) for the contention that hereditary Archakaship is immoveable property under the Hindu Law. No doubt, the Hindu Law treats hereditary Archakasbip and hereditary priesthood as immoveable property and divisible among co-parceners. In Southern India, village barbers when they effect a division in their family, divide the village into so many shares among the co parceners. Such a custom is recognised by the Hindu Law. This fact would not make hereditary Archakaship or any other office immoveable property under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act.

The petitioner contends that joint possession cannot be given vide Para Koothan v. Para Kulla Vandu (1) and the respondent relies on Ajiman Bibi v. Reasat Sheikh (5) for the position that joint possession could be given under section 9 of the Act. Sitting as a Single Judge I am bound by a decision of a Bench of this Court in Para Koothan v. Para Kulla Vandu (1). But I do not decide this case on this point. I hold that section 9 of the Specific Relief Act is not applicable to a case like the present. Moreover, it is difficult to see how the decree could be executed effectively. Both the plaintiffs and the defendants put their case too high before the Subordinate Judge and the consequence was that a lot of evidence was adduced and the Court had to record its findings on the points raised.

Considering that there is a remedy open to the parties and that the findings of the Subordinate Judge are evidently just, I am not prepared to exercise my discretion under section 115 in favour of the first defendant. The petitioner and the other defendants were responsible for an elaborate enquiry in consequence of their denial of the plaintiffs' right to hereditary Archakaship. In the result I dismiss the petition without costs.

Bakshi Tek Chand, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Mian Fazal-i-Hussain, K. B., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs-appellants brought a suit on the 15th June 1914 for possession of certain land which had been mortgaged to them by Inayat Ali Khan, respondent, by a registered deed of the 26th August 1895, but their suit has been dismissed in the First Court and in the lower Appellate Court on the ground that it is time-barred under Art. 135 of the Limitation Act as being brought more than 12 years after the time when the mortgagor's right to possession determined. The plaintiffs have preferred a second appeal on the ground that they are entitled to an extended period by reason of the existence of certain acknowledgments by the mortgagor admissible for the purpose of extending the time under section 19 of the Act. It should be remarked that some of the land mortgaged is now in the possession of third parties under subsequent transfers, and in this Court in order to avoid complication the appellants are only proceeding against such land as may be found to be still in the possession of Inayat Ali Khan, the original mortgagor, and they abandon their claim against all the remaining defendants. It is an admitted fact that the mortgage-deed provided for the mortgagees taking possession on default by the mortgagor in payment of interest and that such default was made in the year 1896. Consequently, the mortgagors' right to possession determined at that time and the suit instituted in 1914 is obviously time barred unless the plaintiffs can claim an extended period. This extension is claimed on the basis of acknowledgments contained in bonds dated 17th April 1899 and 7th January 1903 executed by Inayat Ali Khan in the plaintiffs' favour. In these bonds part of consideration is entered as being the interest due to the plaintiffs on the mortgage now in suit. The First Court did not consider that the fact that part of the consideration of the bonds was interest on the mortgage amounted to an acknowledgment of liability to give possession to the mortgagee. The Subordinate Judge remarked :—

"As to section 19 the mortgagor never made an acknowledgment of liability of the mortgagee's right to the mortgaged land. He simply admitted his liability to pay the interest due under the registered mortgage-deed sued upon. This section, therefore, does not apply to the present case."

The point was again taken in appeal to the District Judge and he has agreed that the suit is time barred, though he does not give any specific reasons for his finding. The only question before us is whether these bonds do amount to acknowledgments sufficient to extend the period for a suit for possession.

Now, in two bonds of the 17th January 1899 consideration is the balance of interest due on the registered deed of the 26th August 1895, i. e., on the mortgage now in suit. The bond of the 7th January 1903 for Rs. 168 contains an item of Rs. 23 on account of interest on the registered deed and Inayat Ali Khan admits that this refers to the deed of 1895. It is argued that though these recitals do amount to acknowledgments of liability to pay interest on the mortgage-deed, they did not amount to acknowledgments of the plaintiff's right to take possession and, therefore, fall short of being acknowledgments of liability in respect of such right. We have not been shown any authority exactly in point. The Privy Council has, however, held that it is not required that acknowledgment within the Statute shall specify every legal consequence of the thing acknowledged. The case reported is Sukhamoni Chowdhrani v. Ishan Chunder Roy (1) in which the plaintiff claimed from the defendant contribution to payments made by him in satisfaction of the joint debt and based his claim to an extended period of limitation on an admission made by the defendant in a petition to the District Judge that she was a joint debtor in certain of the debts paid. The Privy Council remarked as follows :—

"That is a distinct acknowledgment that the total of the debts comprised in the list is a joint debt. The Subordinate Judge held that the defendant did not thereby admit any liability to the plaintiff, or promise to pay him anything. But it is not required that an acknowledgment within the Statute shall specify every legal consequence of the thing acknowledged. The defendant acknowledged a joint debt. From that follow the legal incidents of her position as joint debtor with the plaintiff, one of which is that he may sue her for contribution."

This judgment was referred to in Basant Singh v. Thakur Rampal Singh (2) a judgment of a Division Bench of the Oudh Judicial Commissioner's Court. In that a mortgagee brought a suit for possession of the property mortgaged and relied to save limitation on two admissions of the existence of the mortgage made by the defendant in petitions addressed to the Deputy Commissioner. The Judicial Commissioners remarked that "the only serious objection taken by the appellant to these acknowledgments is that they do not in terms admit the plaintiff's rights to take possession under the mortgage-deed. The appellant seeks to draw a distinction between an admission of his liability under the mortgage and an admission of a particular remedy to which the mortgagee might be entitled under it. This distinction is, in our opinion, without validity. The right which was in question and which the appellant acknowledged was the plaintiff's right as mortgagee under the terms of the mortgage, and the right necessarily carries with it the power to claim the particular reliefs to which the provisions of the deed entitled him."

This reasoning appears to us to be sound and applicable to the present case. The bond of 1903 certainly contains an admission of the existence of the registered deed now in suit as well as that the respondent is liable to pay interest under its terms. In the absence of any definite indication to the contrary, we think that this must be regarded as an admission made by the respondent in favour of the plaintiff of respondent's obligations under the deed. The plea that the respondent only admitted his liability to pay interest and that he cannot be supposed to have also admitted his general liability under the deed appears to plase an interpretation upon his act for which there is no apparent justification. One object of the Law of Limitation is to prevent claims being preferred after such a time that the real character of the transaction can no longer be cleared up, but section 19 provides that an acknowledgment of the existence of a liability will give a fresh term, and it may be presumed that in such a case it is considered that the object of the Law of Limitation has been attained. But as the Law of Limitation restricts a man from enforcing his rights, it must receive strict construction, and if there be any doubt, the interpretation placed upon the law should be in favour of the right to proceed. The interpretation of what constitutes an acknowledgment under section 19 is as wide as it can possibly be. It is laid down that "the acknowledgment is sufficient though it omits to specify the exact nature of the property or right, or avers that the time for payment, delivery, performance or enjoyment is not yet come or is accompanied by a refusal to pay, deliver, perform or permit to enjoy, or is coupled with a claim to a set-off, or is addressed to a person other than the person entitled to the property or right." The tenor of the section is certainly strongly against a narrow interpretation of what constitutes an acknowledgment. In America it has been held that an acknowledgment of the existence of the mortgage-debt extends time for a suit for ejectment brought by the mortgagee, and this is exactly the plaintiff's contention in the present case.

(1) 25 C. 844; 25 I. A. 95; 2 C. W. N. 402; 7 Sar. P. C. J. 294; 13 Ind. Dec. (N. s.) 550 (P. C.).

(2) 51 Ind. Cas. 985; 6 O. L. J. 243; 1 U. P. L. R. (J. C.) 45.

In our opinion, therefore, the admission of liability to pay interest under the mortgage contained in the bonds of 1899 and 1903 amounts to an acknowledgment of liability under the mortgage including liability to give possession to the mortgagee, and the suit is not, therefore, barred by time. We must, therefore, accept the appeal and decree the claim as laid against Inayat Ali Khan to the extent of such portion of the mortgaged land as may still be found to be in his possession together with the costs of the case.

Arbitration Act (IX of 1899), s. 14—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42—Award not filed in Court—Suit for declaration that award not binding, nature of.

The Arbitration Act prescribes the manner in which an award may be enforced, and section 14 of the Act details the courses open to a Court after an award has been filed in Court, but the Act has no bearing on a suit for a declaration that a certain award by arbitrators is not binding on a plaintiff. Such a suit falls under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act.

Miscellaneous first appeal from an order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, First Class, Amritsar, dated the 15th December 1920.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Appellant.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. S., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for a declaration that a certain award by arbitrators is not binding on the plaintiff.

The Court below has decided nothing but that the suit is one falling under section 14 of the Indian Arbitration Act, IX of 1899, and, therefore, the only Court having jurisdiction is that of a District Judge. As the Court below was that of a Subordinate Judge, it returned the plaint.

The plaintiff appeals and in our opinion must succeed.

BANSILAL v. SITARAM.

The Indian Arbitration Act prescribes the manner in which an award may be enforced, and section 14 details the courses open to the Court after an award has been filed in Court, but the Act has no bearing on a suit of the nature of that now under consideration.

No award has been filed in Court, and that on which defendants rely may never be filed in Court; had it been filed in Court, section 14 of the Indian Arbitration Act would have applied, but the plaintiff is not bound to wait for his opponents to take action under that Act.

His present suit falls under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act and not under the Indian Arbitration Act.

Accordingly we hold that the Subordinate Judge had jurisdiction; we set aside his order and direct him to re-admit the plaint and decide the case on the merits. Costs to be cost in the cause.

Paragraph 11 (1) of the Third Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code does not stand in the way of an attachment before judgment of the property of a judgment-debtor while the property is under the control of a Collector, because such an attachment is not a process in execution of a decree. [p. 189, col. 1.]

The object of the provision in the latter part of paragraph 11 of the Third Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code is to protect the debtor as far as possible from the risk of losing his property wholly or for all time and mere attachment before judgment cannot defeat that object, for by such attachmen alone the property is not exposed to the risk of such loss [p. 189, col. 1.]

The term "attachment" in section 64 of the Civil Procedure Code covers an attachment before judgment. Consequently, an attachment before judgment and an attachment in execution of a decree have the same effect for the purpose of binding the property so as to prevent private alienations. Mr. W. H. Dhabe, for the Appellant.

Mr. V. V. Ohitale, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Ghisulal, the deceased father of defendant No. 1, obtained decrees in two suits, Nos. 870 of 1915 and 871 of 1917, against defendants Nos. 2 to 4. The decree in Suit No. 870 of 1915 was transferred to the Collector for execution and field No. 59 was attached and put up for sale. The decree was satisfied by a payment of the decretal amount on the 26th April 1918. This amount was paid out of a loan borrowed on a mortgage of the attached field executed by the judgment-debtors in favour of the plaintiff on the same day.

In execution of the decree in Civil Suit No. 871 of 1917 Ghisulal got the same field attached by the Civil Court and purchased it himself in auction on the 17th September 1918.

The plaintiff filed the present suit for a declaration that the field is subject to his mortgage and that defendant No. 1 is liable for the mortgage debt. Defendant No. 1 denied knowledge of the mortgage. He also pleaded that as in Suit No 871 of 1917 a prohibitory order was passed on the 17th December 1917 and attachment was made on the 8th January 1918, the plaintiff's mortgage was void as made pending attachment. The plaintiff pleaded that the attachment in Suit No. 871 of 1917 was void under paragraph 11, Third Schedule, Civil Procedure Code, as it was made while the property was under the Collector's control in Suit No. 870 of 1915.

BANSILAL v. SITARAM.

The lower Courts have held that the attachment in Suit No. 871 of 1917 was void under paragraph 11, Third Schedule, Civil Procedure Code, and have decreed the plaintiff's claim. This finding is now challenged in second appeal.

It is urged that, under paragraph 11, Third Schedule, Civil Procedure Code, it is the issue of process in execution of a decree that is prohibited, and that, as attachment before judgment is not such process, that paragraph does not render the attachment void. It is further urged that if the attachment is valid, section 64, Civil Procedure Code, renders the mortgage in favour of the plaintiff void as against the defendant. The contention that the attachment is not void under paragraph 11 appears to be correct. Attachment before judgment is not a process in execution of a decree, for, at the time of the attachment, there is no decree and, therefore, there can be no process that could be issued in execution of the same. There is no force in the argument that if attachment before judgment made while the estate is still under the Collector's control is held not to be void under paragraph 11, the object of the provision in the latter part of paragraph 11 (.) will fail. The object is to protect the debtor as far as possible from the risk of losing his property wholly or for all time and mere attachment before judgment cannot defeat that object, for by such attachment alone the property is not exposed to the risk of such loss.

The attachment before judgment not being void under the provisions of paragraph 11, the question of the applicability of section 64, Civil Procedure Code, remains. It has been held in Ganu Singh v. Jangi Lal (1) that an attachment before judgment and an attachment in execution of a decree have the same effect for the purpose of binding the property so as to prevent private alienations. One of the objects of granting attachment before judgment is the same as that of section 64, Civil Procedure Code, namely, the protection of the decree-holder by prohibiting private alienations of the judgment-debtor's property and that object would fail if "attachment" in section 64 did not cover attachment before judgment. The plaintiff's mortgage would, in my opinion, be void as against the defendant if there was a valid attachment before judgment.

It appears, however, that there has been no valid attachment before judgment in this case. The record of Suit No. 871 of 1917 which was sent for at the instance of the defendant shows that on the 17th December 1917 Ghisulal put in an application expressly asking for attachment as provided by O. XXI, r. 54 and O. XXXVIII, r. 7, First Schedule, Civil Procedure Code. The Court thereupon issued the order prayed for in Form No. 24, Appendix E, Civil Procedure Code, and the property was actually attached on the 7th January 1918. O. XXXVIII, r 5, provides that the Court may, if it is satisfied on certain points, direct the defendant to furnish security, to produce and place at the disposal of the Court when required the whole or part of his property or the value of the same or to appear and show cause why he should not furnish security, and may also in the order direct the conditional attachment of the property. Neither had Ghisulal asked for nor did the Court issue any order under this section. Action was asked to be taken and was taken apparently under rule 6. But it was ultra vires, for no order could be passed under this rule until the defendant had been asked to furnish the security as in rule 5 or show cause why he should not furnish it and had failed to do either. The attachment ordered was, therefore, ultra vires and void and the defendant cannot rely upon it to defeat the alienation in favour of the plaintiff. The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Second appeal against a decree of the Court of the Third Temporary Subordinate Judge, Guntur, in Appeal Suit No. 133 of 1919 (Appeal Suit No. 192 of 1919, on the file of the District Court, Guntur), preferred against the decree of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Bapatla, in Original Suit No. 407 of 1917, (Original Suit No. 678 of 1916, on the file of the Court of the Principal District Munsif, Bapatla).

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar, for the Appellant.—The suit was barred. Time runs from the date of the decree against the plaintiff in Original Suit No. 885 of 1909. That decree declared the sale-deed invalid in respect of a moiety of the property and the suit should have been brought within three years from the date of that decree. The cause of action does not arise from the date of dispossession.

Mr. B. Somayya, for the Respondent.—The suit, in effect, was based on the breach of the covenant for title and quiet enjoyment contained in the sale deed. The vendors agree to indemnify the vendee against disputes by gnatis. Article 116 of the Limitation Act applies. See Mahomed Ali Sheriff v Venkatapathi Raju (1).

JUDGMENT.—The only question raised in this second appeal is whether the plaintiff's suit to recover part of the purchase money paid by him in respect of a property purchased by him is barred by limitation. The purchase by the plaintiff was under a sale-deed dated the 1st of October 1905 executed by the defendant and another in favour of the plaintiff. The son of the other vendor filed Original Suit No. 885 of 1909, to set aside the sale so far as the share of his father was concerned and obtained a decree in 1913 for possession of the half share belonging to the other vendor. This suit was filed in 1917. The lower Appellate Court held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover Rs. 300, half the price paid by him, and that the suit was not barred by limitation, as the starting point of limitation was the date of dispossession and that the suit was within three years from that date.

The contention for the appellant is that the suit not having been brought within three years from the date of the decree which declared that the sale-deed in respect of one-half of the property is invalid, is barred by limitation and that the date of dispossession does not give the starting point of limitation. The question is whether this is to be treated as a claim to recover money on account of failure of consideration owing to the vendor having had no title to convey one half of the property or whether it is to be treated as a suit for damages for breach of covenant for title or for breach of covenant for quiet enjoyment. If the suit can be brought under the two latter heads, it is clear that Article 116 of the Limitation Act would apply, the sale-deed having been registered, and the party would have six years and the suit would not, in any event, be barred. The material part of the sale deed, Exhibit A, runs as follows:—" In respect of the above sale Rs. 325 has been received in cash and a promissory-note for Rs. 275 is executed by you in favour of Subbayya out of us in all amounting to Rs. 600 and the sale price has been received in this manner. If there is any dispute in respect of this by Gnatis, Samantas and others, etc., we shall settle them out of our own expense and we shall be bound to carry out this sale without obstruction." In Mahmed Ali Sheriff v. Venkatapathi Raju (1), it was held that a similar covenant in a sale-deed amounted to a covenant for quiet enjoyment and that Article 116 applied to a breach of such covenant. Even assuming that there is no covenant for quiet enjoyment under the document, there is clearly a covenant for title and a breach of that covenant will, under Article 116, gives the plaintiff six years to sue from the date when the covenant is broken. In the view we take it is unnecessary to consider whether if the suit is to be treated as one to recover money on account of failure of consideration. Limitation would run from the date of the decree declaring that one of the plaintiff's vendors had no title or from the date of dispossession, a question on which there is a conflict of authority.

The second appeal fails and is dismissed with costs

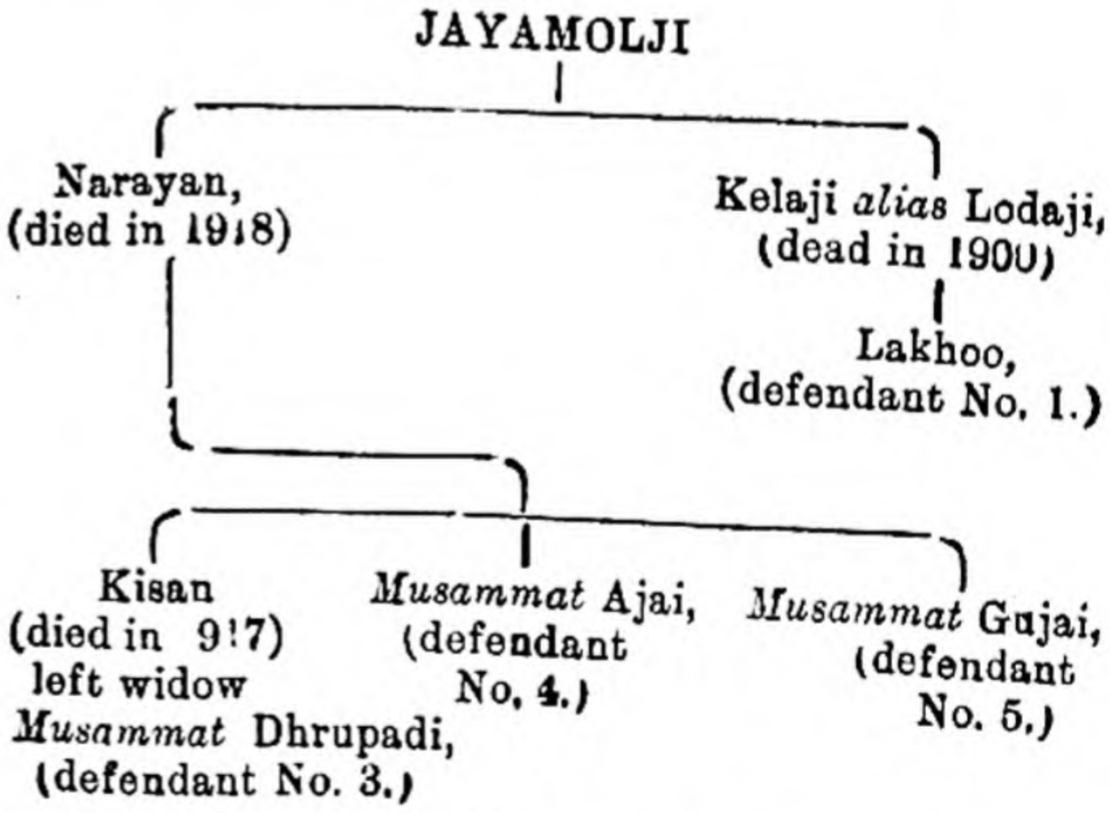
JUDGMENT.—The following genealogical tree helps to explain a part of the case:—



The present case is brought by plaintiff, a minor, by next friend and maternal uncle Govinda. His story is that the field in suit Survey No. 17, pot hissa No. 3 of Shelu Khurd was the property of Narayan, who died in 1918. He had been separate in estate from his brother, Kelaji, for some 35 years at the time of his death. His son, Kisan, having predeceased him, his two daughters, defendants Nos. 4 and 5, succeeded to his estate and they and defendant No 3 sold the field and its crop by a registered sale-deed for Rs. 1,500 on the 19th August 1918. The consideration was paid by plaintiff's father and guardian, Ambadas, who was then alive, but by a mistake of the writer this was not entered in the document which is in the name of the plaintiff. Plaintiff complains that, from the 29th August 1918, defendants Nos. 1 and 2 wrongfully dispossessed him. He asked for a declaration of title and for possession and Rs. 1,000 damages from defendants Nos. 1 and 2; that, further, as by mistake in the sale-deed the field is shown as being situate in Shelu Buzruk while it is really situated at Morza Shelu Khurd, he asked for a correction. Defendants Nos. 3 and 4 admitted plaintiff's allegations and his claim. Defendant No. 3 denied that he was liable for damages. Defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 4 denied that there was any partition between the two brothers, Narayan and Kelaji; that these two and defendant No. 1, son of Kelaji, were all along joint in estate and held possession of the field in suit jointly; that defendant No. 1 is now sole owner of the field by survivorship, and that the crop of 1918-19 was sown by defendant No. 2 as lessee of defendant No. 1 and that these crops were not worth more than Rs. 175. It was contended that the alleged sale in favour of the plaintiff was a fraudulent and bogus transaction; that no consideration has been paid and the plaintiff being a minor was incompetent to purchase a property in his own name as he could not contract, that the next friend, Govinda, got the document fraudulently executed in the name of the plaintiff as a benami transaction in order to bring the present suit. Defendant No. 2 denied liability for damages. Dealing with the plaintiff's sale-deed the Judge of the Trial Court finds that its execution by defendants Nos. 3, 4 and 5 had been duly proved and that consideration passed. It was found that the purchase of the field in suit was not made by the plaintiff's father and natural guardian, Ambadas. There was no omission, therefore, of his name in the document. The sale being to a minor the Judge held, on the authority of Nava-koti Narayana Chetty v. Loyalinga Chetty (1), that the sale in favour of the minor was totally void, a minor being incompetent to contract under the Indian Contract Act. The field was found to have been purchased in the name of Narayan about the year 1898 for Rs. 150 from one Soorajabhan Chandrabhan, and that Narayan and his brother were joint at the time, there being no partition between them, and that Narayan died when in a state of jointness with the first defendant. It was further held that the purchaser of the field from defendants Nos. 3, 4 and 5 was not the plaintiff or his father, Ambadas, but plaintiff's next friend, Govinda. The plaintiff's suit was dismissed. On appeal the District Judge, West Berar, confirms the finding that the sale-deed in favour of a minor was invalid under the authority of Navakoti Narayana Chetty v. Loyalinga Chetty (1). During the pendency of these proceedings, the plaintiff had taken another sale-deed in his name under the guardianship of Govinda, and it was contended before the District Judge that this made the transfer valid, but the Court finds that the purchase was made by Govinda benami in the name of the plaintiff with Govinda's money. The plaintiff was not shown as a minor in the purchase-deed intentionally and, therefore, there was no question of mistake, nor could the document be rectified. As regards the second sale-deed, the Judge thinks that as it was not the basis of this suit and not executed until the case was nearly closed, the plaintiff could not be given a decree on it, and he should be left to file a separate suit. The appeal was disposed of on the point of the minority of the plaintiff, the lower Appellate Court not going into the question whether Narayan and Kelaji were or were not united. In Navakoti Narayana Chetty v. Loyalinga Chetty (1) it was doubtless held that a sale in favour of a minor is void but that decision was overruled in Raghava Charair v. Srinivasa Raghava Chariar (2) where it was held that a mortgage executed in favour of a minor who has advanced the whole of the mortgage money is enforceable by him or by any person on his behalf and the sale to a minor under similar conditions is equally good and in Munni Koer v. Madan Gopal (3 it was held that there was nothing in the law to prevent a minor becoming a transferee of immoveable property and a minor in whose favour a valid deed of sale has been executed is competent to sue for possession of the property conveyed thereby, and that decision was affirmed in Narain Das v. Dhania (4). The High Court at Madras in Muniya Konan v. Perumal Konan (5) comes to a similar conclusion. It is thus clear that the case relied on by both the lower Courts for holding that a sale to a minor is void has been overruled and is no longer good law. A new case has been started for the appellant plaintiff in this Court on the concurrent findings that the plaintiff was a mere benamidar for Govinda. This was not the plaintiff's case in either of the Courts below, for the plaint itself stated that the field had been purchased by Ambadas, the minor plaintiff's father, for him, while Govinda's story is that the consideration for the field was paid by Ambadas, but the concurrent finding of fact must stand, and it must be held that plaintiff was a benamidar for Govinda. On this finding it is contended that plaintiff had the right to sue, and in support of this proposition Gur Narayan v. Sheo Lal Singh (6), Vaitheswara Aiyar v. Srinivasa Raghava Iyengar (7) and Thakur Rohini Singh v. Vishwanath Brahmin (8) are quoted. It is clear that a benamidar can sue. This system under which property is acquired and held in names other than those of the real owner is a common practice in this country and if a benami transaction does not contravene the provisions of law, Courts are bound to give effect to it. It has been held that a benamidar, though he has no beneficial interest in the property, represents in fact the real owner and as far as their relative position is concerned is a mere trustee for him. But it is here contended that as Govinda is the next friend and as, under O. XXXII, r. 4, no next friend's interest can be adverse to that of the minor and, as in the present case, the next friend's interests as regards the field in suit are adverse, the suit in its present form cannot lie, and a decree as benamidar cannot be given to the plaintiff. It is contended that the story of plaintiff being a benamidar changes the nature of the suit. If the minor in the present case is, as he has been held to be, a benamidar, then he holds as a trustee for Govinda and the interests of the minor and Govinda cannot be said to be different. In this view of the law, and looking to the fact that I have found the lower Appellate Court wrong in holding that plaintiff as a minor could not sue, the case must go back to the lower Court for a finding and decision on the other questions raised. That Court must determine whether, in truth, plaintiff's vendors had the power to sell the property and whether Narayan died when in a state of jointness with the first defendant. I remand the case to the lower Appellate Court for retrial with reference to the above remarks. Costs will abide the result.

JUDGMENT.—Defendant No. 1 sold a house to defendant No. 2, plaintiff, son of the vendor, sues to pre empt. The vendee pleaded that the sale did not include the site under the house, and could cut include the site as the vendor was a kamin and a non-proprietor and the site was shamilat abadi deh owned by the vendee and the other proprietors. The lower Courts have given a decree for possession of the house on payment of the sale price, Rs. 100. The vendee appeals, and it is urged that the sale did not and could not include the site, and that the malba is not subject to pre-emption.

For the theory that the malba is not liable to pre-emption reliance is placed on an unpublished ruling of a single Judge, Civil Appeal No. 1925 of 1918, which certainly lays down that the sale of the materials of a house gives no right to a suit for pre-emption, but no reasons for this finding are given. On the other hand, there is a Division Bench ruling Banarsi Das v. Haji Abdul Ghani (1) which holds that a standing building is immoveable property. The house in suit is a standing building in a village, and, following Banarsi Das v. Haji Abdul Ghani (1), I hold that it is village immoveable property and liable to pre-emption, even apart from the site.

As to the site, I need only remark that the sale deed simply mentions the house (makan), and this is what plaintiff sued to pre-empt, and this is what has been decreed. It seems to me quite unnecessary to decide anything about the site. Plaintiff now gets possession and holds on just the same terms as his father did. Whatever the father's rights were now come to the son; he holds those rights and nothing more. So that he cannot say in answer to any claim by the proprietors that he has become the owner of anything more than his father owned by reason of this suit. He simply acquires the rights which his father held. But I see no reason to alter the decree of the lower Courts which is worded simply as a decree for the house, and I dismiss this appeal, but I pass no order as to costs in this Court.

Abatement of appeal—Decree for joint possession of land—Appeal by defendant—Death of one respondent—No substitution in time, effect of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, rr. 4 (1), 11.

Where during the pendency of an appeal preferred by the defendant against a decree for joint possession of land, one of the plaintiffs-respondents dies and his heirs are not substituted within the time allowed by law, the appeal abates not only against the deceased respondent but also against the other respondents as being no longer competent and should be dismissed against all the respondents. The fact that in the plaint the plaintiffs specified their respective shares would make no difference as the mere specification by the plaintiffs that each individual plaintiff's share is so much does not alter the nature of the decree.

Appeals against the decrees of the Subordinate Judge, First Court, Backerganj, dated the 18th of June 191), affirming those of the Munsif, First Court at Ratnakhali, dated the 12th of October 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Basanta Kumar Bose, (with him Babu Bepin Chandra Bose), for the Appellants.—The defendant is the appellant. The appeals arise out of a suit for recovery of possession. First Court decreed. Defendants Nos. 4 and 5 preferred separate appeals. During the pendency of the appeals plaintiff No. 1 died and his heirs having been substituted beyond time the lower Appellate Court held that the appeals had abated as against plaintiff No. 1 and dismissed the appeals entirely. I submit the learned Judge ought to have dismissed the appeal as against plaintiff No. 1 only. The case of Kali Dayal v. Nagendra Nath (1) is distinguishable.

Babu Suresh Chandra Talukdar, for the Respondents.—I submit the appeals are incompetent. The death of the deceased plaintiff altered the complexion of the appeal: Refers to Basir Sheikh v. Fazle Karim (2), Sriram Chandra Naik v. Hridoy Nath Gupta (3) and Kali Dayal v. Nagendra Nath (1). The observation in the last case as to the question of shares is an obiter dictum. The decree being one for joint possession the appeals became imperfectly constituted directly one of the plaintiffs died. I submit the case is exactly in point.

Babu Basanta Kumar Bose replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.

WALMSLEY, J.—The plaintiffs brought a suit to recover possession of some land and in the plaint they specified their respective shares. The first Court decreed the suit. Separate appeals were preferred by the defendant No. 4 and the defendant No. 5 to the lower Appellate Court. After the institution of these appeals, the first plaintiff died. There was delay in substituting his heirs and the learned Judge in the lower Appellate Court held that each of the appeals abated as against the plaintiff No. 1 respondent. When the appeals came up for hearing, the argument was advanced that they were no longer competent and the Judge gave effect to that contentions and dismissed the appeal as against all the respondents. The defendants Nos. 4 and 5 have again preferred these appeals to this Court. On their behalf, it is urged that the learned Judge was wrong. We have been shown the decisions of this Court bearing on the question. Two are referred to in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court, since then another judgment has been delivered in the case of Kali Dayal v. Nagendra Nath (1). In that judgment, most of the cases on the point are reviewed and the effect of the judgment is to show that the decision of the lower Appellate Court is correct. Our attention is drawn, however, to one particular passage to be found on page 43* of this last mentioned report where there is the remark, after reference to one particular case, "no question of shares was in controversy." It is said here that, inasmuch as the plaintiffs have specified their shares, the principle of that ruling does not apply. I fail to see that. It appears to me that the mere specification by the plaintiffs that each individual plaintiff's share is so much does not alter the nature of the decree. The decree remains a decree for joint possession and, therefore, in my opinion, the decision of the lower Appellate Court is correct, and these two appeals are dismissed with costs. We allow only half the usual hearing fee in each case.

SUHRAWARDY, J.—I agree.

RAM AUTAR v. BENI SINGH.

OUDH JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 270 OF 1921.

January 13, 1922.

Present :—Pandit Kanhaiya Lal, J. C.

RAM AUTAR AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS —APPELLANTS

versus

BENI SINGH—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VII, r. 6 —Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 19—Acknowledgment of liability not alleged in plaint—Subsequent reference in rebuttal admissible—Acknowledgment, nature of—Acknowledgment by manager of family, effect of—Mortgage otherwise invalid, if validated by pious obligation—Unregistered sub-mortgage, admissibility of.

Where there is a clear acknowledgment of liability effectual enough to extend the period of limitation, but no mention is made of it in the plaint, it is open to the plaintiff to show in reply to the defence set up that his claim is within time from the acknowledgment referred to and such a plea in rebuttal is not inadmissible under O. VII, r. 6 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 197, col. 1]

An acknowledgment need not specify every legal consequence of the thing acknowledged. From an acknowledgment of a debt follow the legal incidents which flow from the existence of a liability. In fact, an admission by a mortgagor of his liability carries with it an admission of all the remedies to which the mortgagee might be entitled under it. [p. 197, col. 1.]

An acknowledgment by a person as the head and manager of a family is binding upon other members of the family and is sufficient to save limitation as against them.

The doctrine of the pious obligation of sons to pay the father's debts does not validate a mortgage or alienation made by the latter if the same is otherwise invalid. It may, however, support a mortgage if it is made in lieu of antecedent debts recoverable from a family, and a bona fide creditor, in such a case, is not bound to see to the application of the money. [p. 197, col. 2: p. 198, col.]

An unregistered sub-mortgage is not admissible in evidence to prove a lien. [p. 198, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Partabgarh, dated the 10th May 1921, reversing that of the Munsif, Kunda, Partabgarh District, dated the 15th September 1919.

Mr. Kisheshwar Nath Srivastava, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Radha Krishna and Wasi Hasan, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the mortgagee for possession of certain property on the allegation that the defendants, who are the heirs of the original mortgagor, had wrongfully ejected him therefrom in June 1917.

It appears that Madho, the father of the defendants Nos. 1 to 3, made usufructuary mortgage in favour of Beni Singh, the plaintiff-respondent, in lieu of Rs. 200 on the 6th February 1899 (Exhibit 1). The mortgaged property comprised a share in a well and certain muafi plots and groves. The mortgagor did not, however, deliver possession over the mortgaged property. On the same date he executed another mortgage-deed of certain other property in favour of Beni Singh in lieu of Rs. 200 and agreed to deliver possession over the property mortgaged (Exhibit 18) but he did not give possession. That deed provided that if the mortgagor failed to deliver possession, the mortgagee would be entitled to recover the money due to him with interest thereon at 2 per cent. per mensem from the date of the mortgage. On the 31st July 1902 Madho executed a deed of further charge in favour of Beni Singh in lieu of Rs. 100 which was due to the latter on account of interest payable under the above deed (Exhibit 2). This deed of further charge provided that the mortgagor would not be entitled to pay the money due on the said deed until the usufructuary mortgage of the 6th February 1899, first mentioned was redeemed.

In 1911 Beni Singh applied for the entry of his name in the revenue papers in pursuance of the mortgage of the 6th February 1899, now sought to be enforced. He was examined in that case and so was Ram Autar, one of the sons of the mortgagor, who had died meanwhile. Ram Autar admitted having made the mortgage and stated that he had no objection to the name of the mortgagee being entered in the revenue papers in the capacity of a mortgagee. The name of the mortgagee was accordingly entered but according to the finding of the Trial Court he did not succeed in getting possession. The lower Appellate Court considered it unnecessary to determine whether he obtained possession or not.

The question had, however, a material bearing on the plea of limitation raised by the defendants. The Court of first instance found that the suit was barred by limitation; but the lower Appellate Court held that it was within time from the acknowledgments contained in the deed of further charge of the 31st July 1902 and mentioned in the statement of Ram Autar, the head and manager of the family, of the 13th September 1911.

RAM AUTAR v. BENI SINGH.

The learned Counsel for the defendants-appellants contends that the acknowledgments relied on by the lower Appellate Court were ineffectual to extend the period of limitation and should be excluded from consideration because there was no reference made to them in the plaint, as required by O VII, r. 6, of the Code of Civil Procedure. The deed of further charge contained a clear acknowledgment of liability to the mortgage money and the statement made by Ram Autar in the mutation proceeding similarly contained an acknowledgment of the right of the mortgagee to obtain possession under the mortgage. As pointed out in Sukhamoni Chowdhrani v. Ishan Chunder Roy (1), an acknowledgment need not specify every legal consequence of the thing acknowledged. From an acknowledgment of a debt follow the legal incidents, which flow from the existence of a liability. In fact an admission by a mortgagor of his liability under the mortgage carries with it an admission of all the remedies to which the mortgagee might be entitled under it [Basant Singh v. Thakur Rampal Singh (2)]; and the present suit which is within time from the dates of the said acknowledgments cannot be treated as barred by limitation.

The omission to refer to these acknowledgments in the plaint is due to the fact that the plaintiff was setting up a different case altogether. His allegation was that he had been in possession till June 1917; and if that was true, his suit was not brought after the expiry of the period prescribed by the Law of Limitation and he could not, therefore, have claimed exemption from such law on the ground of an acknowledgment. There is a mention of the deed of further charge in the plaint, but there is no mention of the mutation proceeding. It is open, however, to the plaintiff to show, in reply to the defence set up, that his claim was within time in any case from the acknowledgments above referred to and such a plea in rebuttal is not inadmissible under O. VII, r. 6 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

It is further contended that Ram Autar did not make his statement on the 13th September 1911 in his capacity as the head and manager of the family, and that that statement was, therefore, insufficient to save limitation as against the other members of the family. The circumstances in which the statement was made in response to an application made by the mortgagee for the entry of his name in the revenue papers, however, indicates that Ram Autar went on behalf of the family to agree to the mutation of names being effected to save the family from being placed under the necessity of having to find money at once to pay what was due on the mortgage and the deed of further charge. He was the eldest male member of the family at the time. Out of his two brothers, one had just attained majority and the other was then, as he is now, admittedly a minor. The defendants-appellants must, therefore, be held to be bound by the act of the manager in acknowledging the liability and agreeing to the mutation of names being made to ward off an immediate demand from them of the money they owed to the plaintiff.

The question of legal necessity for the mortgage and the deed of further charge has been brushed aside by the lower Appellate Court on the ground that the defendants were under a pious obligation to pay the debts due by their father. The existence of the pious obligation does not, however, validate a mortgage or alienation, if it was otherwise invalid. It may support a mortgage, if it was made in lieu of antecedent debts recoverable from the family. The mortgage of the 6th February 1899 was made in lieu of Rs 200, out of which Rs. 348 were to be applied to the payment of a bond-debt, due by the father of the defendants appellants, Rs. 52 were to be applied to the payment of arrears of revenue, due by him for 1305 Fasli, Rs. 50 were taken for the redemption of certain muafi land, and another sum of Rs. 50 for the redemption of certain groves, which were mortgaged by him with Sheoraj Dube, and the balance was taken to meet the expenses of execution and registration. The muafi land and the groves mortgaged with Sheoraj Dube formed a part of the mortgaged property, conveyed by the mortgage of the 9th February 1899 now in suit. The Court of first instance found that the first two items represented antecedent debts, really due by the mortgagor and the correctness of that finding has not been challenged here. Of the two mortgages held by Sheoraj Dube, one is admitted to have been redeemed by the mortgagor in paragraph 3 of the written statement, filed by the defendants-appellants, thereby securing to the family a common benefit, namely, the recovery of the property, and the redemption of the other was made by the mortgagor in 1905. The mortgagee took care to take back the original mortgage-deed from Sheoraj Dube (Exhibit 4) and further fortified himself by taking a sub-mortgage from him for Rs. 49-8 (Exhibit 3). The sub mortgage is not admissible in evidence to prove a lien, because it was not registered. The fact of redemption is sufficient, however, to give to the plaintiff the right which Sheoraj Dube possessed under his possessory mortgage of the 4th June 1898 under section 74 of Act IV of 1882 to sue for the money, if he was dispossessed as he evidently was, within the last twelve years. The mortgagee had to pay to Sheoraj Dube what the mortgagor had undertaken to pay out of the consideration of the mortgage received by him. If the money was taken for a valid purpose, viz., to pay an antecedent debt, and get back the family property freed from the earlier mortgage, a bona fide creditor like the plaintiff was not bound to see to the application of the money. The identity of the property, comprised in the mortgage redeemed by the plaintiff from Sheoraj Dube, is clear from its description as given in the sub mortgage and the mortgage now sought to be enforced. The sum of Rs. 13 represented the legitimate expenses connected with the execution and registration of the deed of mortgage. The rest of the consideration of the mortgage must be deemed to have been taken to pay antecedent debts. The plaintiff is, therefore, entitled to a decree for Rs. 200 on account of the money due to him on his mortgage of the 6th February 1899 and Rs. 49 8 on account of the mortgage of Sheoraj Dube dated the 4th June 18 8, which he redeemed.

The deed of further charge was executed in lieu of Rs. 100, the whole of which was taken to pay the interest due on the mortgage of the 6th February 1899 (Exhibit 18), which contained a personal covenant for the payment of interest, and the plaintiff is entitled to treat the interest so due as an antecedent debt, which was satisfied, when the deed of further charge was obtained.

It does not appear how the lower Appellate Court has awarded a decree for Rs. 497. The money claimed on the mortgage was Rs. 200 and that on the deed of further charge Rs. 310-4 9. The plaintiff claimed Rs. 49 8 besides on account of the possessory mortgage of Sheoraj Dube redeemed by him, alleging his dispossession from the mortgaged property.

He has filed a cross objection, claiming the last item and damages. He is entitled to the former. The damages have not been proved by him. He has not otherwise challenged the correctness of the amount awarded to him by the lower Appellate Court, though it is difficult to understand how it has been arrived at.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs and the cross-objection allowed with costs: the result being that the plaintiff will be allowed a decree for Rs. 49-8 with proportionate costs here and hitherto and future interest at 6 per cent. per annum from the date of the suit till payment to be recovered from the sale of the property comprised in the mortgage held by Sheoraj Dube, namely, plot No. 954 with the trees standing thereon. The decree for the said amount will be framed in terms of O. XXXIV, r. 4, of the Code of Civil Procedure and six months will be allowed for payment. In regard to the remainder of the claim the decree of the lower Appellate Court will stand confirmed with the costs incurred by the plaintiff-respondent in this appeal.

Appeal from a decree of the Additional Sub-Judge, Akola, dated the 28th July 1921, in Civil Suit No. 181 of 1920.

Messrs M Gupta and G. L. Subhedar, for the Appellants.

Mr. A. V. Khare, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—One Tukaram, son of Rodaji, executed, on 21st March 1914, a mortgage deed in favour of the plaintiffs' firm. This suit is brought on that deed and the plaintiffs claim to recover Rs. 6,148 by conditional foreclosure of the property mortgaged. The issues framed show the points of difference between the parties. They run:—

(1) Whether the mortgage-deed, dated 21st March 1914, is genuine and valid and was it duly and validly attested?

(2) Whether the mortgage-debt was incurred for legal necessity and for purposes binding on defendants?

(3) Whether the field 5/2 was the self-acquired property of defendant No. 1 as alleged?

The lower Court finds that the document sued on was not properly attested; that out of the amount of the mortgage Rs 2,598-2 6 were for legal necessity, and that the field 5/2 was not the self-acquired property of the first defendant, Sampat. The case was dismissed on the ground that the mortgage was not validly attested, it being also held that, under the contract of the mortgage, the plaintiffs could not recover the money.

It is here contended that the finding as to the attestation is erroneous. There are three witnesses on this question. The first is one Anoba. There is no doubt that this witness was present at the Registration Office when the document was registered. The plaintiffs' own Mukhtyar admits that the witness would only attest after receiving the money due to his masters, money to be paid out of the mortgage amount. It is thus likely that his story that when the deed was brought to him it already contained the attestation of Sampat and the execution mark of Tukaram is true. I see no reason why this witness should not be believed. Sampat, the first defendant, and an attesting witness, said that he was not present when his father executed the deed, nor was Anoba. This witness' statement is possibly open to doubt, but the evidence of Anoba (P. W. No. 1) seems to me to settle the point. It is settled law that attestation of a mortgage-deed within the meaning of section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) must be made by the witnesses signing their names after seeing the actual execution of the deed. Mere acknowledgment of his signature by the executant is not sufficient: Shamu Patter v. Abdul Kadir Rowthan (1) and Ajab v. Mangal (2). But even if Anoba's statement is not sufficient to show that the document was not validly attested, there is the deposition of P. W. No. 2, the plaintiffs' own gumastha, who says that one of the alleged attesting witnesses, Sampat, attested the deed before Tukaram made his mark on it. Now, it is clear that an attesting witness is a person who having been personally present at the execution of a document so as to see the executant sign the same, has thereafter subscribed thereon his own name as a memorandum of that fact. I have no hesitation in holding that Sampat in the present case cannot be held to be an attesting witness to the mortgage. An attestation is an act done after the execution, and until the deed has been executed there can be no attestation.

The third ground of the memorandum of appeal has not been argued. The result is that this appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Limitation, computation of—Appeal, limitation for—Appellant, if entitled to deduct period during which review application pending

In computing the period of limitation prescribed for preferring an appeal, the appellant is entitled to deduct the period during which an application for review was pending.

Appeals against the decrees of the District Judge, 24 Parganas, dated the 12th of June 1919, affirming those of the Assistant Settlement Officer of Alipur, dated the 24th of March 1919.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Girija Prasanna Sanyal, for the Appellant.—These appeals arise out of proceedings under section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for correction of entry in the Record of Rights. First Court decreed On appeal they were dismissed on the ground of limitation. The question is whether in computing limitation, the period taken up in prosecuting a review is to be deducted or not. The Judge held that time cannot be deducted and seems to think that section 14 of the Indian Limitation Act would apply. He did not refer to section 5 at all According to the recent Privy Council decision in Brij Indar Singh v. Kanshi Ram (1), I submit I am entitled to deduct the time taken up in review.

JUDGMENT.—The appeal in this case raises the question whether the appeal to the lower Appellate Court was barred or not. In our opinion it was not time barred as the appellant was entitled to deduct the period during which the application for review was pending.

We accordingly decree these appeals, set aside the decrees of the lower Appellate Court and direct that the appeals be reheard by the lower Appellate Court.

As no one appears for the respondents in these three appeals we make no order as to costs of these appeals.

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Second Court of Howrah in Hooghly, dated the 19th of September 1919, reversing that of the Munsif, First Court at Howrah, dated the 30th of April 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Rupendra Kumar Mitter (with him Babu Mrityunjoy Chatterjee), for the Appellant.—The plaintiff is the appellant. The appeal arises out of a suit for partition. The property originally belonged to one Ramnath who died in 1900 and after his death his sadarbari was sold to the defendants by his heirs. On 19th November 1901 the defendants entered into possession of the sadarbari by virtue of a kobala executed by three out of four heirs of Ramnath. The sadarbari was not fit to be occupied and that it was never occupied has been found by the first Court. That finding has not been reversed on appeal. The other heir transferred to the plaintiff his share of the property on 26th April 1916. The present suit for partition was filed on 27th August 1917. Both Courts found that after purchase the defendant blocked up entrance to the sadarbari. There is also a finding that the son of the last transferor was a minor and he never went to that bari. The defendant went into possession in 1901 as a co-sharer. The finding of the Appellate Court is not sufficient to dispose of the question of ouster. Refers to Jagannath Marwari v. Chandni Bibi (1), Jacobs v. Seward (2), Jogendra Nath Rai v. Baladeo Das (3). In the last case it has been held that in order to constitute ouster the possession must be of a continuous character and adverse to the co-sharers. Refers to Coomea v. Appuhamy (4).

Dr. Dwarkanath Mitter, (with him Babu Haradhan Chatterjee), for the Respondent.—The question of adverse possession is a question of fact and the Subordinate Judge has come to a conclusive finding on the point.

[CHATTERJEA, J.—If he had no knowledge would the mere fact of the door having been blocked up constitute adverse possession.]

Of course, on the question of knowledge it would be presumed that he had no knowledge in view of the fact that the place was very near to Calcutta. Refers to Hardit Singh v. Gurmukh Singh (5). In the present case the co-sharer was a mere stranger. Refer to Ram Lakhi v. Durga Charan Sen (6). There is a difference of opinion as to which Article of the Indian Limitation Act would apply —Art. 13 or 144. I submit the learned Judge was justified in coming to the conclusion that possession was adverse having regard to the length of time which elapsed since the blocking up of the entrance to the sadarbari and the notoriety of the fact. The appeal is wholly concluded by findings of fact.

JOGENDRA NATH MUKHERJEE v. RAJENDRA NATH BHATTACHARJEE.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for partition of a house described as the sadarbari which originally belonged to one Haridhan and his co-sharer.

The plaintiff purchased the 4 annas share, which belonged to Haridhan, on the 26th April 1916, the defendant having purchased the remaining shares so far back as 19th November 1901 from the other co-sharers. After his purchase, the defendant blocked up the sadar door of the sadarbari.

The plaintiff brought the suit for partition in 1917, and the defendant pleaded that the claim was barred by limitation by reason of adverse possession on his part for 12 years.

The Court of first instance was of opinion that the possession of the defendant was not adverse to Haridhan and that the claim of the plaintiff, therefore, was not barred by limitation.

On appeal, the learned Subordinate Judge held that the possession was adverse and that his claim was barred by limitation.

The plaintiff has appealed to this Court.

It is contended that the facts found do not amount to an ouster by a co-sharer.

On behalf of the respondent, it is contended that the question of adverse possession is a question of fact and that the finding of the lower Appellate Court on the point cannot be considered by this Court in second appeal.

The question of adverse possession, however, is a mixed question of fact and law. The facts found by the Judge must, of course, be accepted, but the conclusion drawn from them, namely, whether the possession was adverse or not, is a question of law and can be considered by this Court [see the cases of Lachmeswar Singh v. Manowar Hossain (7), Ramgopal v. Shamskhatun (8), Chintamoni Pramanik v. Hriday Nath (9) and Balaram Guria v. Syama Charan Mondal (10).]

With regard to the question of limitation, the learned Subordinate Judge, as stated above, found that the defendant was in adverse possession since he blocked the entrance to the sadarbari. There is no doubt that Haridhan was a co-sharer and in order to prove dispossession of one co-sharer by another, it must be shown that there was exclusion or ouster to the knowledge of the former.

It is contended by the learned Pleader for the respondent that the principle cannot apply to a stranger who is not a member of the family and we are referred to the case of Ram Lakhi v. Durga Charan Sen (6).

The question there was whether a person who had purchased a property from a member of a joint Hindu family was entitled to the benefit of Art. 127 of the Limitation Act, and it was answered in the negative. One of the Judges, Garth, C. J., held that Art. 136 would apply to the case, while the other Judge, Ghose, J., held that Art 144 was the Article applicable.

The question of adverse possession as between co sharers, however, does not appear to have been considered in that case.

We have also been referred to the case of Varada Pillai v. Jeevarathnammal (11), where the Judicial Committee, referring to the rule that the possession of one of several joint tenants or tenants-in-common is not adverse to the others so as to prevent the Statutes of Limitation from affecting them, observed: "Whether the rule is applicable to sharers in an unpartitioned agricultural village in India not holding their shares as members of a joint family, it is unnecessary for the purpose of the present case to decide." There is no expression of opinion by their Lordships that the principle was not applicable and when their Lordships expressly stated that it was unnecessary for the purpose of that case to decide the question, it cannot be contended that the principle is inapplicable.

It is true that in the case of Corea v. Appuhamy (4) and in some other cases, the question arose as between persons who had at one time formed members of a family. But the principle is not confined to such cases only. The principle does not depend upon whether the parties are members of a joint family but rests upon the ground that they are co-owners, and is applicable to all cases of co-owners. In the case of Balaram Guria v. Syama Charan Mondal (10), both the plaintiff and the defendants were strangers who purchased from the members of a joint family and the plaintiff's vendor was not in possession for 30 years. The principle is, that the possession of one co-owner is the possession of all for the purpose of limitation. No doubt, the sole possession of one co-owner for a very long period may, having regard to other circumstances, show exclusion or ouster. The Judicial Committee in the case of Varada Pillai v. Jeev ruthnammal (11) observed: "The limits of the rule were defined in Culley v. Doe d. Taylerson (12) as follows: 'Generally speaking, one tenant-in-common cannot maintain an ejectment against another tenant in common because the possession of one tenant-in-common is the possession of the other, and to enable the party complaining to maintain an ejectment, there must be an ouster of the party complaining; but where the claimant, tenant-in-common, has not been in the participation of rents and profits for a considerable length of time and other circumstances concur, the Judge will direct the Jury to take into consideration whether they will presume that there has been an ouster...'."

The question was also considered in Doe d. Fisher v. Prosser (13), Banlachhya v. Shriniwasacharya (14), Gungadhar v. Parashram (15) and in our Court. The circumstances which should be taken into consideration were pointed out in the case of Aysnessa Bibi v. Sheikh Iuf (16). See also Jagannath Marwari v. Chandni Bibi (1).

It is contended on behalf of the respondent that, having regard to the length of time which has elapsed since the defendant blocked up the entrance to the sadarbari and to the notoriety attending on the closing of the door to the entrance, the Court below was justified in coming to the conclusion that the possession of the defendant was adverse. But the learned Subordinate Judge has not considered the question whether Haridhan had direct knowledge of the blocking of the sadar door or that there were circumstances, from which one could impute knowledge to him.

There can be no dispossession by one joint tenant in the absence of an assertion of a hostile title by him to the knowledge of the other joint tenants sought to be excluded from the joint tenancy: and if no notice is given to the co sharer of the denial of his right, the occupant must make his possession so visibly hostile and notorious and so apparently exclusive and adverse as to justify the inference of knowledge on the part of the co owner sought to be ousted and of laches if he fails to discover and assert his rights: see Jagannath Marwari v. Chandni Bibi (1) and Joynarain Sen v. Suchitra Debya (17) where the question is fully discussed.

The learned Pleader for the respondent lays much stress upon the fact that the defendant blocked the entrance in 1901 and that the suit was not brought until 1917. But Haridhan was a minor for a greater part of this period and did not attain majority until 1911. It is also found that he did not go to Andul where the property is situated ever since the defendant purchased the property.

We think that the Court must consider whether, having regard to all the circumstances, knowledge of Haridhan of the exclusion can be inferred.

The case must accordingly go back to the lower Appellate Court in order that the question may be considered and the case disposed of according to law. It will be in the discretion of that Court to take further evidence on the question of knowledge.

Costs to abide the result.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 1547 OF 1919.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 43, applic.

SUKHADAMOYI DASI v. ATUL CHANDRA ROY.

cability of—Erroneous representation—Question of fact —Appeal, second.

Before advantage can be taken of the provisions of section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act it must be shown that there was an erroneous representation. Whether there was such representation or not is a question of fact and an inference drawn by the lower Appellate Court with regard to it, being an inference of fact must be accepted by the High Court in second appeal. [p. 205, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Burdwan, dated the 22nd April 1919, modifying that of the Munsif First Court at that place dated the 26th March 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Sarat Chandra Roy Choudhury (with him Babu Pramathanath Bandopadhya), for Appellant.—The plaintiff is the appellant. The appeal arises out of a suit for declaration of her title to, and recovery of, possession in a certain tank. The First Court granted a decree in respect of 8 annas share of the tank. On appeal that has been affirmed. My first point is with regard to plaintiff's title. There was a mortgage in respect of 16 annas in plaintiff's favour on 13th September, 1892. On 10th December 1897 one Krishna purchased. So far as Drabomoyi's share is concerned, the question is whether Krishna is entitled to 8 annas on Drabomoyi's death. The Judge thinks that section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act does not apply because there was no misrepresentation and also no subsisting mortgage at the time of sale. I submit that is wrong. As soon as the purchaser comes to know of the contractee's title, he is entitled to claim it. I have become entitled to 8 annas on Drabomoyi's death. I submit section 43 applies. The cases in Jadu Bans Upadhiya v. Sheo it Singh (1) and Chakrapani Nandi v. Gyamoni Dasi (2) are distinguishable. There is nothing to show that I had knowledge at the time of the mortgage. If section 43 applies to a sale, it applies to a mortgage also. The decision in Jadu Bans Upadhiya v. Sheo it Singh (1) was given by a Judge sitting singly and is not binding on you. The mortgage decree was for Rs. 76 and the sale certificate was for Rs. 60. I submit the proceeds did not satisfy the mortgage. Hence the mortgage must be taken to have been subsisting. The next question is whether the estoppel continues after the sale of mortgaged properties. Sukhoda did not acquire any interest by virtue of the kobala. The case in Kishori Pal v. Shi h Bhuchai Bhuiya (3) does not apply. There was no consideration for the kobala. The learned Judge has entirely misconceived the facts of the case. Defendants Nos. 1-3 claim through their mother. The other defendants claim through Sukhoda. I submit they are estopped from questioning my title.

Babu Dwarkanath Chakrabartty (with him Babus Gopal Chandra Das, Atul Chandra Gupta and Sukhamoy Chatterjee), for the Respondents.—This appeal fails on the ground that the plaintiff has no title to 8 annas. The findings conclude the point. Plaintiff claims on the ground of auction purchase, when the property really belonged to Drabomoyi who had already transferred her interest in 1893 i.e. is property to Sukhoda. Therefore, how could the mortgage sale affect any right of Drabomoyi in the property. A reversionary interest is not transferable. In the plaint no question of section 43 was raised. The finding is that there was no misrepresentation. Then as regards the subsistence of the mortgage, a sale extinguishes the mortgage. Refers to Het Ram v. Shadi Ram (4), Matru Mal v. Durga Kunwar (5) and Bajrangi v. Manokarn ka Bakhsh Singh (6). I submit the suit should fail as plaintiff could not make out both.

Babu Sarat Chandra Roy Choudhury replied in brief.

Babu Biraj Mohan Majumdar, for the Deputy Registrar.

to and recovery of possession or confirmation of her possession in a certain tank. She has been successful in the First Court in respect of 8-annas share of the tank and has appealed in respect of the 8 annas share to which her claim has been dismissed by the lower Appellate Court.

A genealogical table showing the principal parties in this litigation will be found in Schedule kha of the plaint which is translated and printed at page 11 of the paper-book. The tank in suit originally belonged to Swarup Chandra Roy. A half share descended to Anup Chandra Roy and the other half share to Jahuri and Biswanath. It is now undisputed that the plaintiff has obtained Jahuri and Biswanath's share. We are only concerned with the share which descended to Anup. The plaintiff's case as now made out is that Jahuri and Biswanath executed a mortgage by which they purported to transfer 16-annas share in the tank to one Kristo Chandra Dutt. Kristo Chandra Dutt brought suit on his mortgage and in execution of that decree purchased the mortgaged property and then the plaintiff purchased half of the tank from Kristo Chandra Dutt

It is conceded that in order to establish a title to this half share of the tank the plaintiff must rely on section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act, that is to say, that though Jahuri and Biswanath had no interest in the tank where (sic) they executed the mortgage in favour of Kristo Chandra Dutt they subsequently as reversioners succeeded to Anup's share on the death of his widow Drabomoyi. This contention that the plaintiff claiming through the mortgagee is entitled to the benefit of this accession of interest to the mortgagors on behalf of the plaintiff must fail on account of the finding of fact arrived at by the lower Appellate Court. Before advantage can be taken of the provisions of section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act it must be shown that there was an erroneous representation. Whether there was such representation or not is a question of fact and on this question the finding of the lower Appellate Court is perfectly clear. He finds that "there is no case of misrepresentation by Jahuri and Biswanath in the matter". It is contended that in coming to this conclusion the learned Subordinate Judge has misunderstood paragraph 5 of the plaint. There is no error in what he says with reference to that paragraph and the inference he has drawn from that statement is one which he might legitimately draw. It is an inference of fact which we must accept in second appeal.

There is also another finding which is fatal to the plaintiff's case and that is that before her death Darbomoyi, the widow of Anup, sold her interest with the consent of the reversioners. That being so there was nothing to go to Jahuri and Biswanath as reversioners to feed the estoppel if we had held that section 43 was applicable to the facts of the case.

Taking this view of the case the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs to defendants Nos. 1 to 8 and 9 and 10 We allow one set of costs to these defendants.

CHHATTAR SINGH AND OTHERS—DECREE-HOLDER OPPOSITE PARTY—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 148—Decree for possession subject to payment of certain amount —Time for making payment fixed—Decree-holder joining Army before expiry of time—Extension of time for payment Indian Soldiers (Litigation) Act (IX of 1918), ss. 5, 6, 7, 11, application of.

A Court has no power to extend the time allowed by a decree for the payment of money under section 148 of the Code of Civil Procedure If the decree provides for the payment of a certain sum of money on or before a certain date and specifies the penalty which will attach to non-payment, the enforcement of that penalty cannot be delayed or dispensed with by any order or direction issued in derogation of the decree. [p. 21, col 2 p. 20, col. 1.]

A decree was passed in favour of C and M entitling them to get possession of certain property in terms of a compromise subject to their paying a certain sum in Court to the credit of the defendants on or before a certain date. On their failure to do so the suit was to stand dismissed. Before the time for payment had expired, C. joined the Army and in order to protect himself against the expiry of the period allowed him by the decree, a certificate under section 5 of Act IX of 1918 was sent at his instance to the Court which passed the decree, stating that the time allowed to him for payment should be extended till his return from the War:

Held, (i) that there was no proceeding pending before the Court at the time C joined the Army and that section 5 did not apply; [p. 2 6, col 1.]

(ii) that the period of payment having been fixed not by any law for the time being in force but by the decree itself which was passed in accordance with the compromise, section 11 of the Act was also not applicable and the Court could not interfere with the operation of the decree or alter the condition prescribed. Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Gonda, dated the 22nd August 1921, confirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Gonda, dated the 30th October 1920.

Mr. Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava, for the Appellants.

Mr. Mohammad Wasim, for Respondents, Nos. 1 and 2.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from an order, disallowing certain objections filed by the judgment-debtors to the execution of a decree. The decree in question was passed on the 27th March 1917, in favour of Chhattar Singh and Mahadeo Singh, of whom the latter was a minor under the guardianship of his mother, Musammat Mulha. By virtue of it the decree-holders were entitled to get possession of certain property in terms of a compromise subject to their paying Rs. 2,500 in Court to the credit of the defendants on or before the last day of Jeth 1325 Fasli. It directed that if the money aforesaid was not so paid the suit shall stand dismissed.

The time allowed for payment of the above amount was to have expired on the 24th June 1918, but before that date Chhattar Singh, one of the decree-holders, was enrolled in the Army and eventually placed under War conditions. It is stated by Mr. Wasim on behalf of the respondents that Chhattar Singh joined the Army on the 8th November 1917, that he left Bombay for Aden with his Unit on the 22nd March 1918 and that he returned, except for a short period of leave for a month, after he got his discharge on the 30th September 1920.

After he joined the Army, he took steps to protect himself against the expiry of the period allowed to him by the decree for the payment of the money due to the defendants, and a certificate under section 5 of the Indian Soldiers (Litigation) Act (IX of 1918) was sent at his instance to the Court which passed the decree on the 25th January 1919, stating that he was enrolled for the 7th Rajputs and despatched to Benares on the 8th November 1917, and that the time allowed to him by the Subordinate Judge of Gonda for the payment of Rs. 2,500 in Suit No. 144 of 1916, ie Chhattar Singh and Mahadeo Sinah plaintiffs v. Badal and others defendants, should under that section be extended till his return from War. The order of the Subordinate Judge thereon was that the parties should be informed.

After his return to British India on leave, Chhattar Singh and Musammat Mulha, acting as the next friend of Mahadeo Singh, sold the property comprised in the decree to the respondents and left Rs. 2,500 out of the consideration with them for payment to the defendants in pursuance of the decree. The respondents deposited the said money and applied for possession, but were opposed by the judgment-debtors, whose contention was that the deposit was made too late and that the sale deed did not entitle the transferees to apply for execution or to obtain possession of the property comprised in the decree. That objection was disallowed by the learned Subordinate Judge and his order has been upheld by the lower Appellate Court,

The question for determination in this appeal is, whether the certificate granted by the Deputy Commissioner of Gonda, under section 5 of Act IX of 1918, had the effect of extending the period allowed by the decree for the payment of the money directed to be paid to the defendants. As pointed out in Bachchu Lal v. Raja Ram (1) and Niranjan Singh v. Jagan Nath (2) the Court has no power to extend the time allowed by a decree for the payment of money under section 148 of the Code of Civil Procedure. If the decree provides for the payment of a certain sum of money on or before a certain date and specifies the penalty which will attach to the non payment, the enforcement of that penalty cannot be delayed or dispensed with by any order or direction issued in derogation of the decree. In other words, if it provides that the right of the decree-holder to obtain possession shall be extinguished, in case a certain condition is not carried out within a certain period, that right becomes extinct on the failure to comply with that condition and cannot be revived by any consequent act of the Court or of the party at fault. Sections 6 and 7 of Act IX of 1918 lay down that if any Civil or Revenue Court has reason to believe that any party to any proceeding pending before such Court is an Indian Soldier, serving under War conditions, the Court shall, on the receipt of a certificate from the prescribed authority, postpone the proceeding as against such soldier for the prescribed period, or, if no period has been prescribed, for such period as it thinks fit. Section 2 defines a proceeding to include a suit and an appeal. Section 11 prescribes that in computing the period of limitation prescribed by the Indian Limitation Act, 1903, or by any other law for the time being in force for any suit, appeal or application to any Civil or Revenue Court, in which the plaintiff, appellant or applicant is an Indian Soldier, the time during which such soldier has been serving under War conditions since the 4th August 1914 shall be excluded.

(1) 19 Ind. Cas. 347; 16 O. C. 5.
(2) 28 Ind. Cas. 862; 18 O. C. 58.

There was no proceeding, however, pending at the time when Chhattar Singh joined the Army or while he was serving under War conditions. The suit had already been decided and a decree passed, which required him to pay a certain amount within a certain date. The decree could have been executed only after such payment. The time fixed for payment was definite and not capable of being altered by any order of the Court or by a direction under Act IX of 1918. If the money had been paid, the decree for possession could have been executed at any time within three years from the date of Chhattar Singh's return, so far as his interests were concerned. Not having been so paid, the decree for possession became inoperative, or, in other words, was transformed into a decree for dismissal in consequence of the failure to comply with the condition prescribed It was open to the Court under section 5 to have postponed any proceeding which was pending, but it could not have interfered with the operation of the decree or altered the condition prescribed by it so as to permit a suspension of its operation or a postponement of the condition till the expiry of six months after the close of the War.

Section 11 of the Act is not applicable, because the period of payment was here fixed not by any law for the time being in force but by the decree itself which was passed in accordance with a compromise. The penalty became due as soon as the payment was not made. Section 13 of the Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1903) also does not help the decree-holders, because it is confined in its application to the period of limitation prescribed for a suit. The transferees have, therefore, acquired no right by virtue of their purchase.

The appeal is allowed and the application for execution filed by the transferees will stand dismissed with costs throughout.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the decree-holder against an order of dismissal made on an application for execution of a decree. The decree was made by consent of parties on the 25th June 1915. The first application for execution was made on the 24th June 1916. Thereupon a writ of attachment was issued. The writ was returned unserved and on the 4th August 1916 the Court directed a fresh attachment to issue in the following terms: "The decree-holder is to file process and process-fees within five days." This order was carried out. But on the very next day, the judgment-debtor filed a petition under O. XXI, r. 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to the effect that the decree had been satisfied out of Court and, consequently, no execution could issue on the basis thereof. This objection was numbered as a separate case. The two cases were adjourned from time to time and on the 9th December 1916 the objection case as well as the execution case came up for consideration. The objector applied for further time but the Court refused adjournment on the ground that the case was already very old. The Pleader for the objector thereupon stated that he had no further instructions. The objection case was consequently dismissed for default. We find thereafter the following entry in the order-sheet: "The Pleader for the decree-holder has no objection to his case being dismissed provided he gets his costs. The execution case is dismissed for default. The decree-holder will get his costs." Subsequently, on the 27th November 1919 the present application was made. The judgment debtor objected that the application was barred by limitation inasmuch as it had been presented more than three years after the 24th June 1916 when the previous application for execution had been made. We are of opinion that this contention should have been treated as unsustainable. It is plain that the execution proceedings which had been initiated on the 24th June 1916 had been suspended by reason of the objection taken by the judgment debtor. During the period the objection remained under consideration of the Court, execution could not obviously proceed. As soon as the objection was abandoned on the 9th December 1916, it became the duty of the Court to proceed with the application for execution. The decree-holder had done every thing that he was required to do to enable the Court to proceed with the case. He had filed processes and had paid process-fees as directed on the 4th August 1919. The order for dismissal made on the 9th December 1916 must accordingly be treated as equivalent to an order for striking off the case or removing it from the file for the convenience of the Court: Kishen Lal v. Charat Singh (1), Puddomonee Dossee v. Roy Muthooranath Chowdhry (2), Peary Lal Sinha v. Chandi Charan Sinha (3), Dand Ali Shah v. Ram Prasad (4), Yakub Ali v. Durga Prasad (5). In these circumstances, the principle applicable is that stated in the case of Madhab Moni Dasi v. Pamela Lambert (6). "An application for execution of a decree may be treated as one in continuation or revival of a previous application, similar in scope and character, the consideration of which has been interrupted by the intervention of objections and claims subsequently proved to be groundless or has been suspended by reason of an injunction or like obstruction." In support of this view reliance may be placed on the decision of the Judicial Committee in Shaikh Qamaruddin Ahmad v. Jawahir Lal (7) which has been recently applied in Rameshwar Singh Bahadur (Maharajah of Darbhanga) v. Homeshwar Singh (8).

We are of opinion, therefore, that this appeal must be allowed. The order of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and the case is sent back to the Court of first instance in order that the execution may proceed.

The decree-holder will get his costs throughout. We assess the hearing fee in this Court at one gold mohur.

ENAYAT AHMAD AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS, SHAHABUDDIN AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS NOS. 2 AND 3—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), O. XXIII, r. 3, Sch. II, paras. 20, 21—Arbitration without intervention of Court—Award, application to file—Compromise modifying award—Court, power of, to pass decree in terms of compromise—Appeal.

Where after an application under paragraph 20 of Schedule II to the Civil Procedure Code, for filing an award made without the intervention of the Court has been made, the parties enter into a compromise, the effect of which is to modify the award, it is not illegal or ultra vires for the Court to pass a decree in terms of the award as modified by the compromise [p. 211, col. 1]

(Case-law considered.)

Except in so far as such a decree is in excess of, or not in accordance with, the modified award, an appeal against the decree is not competent. [p. 216, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Tahsil Mohanlalganj, Lucknow, dated the 9th August 1921.

Mr. Zahur Ahmad, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Haidar Husain and Mukand Behari Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

DANIELS, A. J. C.—(December 14, 1921).—Except in one small particular to be mentioned presently, there are no merits in this appeal. Certainly there are no grounds of equity or justice in the appellant's favour. He is seeking on a highly technical plea to evade the effect of a compromise freely entered into by himself. The facts are these.

The parties had a dispute about certain property. They referred the matter privately to the decision of four arbitrators. The arbitrators made an award. Certain of the parties who are described as the plaintiffs in these proceedings applied under paragraph 20 of the Second Schedule, Civil Procedure Code, to have the award filed. Objections were lodged by the defendants. It appears that after the making of the award one Sahibdin had obtained a decree against the estate. Before the learned Subordinate Judge the parties filed a compromise providing for the payment of this decree out of certain sums awarded by the arbitrators and also saying that the award should be sent back to the arbitrators to make up the final account between the parties. The original award had settled the rights of the parties but had not worked out the details of the account. The learned Subordinate Judge might have passed a decree at once in terms of this compromise. If he had done so it is conceded that the decree would not have been open to attack. Instead of doing so he sent the compromise to the umpire to ask him to make the final distribution. The umpire declined to do this. By that time disputes had arisen and the defendants wanted to resile from the compromise. The learned Subordinate Judge then proceeded to do what he should have done in the first instance, namely, to make a decree in terms of the award. He calls it, however, a preliminary decree and this is the only point in which his judgment is open to question.

A preliminary objection is taken that no appeal lies, the decree having been a decree passed by the Court with the consent of parties within the meaning of section 96, Civil Procedure Code. In the compromise the parties prayed the Court to pass a decree in terms of the compromise. It is admitted that if the Court had passed a decree then it would have been a consent decree. It seems mere hair-splitting to argue that because the defendants afterwards withdrew their consent section 96 does not apply. The parties had given their consent to the decree being passed and one party alone was not at liberty arbitrarily to withdraw. If O. XXIII, r. 3, applies to the case the matter is perfectly clear. The case having been adjusted by a lawful agreement or compromise, the Court was bound to pass a decree in accordance therewith and a decree so passed is not open to attack. The appellant has argued that the compromise cannot be treated as lawful, because, according to him, the Court had no power under paragraph 20 of the Second Schedule to modify the award. This is mixing up two entirely distinct matters. Whether or not the Court had power to pass a decree of a particular kind is one question. The right of the parties to enter into a compromise on the matters in dispute between them is quite another. It has not been suggested that there was anything unlawful or improper in the actual terms of the compromise and the compromise was, therefore, clearly a lawful compromise within the meaning of O. XXIII, r. 3. The difficulty as to the application of O. XXIII arises from the language of paragraph 20 of the Second Schedule which says that an application to file an award "shall be numbered and registered as a suit between the applicant as plaintiff and the other parties as defendants." This language leaves it uncertain how far it is to be deemed to be a suit for the purpose of applying O. XXIII. O. XXIII, r. 2, has been applied by the Calcutta High Court in Gauri Shankar v. Maida Koer (1). Other cases on the same side are collected in the judgment of Mr. Justice Fawcett in Manilal Motilal v. Gokaldas Rowji (2). There is also authority of the the Bombay High Court in Harakhbai v. Jamnabai (3) for the view that the words in section 89 of the Code, which says that, save as is otherwise provided by "any other law for the time being in force," references to arbitration should be governed by the Second Schedule, are wide enough to save the provisions of O. XXIII, which, though contained in the same Code as the Schedule, are not a part of it. This view was, however, dissented from by Macleod, C. J., in Manilal Motilal v. Gokaldas Rowji (2). I am disposed to agree with the view of Macleod, C. J. as to the interpretation of section 89, but it is not necessary to call this section in aid. There is nothing in the Second Schedule forbidding a compromise or adjustment. It is merely that the Schedule says nothing about it It is quite possible to hold without calling in section 89 that the policy of the Legislature in directing that applications of this kind shall be registered and filed as suits carries with it as a necessary consequence the right of the parties to enter into a compromise. Even if O. XXIII, rule 3, were not strictly applicable I should still hold with the Punjab High Court in Dwarka Das v. Krishan Kishore (4) that where all the parties are agreed as to some modification of the original award it is quite open to them to embody that modification in a compromise and ask the Court to pass a decree in terms of the compromise. I agree with those authorities which lay down that the Court has no power under paragraph 20 of the Schedule to remit an award for re-consideration, but this is quite a different thing from giving effect to a modification embodied in a compromise to which all the parties have consented. I cannot see that there is anything illegal or ultra vires in giving effect to an agreement of this nature.

It has been suggested that section 96 (3) only applies when the decree was one which the Court could legally pass. This may depend upon the nature and extent of the illegality. If a Court had no jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the suit at all, as for instance if a Revenue Court attempted to pass a decree in a purely Civil Court matter, it may well be that the decree even though passed by consent would be a nullity, but where the Court is seized of the subject-matter of the suit and the allegation merely is that the decree contravenes some provision of law other considerations would apply. It has been held, for instance, by the Privy Council in Raja of Killikota v. Chaitana Sahu (5) that no appeal lies from a consent decree even though the suit was really barred by limitation. It will also be noticed that the restriction suggested is not to be found in the language of the section. The object of the section is to prevent the parties doing exactly what the appellant is doing in this case, namely, attacking what they have themselves agreed to. The only illegality alleged in this case is that the Court had no power to modify the award but could only either file it or reject it. The modification was in fact made not by the Court but by the parties, but even if I accept the appellant's argument on this point I should still be disposed to hold that the decree was a consent decree from which no appeal lies.

The only point in which I think the Court below has erred is in calling its decree a preliminary decree. This means that if the arbitrator refused to make up the account the Court will proceed to enter into the question of account itself. It has been pointed out in the course of the argument that the application to file the award was made on a Court fee of eight annas only and that the only adjudication to which this fee entitles the parties is an adjudication whether the award has been validly made. If the parties require an adjudication on questions of fact which the award left undetermined they must file a suit for that purpose.

I would, therefore, modify the decree of the Court below by striking out the words "preliminary decree for partition" and substituting the words "decree under paragraph 21 of the Second Schedule of the Code of Civil Procedure read with O. XXIII, r. 3 of the same Code." This modification will not be affected by the preliminary objection as it was no part of the compromise that the decree should be a preliminary decree. As my finding is in favour of the respondents on the main question at issue I would allow them their costs in both Courts.

DANIELS, A. J. C.—(January 17, 1922). —I was under the impression that I had made it clear in my order of 14th December in this case that as the decree of the Court below was declared not to be a preliminary decree, no further proceedings could be taken in the case except by way of execution. It has been suggested to me, however, that my order is capable of a different interpretation, and, therefore, to prevent misapprehension and by way of correction of an accidental omission under section 152 of the Code of Civil Procedure, I would add to the decree to be passed in the case the words: "That portion of the partition of 30th May 1921 which runs 'the award be sent to the arbitrators with the request that they, having made the amendment as above, should state the amount found due to each person on calculation and a decree absolute be passed in accordance therewith' will not be treated as forming part of the decree."

In my view the application of 30th May contains two prayers:—

(1) That the award be modified and paragraphs 1 and 2 of the petition of compromise be embodied in the decree.

(2) That the award be sent to the arbitrators to calculate the amount due to each person and that a decree absolute be passed in accordance therewith.

In my view the Court was perfectly entitled to give effect to the first of these requests by passing a decree in terms of the award as modified by consent. The second prayer was an additional prayer altogether outside the terms of the award and was an application to the Court to do something which the Court had no power to do.

KANHAIYA LAL, J. C.—(January 17, 1922). —This is an appeal from a preliminary decree prepared in accordance with an award as modified by a compromise filed by the parties. The parties claim to be the heirs of Hakim Anwar Ahmad, and the dispute between them in regard to the distribution of the estate was referred to the arbitration of certain persons by an agreement executed by them on the 14th June 1920. That agreement provided that the distribution of the estate was to be effected in accordance with the Muhammadan Law and that the award was to be made within three months.

On the 13th September 1920 the arbitrators made an award, determining the shares to which each of the contending parties was entitled and prescribing the manner in which the debts and liabilities due by the estate were to be discharged. The award also stated that the jewellery, held by the mother of Hakim Fazal Ahmad, was to be treated as her property and excluded from partition and that the room in which Hakim Anwar Ahmad used to sit and work as a physician was to remain with Hakim Fazal Ahmad without any right of transfer but it made no division or allotment of the remaining property.

An application was filed by three sons and one of the widows of Hakim Anwar Ahmad to file the award, to which certain objections were taken by the present appellant, who is one of the sons of Hakim Anwar Ahmad. On the 30th May 1921 an application was made by the parties, agreeing that a decree might be passed in accordance with the award subject to the conditions or modifications entered in that application with costs and further asking that the petition of compromise might be sent to the arbitrators with a direction to modify the award in accordance therewith and to state in express terms after an adjustment of accounts as to what each party was entitled to get and to prepare a final decree in conformity with it.

The Court below recorded the compromise and remitted the award to the arbitrators for amendment in accordance therewith but the arbitrators refused to have anything again to do with the arbitration.

The object of the parties clearly was that the award should be sent back to the arbitrators in order that they might adopt the modification suggested by the parties and make an actual partition. When the arbitrators refused, the present appellant asked the Court below under paragraph 15 of the Second Schedule of the Code of Civil Procedure to set aside the award and restore the parties to their original position. The plaintiffs, however, insisted that a decree should be passed in accordance with the award, as modified by the compromise, and that the further proceedings in pursuance of the modified award should be taken by the Court itself. The Court below adopted the latter course and that forms the subject of this appeal.

Paragraphs 20 and 21 of the Second Schedule of the Code of Civil Procedure are intended to provide an alternative remedy for enforcing awards made without the intervention of a Court. The petition to file such an award is made on a Court fee of 8 annas and the Court is given the authority in a proceeding of that kind to enquire whether the matter had in fact been referred to arbitration and an award had been made thereon and whether any ground such as is referred to in paragraphs 14 or 15 is established. The Court has power after such an enquiry to order the award to be filed and to pronounce judgment in accordance with it, and upon the judgment so pronounced a decree is to follow: but no appeal lies from such a decree except in so far as it might be in excess of or not in accordance with the award. Paragraph 21 does not give any authority to the Court to remit the award; but it is argued that if the Court can enquire into the grounds mentioned in paragraph 14, it is presumable that it has the power to remit the award and have the defects found remedied or rectified. It has obviously no power to modify the award itself or try the suit, because paragraph 19 extends the provisions of paragraphs 12, 14 or 15 to proceedings under paragraph 17 only, that is, to references through Court. If it has no power to modify the award, it can equally have no power to remit the award, because the effect of the remission and a subsequent refusal by the arbitrators to re-consider would be to drive the Court to try the suit itself, but no such trial is contemplated by paragraph 21.

The Court can only order the award to be filed or refuse to pass such an order. In Mustafa Khan v. Phulja Bibi (6) it was held under section 525 of the old Code of Civil Procedure that the Court had no power to amend the award or to remit it for re-consideration but had the power to file and enforce it or to reject the application. In Hodgkinson v. McMillan (7) it was held that an award which was provisional or indefinite could not be enforced under section 525 of the old Code of Civil Procedure. It was not even remitted. In Dandekar v. Dandekars (8), Thiruvengadathiengar v. Vaidinatha Ayyar (9) and Narsing Narain Singh v. Ajodhya Prosad Singh (10) a similar view was taken. In Kunj Lal v. Banwari Lall (11), Dinabandhu Jana v. Chintamoni Jana (12) and Dhanpat Rai v. Kahn Devi (13) it appears to have been recognised that the Court had no power to remit the award to the arbitrators, if any matter was left undetermined, or, as the last two decisions show, to file an award in part, even if that part was separable from the rest. In Sabitree Dabi v. Promoda Prosad Chatterjee (14) it was held that the pre-existing law was not altered in this respect by the new Code. The language of paragraph 21 is in this respect substantially the same as that of section 526 of the old Code of Civil Procedure. The old Code provided that if no ground such as was mentioned or referred to in section 520 or section 521 was shown against the award, the Court should order it to be filed and such award would then take effect in the same way as an award made through the Court. Paragraph 21 empowers the Court to order the award to be filed and to pronounce judgment in accordance with it and adds that upon the judgment so pronounced a decree shall follow, but no appeal shall lie from such decree except in so far as the decree is in excess of or not in accordance with the award. The last clause only contemplates cases where a decree might be erroneously made in excess of or not in accordance with the award.

A fresh trial by the same arbitrators or another set of arbitrators or by the Court would hardly fall within the scope of such a proceeding. If the award is a good award the law gives the party in whose favour it is made a summary method of enforcing it. If it is not a good award the law refuses to enforce it as such and leaves the parties to seek such other remedies as may be open to them.

The learned Counsel for the plaintiffs respondents contends that the Court is competent to modify the award by consent or to remit it to the arbitrators, if both the parties so desire it. The compromise stated that the entire sum of Rs. 500 left for the construction of a mosque and Rs. 150 out of the amount left for payment to Musammat Masuma should be applied to the satisfaction of a certain decree, and it asked that a decree might be passed in accordance with the award subject to the terms of the compromise and the award remitted to the arbitrators for modification of what each party was entitled to. The effect of the compromise to my mind was to substitute for a portion of the award a new contract but that contract cannot be enforced in a proceeding meant only to enforce the award as it stood, if it was good and valid. In such a proceeding, the filing of the compromise has the effect of stopping the necessity of making an enquiry into the grounds urged against the validity of the award, but the Court cannot give effect to the substituted contract in whole or in part, specially where that part is not separable, or remit the award to the arbitrators for making the modification desired, much less make the modification itself, when the arbitrators refuse to do so. Under paragraph 15, an award remitted under paragraph 14 becomes void on the failure of the arbitrators to re-consider it, and the Court has to try the suit itself. If paragraphs 14 and 15 apply, the award became ipso facto void when the arbitrators refused to modify or re consider it, and the Court could not pass a decree in accordance with it as modified by the compromise after such refusal.

Under section 96, clause (3), of the Code of Civil Procedure, an appeal does not lie from a consent decree but section 89 lays down that, save as provided by the Indian Arbitration Act, 1899, or by any other law for the time being in force, all references to arbitration whether by an order in a suit or otherwise and all proceedings thereunder, shall be governed by the provisions contained in the Second Schedule. That Schedule gives a right of appeal where a decree is in excess of the award or not in conformity with it. Section 104 gives similarly a right of appeal from an order filing or refusing to file an award. The Second Schedule is complete in itself, except in regard to matters about which it is silent or which are not inconsistent with it. The restricted power given to the Court by paragraph 21 cannot be enlarged by a reference to anything outside the Schedule.

The decisions in Dwarka Das v. Krishan Kishore (4) and Manilal Motilal v. Gokaldas Bowji (2) do not help a right solution. The former merely follows an earlier decision of the Punjab Chief Court and does not take into account section 89 of the present Code of Civil Procedure. The latter deals with a reference made out of Court about a matter then being litigated in a pending suit. The compromise filed in Court might still be a good contract binding on the parties so far as it modifies the award, but it cannot be enforced in this proceeding in substitution or modification of the award. It asks the Court to do more than it has the power to do.

The appeal should, in my opinion, be allowed, but in view of the circumstances, the parties ought not to be allowed their costs in any of the Courts.

KANHAIYA LAL, J. C. AND DANIELS, A. J. C.—(January 17, 1922).—In this case we differ on the question whether a Court is competent on an application under paragraph 20 of the Second Schedule of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, to pass a decree on an award as modified by the compromise filed by the parties and whether an appeal lies from the decree so passed. We accordingly refer these questions for decision of the Second Additional Judicial Commissioner in accordance with section 98 of the Code.

LYLE, A. J. C.—(March 16, 1922).—The following question of law which has arisen in Miscellaneous Appeal No. 52 of 1921 and with regard to which the Judges composing the Bench trying that appeal differed in opinion has been referred to me under section 98 of the Code of Civil Procedure:—

Is a Court competent on an application under paragraph 20 of the Second Schedule of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, to pass a decree on an award as modified by the compromise filed by the parties and does an appeal lie from the decree so passed?

The learned Counsel for the appellant wished to discuss all the facts in the case and to argue the whole appeal before me, but in view of the terms of the reference and of the provisions of section 98 (2) of the Code of Civil Procedure I do not think that he is at liberty to do so. Under section 575 of the old Code of Civil Procedure when the Judges composing the Bench differed in opinion on a point of law the whole appeal was referred to one or more of the other Judges of the same Court and was decided in accordance with the opinion of the majority of all the Judges who had heard the appeal, including those who first heard it. The law has been very definitely altered by section 98 of the present Code which provides that when the Judges composing a Bench differ in opinion on a point of law they may state the point of law upon which they differ and the appeal shall then be heard upon that point only by one or more of the other Judges and such a point shall be decided according to the opinion of the majority of the Judges who have heard the appeal including those who first heard it. As the law at present stands the whole appeal is not referred but only a point of law as stated by the Bench and the Judge to whom the reference is made is at liberty to express an opinion on that point of law only. Of course reference may be made to the facts if it be necessary for the purpose of elucidating the point of law stated in the reference, but the Referring Judge is not, as the law at present stands, at liberty to express an opinion on the facts, or on any point of law outside that stated in the reference. In the present case the point upon which the learned Judges composing the Bench have differed has been stated in general terms in the referring order and that being so no reference to the facts of the case is necessary or permissible.

Section 89 of the Code provides that "Save in so far as is otherwise provided..... .....by any other law for the time being in force, all references to arbitration, whether by an order in a suit or otherwise, and all proceedings thereunder, shall be governed by the provisions contained in the Second Schedule." Paragraph 20 of the Second Schedule refers to an application for filing an award made without the intervention of a Court and paragraph 21 provides that: "Where the Court is satisfied that the matter has been referred to arbiration and that an award has been made thereon, and where no ground such as is mentioned or referred to in paragraph 14 or paragraph 15 is proved, the Court shall order the award to be filed and shall proceed to pronounce judgment according to the award." The question under reference is whether in the case of such an award the power of the Court is limited to accepting or rejecting the award as it stands or whether the Court can accept the award as modified by a compromise. The learned Counsel for the appellant admits that when an objection is taken on any of the grounds referred to in paragraph 14 or paragraph 15 of the Schedule the parties can come to a compromise in respect of such objection and the Court is bound to reject or accept the award in accordance with such compromise. He admits that the parties may enter into a compromise as to any question which properly arises in an application made under paragraph 20 to file an award but he urges that the Court has no jurisdiction to consider any compromise by which an award is altered or amended. He urges that the Court has power only to accept or reject the award and its jurisdiction cannot be extended by any agreement entered into between the parties. He has referred to two rulings: Mustafa Khan v. Phulja Bibi (6) and Sabitree Dabi v. Promoda Prosad Chhuttaries (14), but neither of these rulings lends any support to his contention. They are merely authority for the proposition that when an application has been made under paragraph 20 of the Schedule the Court has no power to refer the award back to the arbitrators, a proposition which is not denied by the learned Counsel for the respondents. The position taken up by the learned Counsel for the appellant is that under paragraph 21 of the Schedule the power of the Court is limited to filing or rejecting the award as it stands and it has no power to file an award as modified by a compromise and reliance is placed on paragraph 21 (2) of the Schedule which provides for an appeal from any decree passed in excess of or not in accordance with the award. It is urged that if the Court has no power under the provisions of paragraph 21 to modify the award an agreement between the parties cannot give it the power to do so. He refers to Mr. Daniel's order of the 17th of January 1922 and argues that if by consent of parties the Court had power to give effect to the first prayer mentioned in that order it would follow that it had power also to give effect to the second prayer mentioned in the order. This argument is clearly fallacious. The first prayer is merely that the award as modified not by the Court but by the parties themselves should be filed. The Court is not asked to adjudicate in any way but merely to file the award as modified. The second prayer is that the award should be sent back to the arbitrators with directions to calculate the amount due to each person and that a decree should be passed in accordance with their finding. No agreement between the parties could operate to give the Court power to call upon the arbitrators to make a fresh award. The two prayers are altogether different in nature and it is absurd to argue that if the Court has power to grant one of the prayers it has power also to grant the other.

The question really is whether the provisions of r. 3 of O. XXIII are applicable in the case of an application under paragraph 20 of the Schedule to have an award filed. The learned Counsel for the appellant argues that this rule being one of the general provisions of the Code is not applicable, because it conflicts with the special provisions of paragraph 21 of the Schedule in so much as, if applied, it would operate to enlarge the powers of the Court expressly stated in that paragraph. With this view I am unable to agree. The Second Schedule of the Code contains special provisions governing arbitration proceedings but it is as much a part of the Code as O. XXIII, r. 3. It is not exhaustive and must be read with the other provisions of the Code, for example in order to enable the Court to decide whether any ground such as is referred to in paragraph 14 or paragraph 15 is proved the procedure prescribed by the Code must be followed. And the provisions with regard to appeals from orders passed in arbitration proceedings are contained not in the Second Schedule but in section 104 of the Code. Paragraph 20 of the Schedule provides that an application to have an award filed "shall be numbered and registered as a suit," and that being so it seems to me that all proceedings in suits allowed by the Code which do not require adjudication by the Court can be taken on such an application. A Court cannot of its own motion or by adjudication modify the award but where there is a lawful agreement between the parties modifying the award the Court is bound to recognise such an agreement and to pass a decree in accordance therewith. Had it been intended that r. 3 of O. XXIII should not be applicable to cases registered as suits under paragraph 20 of the Second Schedule we should have expected an express provision to this effect in the Code just in the same way as by r. 4 of O. XXIII it has been declared not to be applicable to any proceedings in execution of a decree or order. There is authority for the proposition that the provisions of O. XXIII, r. 1 are applicable to such proceedings in Gauri Shankar v. Maida Koer (1), and there is direct authority for the proposition that the provisions of O. XXIII, r. 3, are also applicable in Dwarka Das v. Krishan Kishore (4). Where an application for filing an award made without the intervention of the Court has been made and a compromise subsequently entered into between the parties it seems absurd to hold that the Court to which the application is made is bound to ignore the compromise and to pass a decree in terms of the original award if that award is not defective on any of the grounds mentioned in paragraph 14 or paragraph 15 of the Schedule. This would be the result of holding that the Schedule was complete in itself and that the provisions of O. XXIII, r. 3, were not applicable to such proceedings.

It is admitted by the parties that if the Court can pass a decree on an award as modified by a compromise filed by the parties no appeal would lie from a decree so passed except in so far as the decree was in excess of or not in accordance with the award as modified by the compromise. My answer, therefore, to the reference is that a Court is competent on an application under paragraph 20 of the Second Schedule of the Code of Civil Procedure to pass a decree on an award as modified by a lawful compromise filed by the parties and that from a decree so passed no appeal lies except in so far as the decree is in excess of or not in accordance with the award so modified.

Let this opinion be laid before the Bench.

KANHAIYA LAL, J. C. AND LYLE, A. J. C. (March 29, 1922.)—In view of the opinion obtained under section 98 of the Code of Civil Procedure we modify the decree of the lower Court to the extent that for the words "preliminary decree for partition" the words "decree under paragraph 21 of the Second Schedule of the Code of Civil Procedure read with rule 3 of O. XXIII of the same Code" shall be substituted and that that portion of the petition of the 30th of May 1921 which runs "and that the award be sent to the arbitrators with the request that they, having made the amendment as above, should state the amount found due to each person on calculation and a decree absolute be passed in accordance therewith" shall not be treated as forming part of the decree. The respondents will get their costs in both Courts.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VI, r. 14—Plaint signed and presented by servant of plaintiff—Authority of servant not proved—Suit dismissed—Application to High Court—Extraordinary jurisdiction.

Plaintiff sued to recover a certain sum of money from the defendant. The plaint was signed by an unauthorised servant of the plaintiff instead of by the plaintiff himself. When this fact came to the notice of the Court, it dismissed the suit. The plaintiff moved the High Court in the exercise of its extraordinary jurisdiction:

Held, setting aside the decree of the lower Court, (1) that if the plaintiff had applied to sign the plaint and present it on the day of the dismissal of the suit, he should have been allowed to do so;

(2) that he should be given the opportunity now of having his suit considered as if it was filed on the day of its dismissal subject to the question of limitation.

Application under Extraordinary Jurisdiction against the decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge, at Surat.

Mr. G. N. Thakor, for the Applicant.

Mr. M. B. Dave, for the Opponent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued to recover the balance due in Sambat 1973 from the defendant and the price of goods supplied in Sambats 1973 and 1974, and for a further amount of Rs. 35 odd. The plaint was first presented on the 23rd October 1920 signed by Vithaldas, a servant of the plaintiff, while the Vakilpatra of the Vakil was also signed by Vithaldas. When these facts came to the notice of the Judge on the 3rd December 1920, he found that the plaint was not properly signed and not properly presented by the plaintiff, and that the Pleader presenting the plaint was not duly authorised, and, therefore, dismissed the suit with costs. We think he was right in holding that the plaint was not duly presented and not duly signed, as the plaintiff made no effort to prove that Vithaldas was his recognised agent trading on his behalf while he was away from the jurisdiction. But we think that if the plaintiff had applied to be allowed to sign the plaint and present it on that day, he should have been allowed to do so. Then, of course, the question of limitation would arise. We have nothing to do at present with that. So that to that extent the Rule will be made absolute, the decree dismissing the suit will be set aside and the plaintiff will have an opportunity of having his suit considered as if it was filed on the 3rd December 1920. The plaintiff must pay the costs up to date.

Hindu Law—Gift from father—Property, whether self-acquired in hands of donee.

In the absence of any express limitation or condition to the contrary, all property obtained by gift or devise becomes self-acquired in the hands of the donee or devisee. Consequently, any property obtained by virtue of a gift from the father, grandfather or great-grandfather would be self-acquired in the hands of the donee if it was not ancestral property in the hands of the donor or was acquired by him without detriment to the joint estate. Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Gonda, dated the 11th June 192', upholding that of the Subordinate Judge, Gonda, dated the 28th February 1921.

Mr. Aditya Prasad, for the Appellants.

Mr. Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute in this appeal relates to a 6-pies share of certain property and the question for consideration is whether the plaintiffs are bound by the transfer of the said share made by their father, Ajudhia, in favour of Ram Rattan. The allegation of the plaintiffs was that the said share formed part of the joint family property belonging to them and their father; that the latter had no right to sell the same and that they were not in any way benefited by the sales effected by him. The defence was that the property in question was the exclusive property of Ajudhia and that the sales in question had been made for legal necessity and for the benefit of the family.

The Court of first instance found that the property in question was the self-acquired property of Ajudhia, having been obtained by him by virtue of a gift made in his favour by his brother, Sarju; that the sale deed of the 26th August 1911, was binding on the family and that Rs. 166 out of the sale-deed of the 2nd September 1912, were taken for legal necessity. The lower Appellate Court upheld the view that the property comprised in the two sale-deeds was not ancestral.

It appears that Fakir, the father of Ajudhia, was the owner of an 8-annas share in the village Dhondhupur. He had four sons, Bhagan, Sarju, Ajudhia and Mathura. Mathura died in his lifetime, leaving a son, Jhingur. Fakir got mutation of names effected in his lifetime in respect of his 8-annas share in favour of his three sons, Bhagan, Sarju and Ajudhia, and his grandson, Jhingur, in equal portions. In the khewat prepared for 1315 Fasli it was recited that mutation of names was effected in pursuance of an oral gift (Exhibit A 22). Ajudhia thus became the owner of a 2-annas share. On the 22nd July 1910, Sarju made a gift of 8-pies out of his 2-annas share to Ajudhia (Exhibit A-4). The total share of Ajudhia thus amounted to 2-annas 8-pies.

On the 27th September 1910 Ajudhia sold a 4-pies share to Lachman, describing the same as his ancestral and self-acquired property (milkiat maurusi wa paida kar a khud) (Exhibit 12). The sale was stated to have been made to pay certain prior debts and for other necessary expenses. On the 26th August 1911 he sold another 4 pies share to a person named Ram Rattan, describing himself as the owner and possessor of the same without any specification as to the manner in which he had acquired his title (Exhibit A 1). The sale was stated to have been made for his personal necessity (zarurat khud). On the 18th October 1911 he sold another 6-pies share to certain persons, describing himself as the owner and possessor of the same without specifying how he had obtained the same (Exhibit 10). That sale was stated to have been made for the purchase of certain property and for other necessary expenses. On the 22nd May 1912 he again sold a 6-pies share to the same persons, describing it in the same manner (Exhibit 11). No necessity was mentioned for the sale. On the 2nd September 1912 he sold a 2 pies share to Ram Rattan without specifying how he had acquired it or mentioning the necessity for the sale (Exhibit A-2). He had thus sold 1-anna 10-pies out of his 2 annas 8-pies share. The validity of the sales of the 26th August 1911 (Exhibit A 1) and the 22nd September 1912 (Exhibit A-2) is now in question.

It is well settled that, in the absence of any express limitation or condition to the contrary, all property obtained by gift or devise becomes self-acquired property in the hands of the donee or devisee. Consequently, any property obtained by virtue of a gift from the father, grandfather or great-grandfather would be self-acquired property in the hands of the donee, if it was not ancestral property in the hands of the donor or was acquired by him without any detriment to the joint estate. In Bai Diwali v. Patel Bechardas (1) it was held that where a property was given jointly to two persons living as members of a joint Hindu family, each donee took an interest in the property which passed to his heirs at his death, and not to the other donee by survivorship. In Kishori Dubain v. Mundra Dubain (2) it was similarly held that where a gift was made in favour of several persons living jointly it did not follow that they took such property as joint property.

The gift in this instance is described as oral but as it is said to have been made before 1315 Fasli in favour of several donees who accepted the same and succeeded in obtaining mutation of names in their favour and retaining possession so long, such defect as might originally have existed owing to the absence of a validly executed and registered deed was perfected by the length of possession retained by them.

By the same oral gift the other members of the family were given a 2-annas share each. It is admitted that the entire 8 annas share was acquired by Fakir by purchase from certain persons in 1873 and was his self-acquired property. The 8-pies share obtained by Ajudhia under a gift made by Sarju was similarly self-acquired property in the hands of Adjudhia. The plaintiffs have, therefore, no right to question the sales effected by their father of property which he had obtained in the manner aforesaid from his father and brother.

It is unnecessary to determine whether the 8-pies share sold formed part of the property obtained by Ajudhia from his father or represented the share which he had obtained by gift from his brother.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 159, 161, 167—Adverse possession—"Encumbrance", meaning of—Construction of Statutes—Courts to follow long established decisions.

The word "encumbrance" in sections 159 and 161 of the Bengal Tenancy Act includes statutory title and interest acquired by a trespasser by adverse possession of a part of the lands of the defaulting tenure or holding, and such an encumbrance cannot be annulled in any manner other than what is provided in section 167. Letters Patent Appeal against the decree of Mr. Justice Newbould dated the 11th of May 1920, in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1580 of 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Surendra Chandra Sen, for the Appellant.—The question for your Lordships' consideration in this appeal is whether the title by adverse possession acquired by the defendants against the tenants is an incumbrance within the meaning of section 159 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. My submission is that as soon as the statutory title by adverse possession against the tenants was complete, the adverse possessor became, in reality, a co-owner of the tenants and in such circumstances the question of encumbrance or no encumbrance hardly arises. The interest of a co-owner cannot be characterised as an encumbrance upon the interest of another co-owner. The term 'encumbrance' implies that the interest of the holder of the encumbrance is inferior in degree to that of the owner. But the interest of the adverse possessor, when it has ripened by prescription, is of the same nature as that of the true owner and is, therefore, not an encumbrance upon the interest of the true owner. ISHAN CHANDRA BAKSHI v. SEFATULLA SIKDAR.

Babu Basanta Kumar Bose (with him Babu Situram Banerjee), for the Respondents.—Having regard to the long line of decisions as to the meaning of the term "encumbrance," it is now too late for my learned friend to contend that the statutory title of the adverse possessor is not an incumbrance within the meaning of section 159 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. This term does not find a place for the first time in the Bengal Tenancy Act and has been used by the Indian Legislature more than once in the statutory provisions in a well recognised sense. See Gokul Bagdi v. Debendra Nath Sen (7). See also Moizuddi Biswas v. Ishan Chandra Das (8) and Kalikananda Mukherjee v. Bipro Das Pal (9). The word "incumbrance" as used in sections 159 and 161 of the Bengal Tenancy Act has been interpreted, by a long series of decisions, to include the statutory title acquired by a trespasser by adverse possession. See Moizuddi Biswas v. Ishan Chandra Das (8), Gokul Bagdi v. Debendra Nath Sen (7), Arsadulla v. Munsab Ali (10), Bhuson Chandra Ghosh v. Srakanta Banerjee (11), Satish Chandra v. Munjamali Debi (12), Monmotha Nath Mitter v. Anath Bundhu Pal (13).

Babu Surendra Chandra Sen replied.

JUDGMENT,—This is an appeal under clause 15 of the Letters Patent from the judgment of Mr. Justice Newbould in an Appeal from Appellate Decree in a suit for recovery of possession of land on declaration of title. The plaintiff claimed the disputed land as included in an occupancy holding held by one Biswambhur Bakshi at an annual rent of Rs. 6-4-0 under the Sinha Rays who were tenure holders under the Raja of Dighapatya. The occupancy holding was sold in 1900 in execution of a decree for arrears of rent, when it was purchased by one Prosanna Chandra Bhattacharjya. His representatives made default in the payment of rent, and the occupancy holding was again sold in execution of a decree for arrears of rent on the 23rd April 1913 when it was purchased by the landlords themselves. The plaintiff took settlement from the landlords on the 24th February 1915, but was unable to obtain possession of the disputed area. The result was the institution of this suit on the 10th January 1916. The defendants resisted the claim on the ground that the tract in suit never formed part of the occupancy holding held by Biswambhur Bakshi under the Sinha Rays and was in reality included in a tenancy held by Biswambhur Bakshi and Gobinda Bakshi at an annual rent of Rs. 9-4-0 payable directly to the Raja of Dighapatya. The question consequently arose, whether the disputed land was included in the tenancy of Rs. 6-4-0 held by Biswambhur Bakshi under the Sinha Rays or in the tenancy of Rs. 9-4-0 held by Biswambhur Bakshi and Gobinda Bakshi under the Raja of Dighapatya. The Trial Court answered this question in favour of the plaintiff and decreed the suit. On appeal the Subordinate Judge did not determine this question, but held that, on the assumption that the land was included in the tenancy of Rs. 6-4-0 held by Biswambhur Bakshi under the Sinha Rays, the defendants and their predecessors had acquired a title by adverse possession which constituted an incumbarance and could have been, but had not been, annulled by the grantor of the plaintiff under section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, read with section 159. The Subordinate Judge found upon the evidence that, on the 21st May 18 6 one Abinash Chandra Bhattacharjya, in execution of a mortgage decree held by him against Biswambhur Bakshi and Gobinda Bakshi, purchased their tenancy of Rs. 9-4-0 under the Raja of Dighapatya, that on the 29th November 1898 the purchaser transferred the tenancy to Harinath Mookerjee (one of the defendants in this suit), and that, since the mortgage sale of 1896, Abinash and thereafter Harinath had been in possession of the disputed land as included in the tenancy of Rs. 9-4-0. The Subordinate Judge further found that neither Prosanna Chandra Bhattacharjya nor his successors-in-interest ever possessed the land as included in the tenancy of Rs. 6-4-0 held by Biswambhur Bakshi under the Sinha Rays. On these findings, the Subordinate

Judge held that the defendants had acquired a good title by adverse possession from 1900 when Prosanna Chandra Bhattacharjya became the purchaser at a rent-sale-till the 23rd April, 19.3, when the grantors of the plaintiff purchased at another rent-sale. The question thus emerged for consideration, whether the statutory title by adverse possession acquired by the defendants against the tenant for whose fault the holding of Rs. 6-4-0 was brought to sale, was an incumbrance within the meaning of section 159 of the Bengal Tenancy Act which the purchaser at the rent-sale was competent and bound to annul in the prescribed method, namely, in the manner directed in section 167. The Subordinate Judge answered this question in the affirmative, and his view has been approved by Mr. Justice Newbould, as supported by a long line of decisions in this Court.

The term "encumbrance" was not introduced for the first time in the Bengal Tenancy Act, but, as was pointed out in Gakul Bagdi v. Debendra Nath Sen (7), had been repeatedly used by the Indian Legislature in a well-recognised sense in the statutory provisions of our land-law and revenue-law. In Lukhmeer Khan v. Collector of Rajshahye (14) section 27 of the Revenue Sale Law, 1841, which provided that a purchaser of an estate sold for the recovery of arrears of revenue due thereon would acquire the estate free from all incumbrances imposed thereupon after the time of settlement, was interpreted to signify that the interest acquired by an adverse possessor was an encumbrance. The same phraseology was reproduced in section 26 of the Revenue Sale Law, 1845, and was similarly interpreted in Ramsunkur v. Bejoy Govind Boral (15). Section 37 of the Revenue Sale Law, 1859, reproduces the same phraseology and has been repeatedly construed in the same sense: Goluck Monee v. Huro Chunder (16), Thakore Dass v. Nubeen Kishen (17), Narain Chunder v. Tayler (18), Karmi Khan v. Brojo Nath Das (19), Moizudi Eiswas v. Ishan Chandra Das (8). A similar question has arisen upon the construction of section 11 of the Patni Regulation, 1819, and it has been frequently held that the interest acquired by a trespasser, who has been in adverse possession of part of the lands of the taluk for the statutory period is an incumbrance that has accrued upon it by the act of the defaulting patnidar: Khantomoni Dasi v. Bijoy Chand (20), Gopendro Chunder v. Mokaddam Hossein (21), Nuffer Chandra Pal v. Rajendra Lal Goswami (22), Prodyote Kumar Tagore v. Rakhal Chandra Sarkar (23), Kalikonanda Mukherjee v. Bipro Das Pal (9). When we turn to section 16 of the Sales of Under-Tenures Act, 1865, we meet with a similar provision which has been construed in a like manner; Mahomed Askur v. Mahomed Wasuck (24). The same principle was applied by Sir Barnes Peacock, C. J., in the case of sales under section 105 of the Bengal Rent Law, 1859; Womesh Chander Gooyto v. Raj Narain Roy (25). A similar view has been adopted with reference to sections 70 and 71 of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, 1886, Mahomed Nasim v. Kasi Nath Ghose (26), Aptar Ali v. Brojendra Kishore Roy (27). This is supported by the decision of the Judicial Committee in Surja Kanta Acharjya Bahadur v. Sarat Chandra Roy (28), where it was ruled that the period of limitation for adverse possession against the purchaser at a sale for arrears under the Revenue Sale Law, 1859, only commences to run from the date of the sale. It is thus undeniable that, at the time when the Bengal Tenancy Act was passed, the term "incumbrance" had a well-recognised meaning in connection with provisions in Statutes in pari materia. It is equally incontestable that, since the Bengal Tenancy Act came into operation, the word "incumbrance" as used in sections 159 and 161 has been interpreted to include a statutory title and interest acquired by a trespasser by adverse possession of a part of the lands of the defaulting tenure or holding: Karmi Khan v. Bro o Nath Das (19), Moituddi Biswas v. Ishan Chandra Das (8), Gokul Bagdi v. Debendra Nath Sen (7) Arsadulla v. Munseb Ali (10), Satish Chandra v. Muni mali Debi (12), Bhusan Chandra Ghosh v. Srakanta Banerjee (11), Monmotha Nath Mitter v. Anath Bundhu Pal (13). We have been pressed to hold, however, that the view which has obtained in this Court for well-nigh seventy years as to the meaning of the term "incumbrance" is erroneous and is not logically reconcileable with the position maintained in Kumar Kalanand Singh v. Syed Sarafat Hossein (1), Rahim-ud-Din v. Bhabagana Debya (2), Baikuntha Noth Rai v. Basanta Kumari Dasi (3), Aftar Ali v. Brojendra Kishore (4), Jitendra Kumar Pal v. Mohendra Chandra Sarma (5) and Mohim Chan ra Deb v. Piyare Lal Das (6), namely, that the adverse possessor, when his title has ripened by prescription, becomes in essence a co-owner of the estate, tenure or holding, as the case may be, and his interest cannot logically be deemed an incumbrance on the ownership. It need not be disputed that the matter, were it res integra, would be open to serious argument, as, indeed, is indicated by the observation of Lord Phillimore in Bipradas Pal v. Kamini Kumar (29), where the Judicial Committee affirmed the decision in Kalikonanda Mukherjee v. Bipro Das Pal (9). But in the well-known words of Mr. Justice Holmes (Common Law P. 1), the life of the law is not logic but experience. As pointed out by Blackburn, J., in Mersey Docks and Harbour Board v. Cameran (30), where an Act of Parliament has received a judicial construction, putting a certain meaning on its words, and the Legislature in a subsequent Act in pari materia uses the same words, there is a presumption that the Legislature used those words intending to express the meaning which it knew had been put upon the same words before, and, unless there is something to rebut that presumption, the Act should be so construed even if they were such that they might originally have been construed otherwise. To the same effect are the observations of Sir John Jervis, C. J., in Ruckmaboye v. Lulloobhboy (31) and of James, L. J. in Campbell, Ex parte, Cathcart, In re (32). We are further of opinion that the case before us belongs to that class where the Court should be reluctant to dissent from the view expressed in long established decided cases and thereby not only to unsettle the law but also to endanger the security of property and title, —dangers which are not associated with changes brought about by legislative intervention: Young v. Robertson (33), Owners of Steamship Mediana v. Owners, Master and Crew of Lightship "Comet" (34), Kreglinger v. New Patagonia Meat & Cold Storage Co. (35). We hold accordingly, in concurrence with Mr. Justice Newbould, that the word incumbrance, as used in sections 159 and 161 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, includes statutory title and interest acquired by a trespasser by adverse possession of a part of the lands of the defaulting tenure or holding and that such encumbrance cannot be annulled in any manner other than what is provided in section 167.

The result is that the decree made by Mr. Justice Newbould is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

Appeal against a decree of the Officiating Subordinate Judge, Unao, dated the 15th June 1921.

Messrs. Wazir Hasan and Manohar Lal Tewari, for the Appellants.

Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for redemption brought in respect of a mortgage effected by Yasin Ali, the father of the plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 3, in favour of Umarao Singh, the grandfather of the defendant No. 1, on the 2nd February 1875, and a deed of further charge executed by him in favour of the same person on the 29th June 1875. Both the deeds provided for the payment of compound interest at Rs. 1-8-0 per cent. per mensem with annual rests and contained a further covenant that if the money due on them was not paid within two years the mortgage would operate as a sale.

When the period fixed for payment expired, Sultan Singh, the son and legal representative of the original mortgagee, applied for foreclosure under Bengal Regulation XVII of 1806, stating that he had made a demand for the payment of the money due to him on the said deeds but the mortgagor had paid nothing on account of the same (Exhibit A 2). A notice was issued to the mortgagor, which is said to have been duly served in the manner provided by section 82 of Act X of 1877 then in force. The notice has been weeded out and it is not possible to say what its contents were and by whom it was signed; but a copy of the index has been filed, which mentions among other papers five summons or notices, said to have been issued to the defendants from time to time (Exhibit A 3). On the 23rd November 1879, the case was consigned to the records before the period of one year's grace usually allowed for payment had expired (Exhibit A-4).

Subsequently when Sultan Singh was contemplating to file a suit for proprietary possession of the mortgaged property, the mortgagor voluntarily gave him possession and got mutation of names effected in his favour (Exhibit A-5). The contention of the plaintiffs is that the above proceedings had not in law the effect of foreclosing the mortgage and charge and that they are entitled to redeem the same on payment of the amounts now due thereon. The plaintiffs Nos. 1, 2 and 3 have transferred a portion of their interest in the mortgaged property to the plaintiffs Nos. 4 and 5, who have joined in the suit.

The Court below found that the foreclosure proceedings taken by the mortgagee had the effect of finally extinguishing the right of redemption and that in any case the surrender or renunciation made by the mortgagor of his equity of redemption operated as a valid relinquishment by him of his interest in the mortgaged property so as to bind his heirs and successors and preclude them from claiming a right to redeem the mortgage. Section 8 of the Bengal Regulation XVII of 1806 required that the Court shall cause the mortgagor to be furnished as soon as possible with a copy of the application filed by the mortgagee and shall at the same time notify to him by a parwana under its seal and official signature that if he shall not redeem the property mortgaged at any time within one year from the date of the notification the mortgage would be finally foreclosed and the conditional sale would become conclusive. In Norender Narain Singh v. Dwarka Lal Mundur (1) their Lordships of the Privy Council held that in an action brought to recover possession as upon a foreclosure it was essential for the plaintiff to satisfy the Court that the necessary conditions required by section 8 had been complied with and that the mere return of the Nazir on the back of the Judge's parwana to the effect that the mortgagor had been duly served was not legal evidence of service. The return of service is not here available; but there is an order of the Deputy Commissioners who then exercised the powers conferred by the above Regulation stating that the "provisions of section 82" had been carried out. There was evidently a direction for effecting substituted service, the carrying out of which is therein referred to. That order might be taken as sufficient evidence under section 114, clause (e), of the Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872) that the notice had been duly served. It is not, however, possible to say what the contents of the notice were; and as the proceedings were struck off before the year of grace had expired, it cannot be said that the mortgagor had any opportunity of showing that he had really received no notice or that his right to redeem the mortgage had still remained unaffected.

The subsequent proceedings, taken by the mortgagee to obtain possession and get mutation of names effected in his favour with the consent of the mortgagor, however, operated as a surrender by the mortgagor of his equity of redemption in recognition of the validity of the previous foreclosure proceeding. The report of the Tahsildar, dated the 18th March 1881, (Exhibit A-5) recites that the mortgagor, Yasin Ali, appeared and stated that the mortgagee had already got a notice issued, that he, the mortgagor, had not been able to pay the mortgage-money due on the deeds of mortgage and further charge within the year of grace, and that, with a view to obviate future liabilities, he had surrendered his proprietary possession with effect from rabi 1288 Fasli. It also recites that there had been an oral contract between the mortgagor and the mortgagee that although the mortgagee was given proprietary possession with effect from rabi 1288 Fasli, the revenue for the entire year 1288 Fasli would be paid by the mortgagee. The general agent of the mortgagee admitted the above agreement. An order for mutation of names appears to have been passed in pursuance of that report on the 2nd April 1881 and the name of the mortgagee was substituted in the place of the mortgagor in the khewat as the purchaser of his rights (Exhibit A.6). In the recent Settlement, the mortgagee was similarly recorded as the owner by purchase of the property in dispute.

The defendants have since then been in continuous possession and enjoyment of the disputed property in their own right: and even if there was any defect in the original proceedings instituted to foreclose the mortgage, it is no longer open to the legal representatives of the mortgagor to re-open the transaction and treat the mortgage as still subsisting after the lapse of nearly 40 years from the date when the equity of redemption was surrendered to the mortgagee.

Under Act III of 1877 then in force, a surrender of the equity of redemption in immoveable property worth over Rs. 100 could not have been made except by a registered instrument; but as pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in

JINA JIBHAI v. MATHUR JIBHAI.

Mahomed Musa v. Aghore Kumar Ganguli (2) even though the rights conferred by the private settlement were defective and inchoate or legally insufficient to make up a final and validly concluded agreement for the extinction of the equity of redemption, the acts of the parties had been such as to supply all defects. In fact where the actings and conduct of the parties are relied on as showing the performance or part performance of the agreement, the locus penitentæ, which exists in a situation when the parties stand upon nothing but an engagement, which is not final or complete, is excluded, for equity will support a transaction, clothed imperfectly in those legal forms to which finality attaches, after the bargain has been acted upon. In Jhamphu v. Kutramani (3) where one of two brothers, joint owners of certain immoveable property, executed a deed of relinquishment in favour of the other and the deed was never registered, but the brother, in whose favour it was made, remained in possession of the entire property, it was held that the deed of relinquishment was admissible in evidence to prove the nature of the occupant's possession. In Varada Pillai v. Jeevarathnammal (4) a similar view was taken.

The learned Counsel for the plaintiffs-appellants contends that if the surrender by the mortgagor was not valid for want of registration, the possession of the mortgagee could not be treated as adverse. But the mortgage gave no right to the mortgagee to obtain possession. The mortgagee got possession by virtue of the surrender made by the mortgagor of his equity of redemption in tacit recognition of the validity of the previous foreclosure proceeding and in the capacity of a purchaser or proprietor with effect from rabi 1288 Fasli and undertook to relieve the mortgagor of his liability for the revenue for 1288 Fasli which had not till then been paid. It is true that exclusive possession by the mortgagee for any length of time short of the statutory period of sixty years cannot invest him with an adverse title; but as observed by Lord Davey in Khiarajmal v. Daim (5), a release of the equity of redemption by the mortgagor might operate as a bar or defense to a suit for redemption, more so where by virtue of the mortgage, the mortgagee is not entitled to possession of the mortgaged property but has obtained possession aliunde in recognition of his proprietary right after the termination of the foreclosure proceeding. In Pratap Bahadur Singh v. Maheshwar Bakhsh Singh (6) it was held that where, as in the case of a simple mortgage, the mortgagee is not entitled to possession, his possession of the mortgaged property adversely for more than 12 years against the mortgagor might extinguish the security as regards the property so adversely held. The proprietary title of the defendants has thus been perfected by adverse possession for more than 12 years and the plaintiffs are not now entitled to claim redemption.

The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Mamlatdars' Courts Act (Bom. Act II of 1906), s. 5, Explanation—Ouster by co-owner, whether amounts to dispossession—Jurisdiction of Mamlatdar to award joint possession.

A Mamlatdar has no jurisdiction to award joint possession under Bombay Act II of 1906. [p. 226, col. 2.]

GOPIKISHAN v. SORABJEE.

Keso Dinkar v. Moro Sakharam, (1883) P. J. 120; Krishna v. Gopala, (1880) P. J. 316, followed.

The meaning of the explanation to section 5 of the Mamlatdars' Courts Act is that any action of one co-owner who has rights over the whole property, although it may interfere with the joint ownership of his co-owner, does not amount to dispossession under the Act, and it was not intended that ouster by one co-owner of the other should amount to dispossession within the meaning of the Act, so as to entitle the Mamlatdar to award joint possession. [p. 226, col. 2.]

Application under the Extraordinary Jurisdiction of the High Court from an order passed by the Mamlatdar, Borsad.

Mr. G. N. Thakor, for the Applicant.

Mr. H. V. Divatia, for the Opponent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff filed this suit in the Mamlatdar's Court averring that the defendant had dispossessed him of three acres and seven gunthas of land out of Survey No. 51. The order of the Mamlatdar was that the plaintiff should be put in joint possession of the whole of Survey No. 51 with the defendant. It has been contended that that order was without jurisdiction. We have been referred to the decisions of this Court in Keso Dinkar v. Moro Sakharam (1) and Krishna v. Gopala (2) which decided that the Mamlatdar had no jurisdiction to award joint possession in proceedings under the Act III of 1876. The Mamlatdar in making this order relied upon the case of Bai Jamna v. Bai Jadav (3). But the question decided there was one of an entirely different character. The only ground on which we could hold that the Mamlatdar had jurisdiction would be that jurisdiction had been granted by Bombay Act II of 1906. The explanation to section 5 is, as often happens, somewhat obscurely worded and it may be read in two different ways, either as confirming the decisions of this Court to which we have just referred [Keso Dinkar v. Moro Sakharam (1) and Krishna v. Gopala (2)], or as altering the law; and at first we thought that the explanation might be read as showing that in certain cases of joint ownership the action of one co owner against the other might amount to dispossession, and, therefore, it might be concluded that where the action amounted to dispossession the Mamlatdar could award joint possession. But we think the proper way to read that explanation is that any action of one co owner, who has rights over the whole property, although it may interfere with the joint ownership of his co-owner, does not amount to dispossession under the Act, and that it was not intended that ouster by one co-owner of the other should amount to dispossession within the meaning of the Act so as to entitle the Mamlatdar to award joint possession. This seems to us to be clear from the provisions of section 19 which prescribe very clearly the points to be decided by the Mamlatdar at the hearing, and the case of a plaintiff who is asking for joint possession against his co-owner is not dealt with either expressly or by implication. We think, therefore, the law still stands as it did when Krishna v. Gopala (2) was decided, and that the Mamlatdar had no jurisdiction in this case to decree joint possession. The Rule must be made absolute and the decree set aside and the plaintiff's suit dismissed with costs in the Mamlatdar's Court and in this Court.

Valuation of suit—Suit to redeem usufructuary mortgage and for surplus profits, value of—Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 17, applicability of.

The value, for purposes of jurisdiction and Court-fees, of a suit in which the plaintiff claims to redeem a usufructuary mortgage and a sum of money as surplus profits realized by the mortgagee, is the principal sum expressed to be secured by the mortgage.

Section 17 of the Court Fees Act is not applicable to such a suit because the suit does not embrace two or more distinct subjects, and because under section 76 (h) of the Transfer of Property Act a usufructuary mortgagee is bound to pay any surplus realisations to the mortgagor. [p. 227, col. 2.]

RAM CHAND v. RAMA NAND.

Revision against an order of the District Judge, Nimar, dated the 21st January 1921, in Miscellaneous Civil Appeal No. 17 of 1920.

Mr. Atmaram Bhagwant, for the Applicants.

Messrs. V. R. Pandit, R. B., and W. R. Puranik, for the Non-Applicant.

ORDER.—In this case the non-applicant, plaintiff, sued to redeem a usufructuary mortgage alleging himself to be bound to the extent of one-fourth only of the principal amount secured which he put at Rs. 625 and claiming also Rs. 500 as surplus profits realised by the mortgagee. Putting his aggregate claim at Rs. 1,125 he paid Rs. 85 as Court-fee and filed his plaint in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Khandwa, alleging the value of the claim to be Rs. 1,125 for the purpose of jurisdiction also. After the trial had proceeded for some time, the Subordinate Judge returned the plaint on the ground that the value for purposes of jurisdiction and payment of Court-fees was Rs. 625 only so that the suit was triable by the Local Munsif. This view was rested upon the decision of two Judges of the Allahabad High Court in Husaini Khanum v. Husain Khan (1) and some remarks in Kothiram v. Ganpati (2). The plaintiff appealed to the District Judge who relied on Konna Panikar v. Karunakara (3) and held that Rs. 1,125 was the correct valuation of the suit for jurisdiction as well as Court-fees. It was, therefore, ordered that the Subordinate Judge should continue the trial.

The defendants have come here in revision and for them it is urged that, firstly, on the principle laid down in Deosthan of Sonegaon v. Mukunda (4) the valuations for Court-fees and jurisdiction must be the same and, secondly, that no additional Court fee is payable on the sum claimed for surplus receipts. For the plaintiff, on the other hand, it is urged that section 17 of the Court Fees Act applies as the suit embraces two or more distinct subjects, namely, recovery of the mortgaged land by redemption and recovery of a sum of money.

In my opinion the view taken in Husaini Khanam v. Husain Khan (1) is correct. It is true that in that case the plaintiffs claimed payment of any sum which might be due to them after taking of the accounts, whereas in the present case a definite sum of money is sought to be recovered. At the same time, paragraph 11 of the plaint indicates that Rs. 500 is only tentatively mentioned as the amount due, the plaintiff adding that he should be given such sum as might be found proper. Section 17 of the Court Fees Act relates only to suits which embrace two or more distinct subjects. Under clause (h), section 76 of the Transfer of Property Act, a usufructuary mortgagee is bound to pay any surplus realisations to a mortgagor and this provision suffices to distinguish the Madras case relied on by the District Judge where there is nothing to show that the claim for arrears of rent added to the claim for redemption arose out of the mortgage sued upon. For a similar reason, the present suit is not analogous to one brought to recover possession of property and mesne profits in respect of the wrongful occupation, claims which appear, from r. 4, O. II, First Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code, to be based on distinct causes of action.

It follows that, in my opinion, the view taken by the Subordinate Judge was correct and the suit should be tried by the Munsif. The order of the District Judge is accordingly set aside and the plaint will now be presented to the Munsif, Khandwa. Costs in the District Judge's Court and in this Court will be costs in the cause. I allow Rs. 15 as legal practitioner's fee for the hearing in this Court.

Appeal—New case.

Where a plaintiff sets up a claim to property attached in execution of a decree on the ground that the property belongs to him, having fallen to him on partition, and he fails to prove that any partition has taken place, he cannot be permitted in appeal to take an entirely new point that the property, even though joint family property, is not liable under the decree as necessary partiss were not impleaded in the suit.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Ferozepore, dated the 3rd March 1917, reversing that of the Senior Subordinate, Judge Ferozepore, dated the 20th March 1915.

Lala Hargopal, for Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. P. Khosla, for the Respondents.

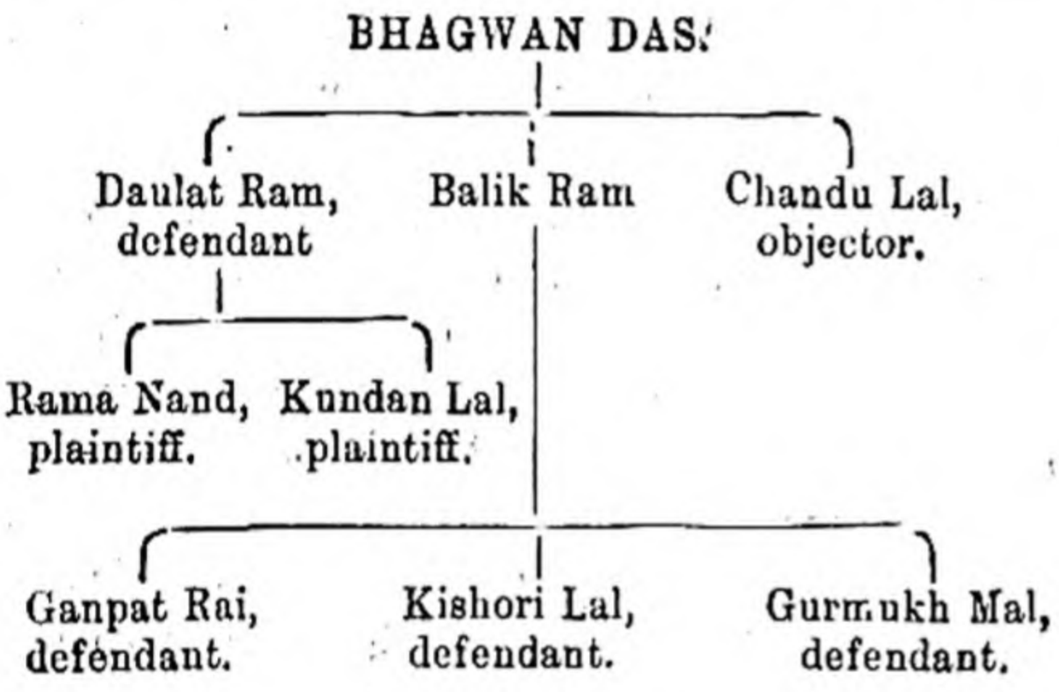
JUDGMENT.—The following pedigree table will afford assistance in an understanding of this and the two connected appeals :—



On the 21st December 1910 Roda Mal and others obtained a decree against Bhagwan Das and his grandsons, the sons of Balik Ram, for Rs. 1,045 and costs. The decree-holders sold this decree to Ram Chand who, in execution thereof, attached certain shops. Rama Nand and Kundan Lal thereupon preferred objections to the attachment claiming to be the sole owners of two of the shops attached. Their objections were disallowed. Thereupon they instituted two separate suits in which they sought to have it declared that the shops claimed by them were their sole property. Chandu Lal, son of Bhagwan Das, also preferred objections claiming that one of the shops attached belonged to him. All three of them asserted that there had been a partition of the joint family property in Sambat 1951 when all the family property, with the exception of the land, was partitioned. It was further alleged that in Sambat 1951 Daulat Ram and his two sons, Rama Nand and Kundan Lal, effected a further partition of their property. The Trial Court found that these partitions had not been proved and, therefore, dismissed the suits of Rama Nand and Kundan Lal and disallowed the objections filed by Chandu Lal. All three thereupon preferred appeals to the District Judge before whom an entirely new point was raised to the effect that, inasmuch as the suit by Roda Mal and others had not been brought against Bhagwan Das, etc., as managing members of the joint Hindu family, Bhagwan Das' sons and grandsons were not liable under the decree, even though the family was a joint one. This contention was given effect to by the learned District Judge who accepted the appeals and granted decrees in the two suits and allowed the objections by Chandu Lal. Ram Chand has now come up to this Court in second appeal through Mr. Hargopal while Mr. B. P. Khosla has addressed us on behalf of Rama Nand and Kundan Lal. Chandu Lal was represented by Mr. Gulati.

Mr. Hargopal pointed out that the question raised before the lower Appellate Court was never taken in the Trial Court and that it did not form a ground of attack in the appeals to the learned District Judge or to this Court. He contended that this was an entirely new point which should not have been considered by the lower Appellate Court. In our opinion the appellant's contention is correct. The respondents based their claims on certain partitions which they said had taken place. These partitions the Trial Court had held not to have been proved. The learned District Judge came to no decision on this point, but, as has been said above, proceeded to dispose of the case on an entirely new plea. This plea, in our opinion, should not have been entertained by the lower Appellate Court.

We accordingly accept all three appeals with costs and remand the cases to the Court of the District Judge for a decision of the appeals to him in accordance with law.

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is an appeal by Jotindra Nath Kumar against a judgment which was given by the learned Subordinate Judge of Hooghly, by which he allowed the appeal which had been preferred to him, and set aside the judgment of the Court of first instance and decreed the plaintiff's suit and declared that the election in question was invalid.

Jatindra Nath Kumar is defendant No. 3. He was also made a party as defendant No. 1 in his capacity of the then Chairman of the Municipal Commissioners of Katrung and the other defendants are Commissioners of that Municipality.

The defendants Nos. 2 to 4 and the plaintiff were candidates for election. These three defendants were elected and the plaintiff was not elected, the second defendant obtained 232 votes, the third defendant 200 votes and the fourth defendant 177 votes and the plaintiff obtained 113 votes. The total number of voters on the register was 298, and the total number of voters who registered their votes was 244. The election was held so long ago as the 5th of October 1918.

The suit was filed on the 4th of January 1919. In that suit the plaintiff asked for a declaration that the election, being in contravention of the plaintiff's right and franchise, right of election and right of being present at the following (?) place, was not at all, according to law, proper and valid and fit to be confirmed, that the same was ultra vires and that the said election was not fit to be in force and that proper order might be passed setting aside the said election. The second prayer was that it might be declared that the election of defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 was illegal. The third prayer was that an injunction should be issued restraining the defendant No. 1 from forming the Municipal Board with the defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4. Then there was a prayer for incidental reliefs.

The learned Munsif, as I have already mentioned, dismissed the suit. The lower Appellate Court decreed the suit.

There were two grounds which were relied upon before the lower Appellate Court; and the learned Subordinate Judge based his judgment upon one ground, namely, that there were 13 persons who had registered their votes, who, according to his opinion, were not qualified to be on the register as voters.

The learned Vakil who appeared in this Court for the plaintiff, in the first instance, stated that he based his right of action upon section 42 of the Specific Relief Act which runs as follows:—"Any person entitled to any legal character, or to any right as to any property, may institute a suit against any person denying, or interested to deny, his title to such character or right, and the Court may, in its discretion, make therein a declaration that he is so entitled, and the plaintiff need not, in such suit, ask for any further relief; provided, that no Court shall make any such declaration where the plaintiff, being able to seek further relief than a mere declaration of title, omits to do so." It was held in the case of Sobhopat Singh v. Abdul Goffur (1) that "the words 'legal character' are wide enough to include the right of franchise and also a right of being elected as a Municipal Commissioner." The suit in that case was a suit for adjudication and declaration of the plaintiff's right to vote and to stand as a candidate at the election of Municipal Commissioners which was held in Chupra in December 1893, and also for a declaration that he had been duly elected at that election. In the present suit the plaintiff is not asking for any declaration that he was elected at this Municipal election. But it was said that the words "legal character" are sufficient to include a person who as a candidate has a right to be present at the election and further to see that the election is properly held.

I confess I have considerable doubt, having regard to the form of this suit, and having regard to the declarations which were asked for in this suit, to which I have referred, whether this particular case would come within the words of section 42 of the Specific Relief Act. The late learned Chief Justice Sir Lawrence Jenkins had occasion to refer to this section in the case of Deokali Koer v. Kedar Nath (2) where he said at page 709* as follows: "The section does not sanction every form of declaration, but only a declaration that the plaintiff is entitled to any legal character or to any right as to any property; it is the disregard of this that accounts for the multiform and, at times, eccentric declarations which find a place in Indian plaints. If the Courts were astute—as I think they should be—to see that the plaints presented conformed to the terms of section 42, the difficulties that are to be found in this class of cases, would no longer arise." If I may say so, with respect to the learned Chief Justice, I entirely agree with him. During the course of the argument I intimated to the learned Vakil that he might have considerable difficulty in showing that the particular claims in this suit came within section 42 of the Specific Relief Act. The learned Vakil then changed his ground, and urged that section 15 of the Bengal Municipal Act contained a proviso to this effect: "provided that nothing contained in this section nor in any rules made under the authority of this Act shall be deemed to affect the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts." He then argued that the Court which tried the suit has inherent jurisdiction to set aside a Municipal election on the ground that it has not been properly conducted or in accordance with the Statute or the rules framed thereunder, and he stated that there have been many cases in which Courts in this country have set aside elections for such reasons as I have mentioned. For the purpose of my judgment, I propose to assume that the Court which tried this suit had inherent jurisdiction to deal with the suit, and—if a proper case had been made out—to grant such declaration and injunction as were prayed for in the plaint.

I, therefore, have to deal with the facts of this case; and I propose to deal first with the ground on which the learned Subordinate Judge relied, namely, that there were 13 persons who have recorded their votes, and who, according to the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge, were not qualified to be on the register of voters. The question is whether the facts which the learned Subordinate Judge has found are sufficient to support his judgment. It should be mentioned that the list of voters was settled by the Chairman of the Municipality. The plaintiff did not adopt the procedure which is laid down in the rules and object to the Chairman in respect of any names which were included in the [register] as to which he had an objection. But he did apply to the Magistrate; though there may be some doubt as to whether the Magistrate ought to have gone into the objection which the plaintiff put forward, inasmuch as the plaintiff did not make this objection in the first instance to the Chairman. The Magistrate did investigate the objections which the plaintiff made and he dismissed them; the result was that the persons to whom the plaintiff objected, remained upon the register. When the plaintiff brought his suit he did not specify the names of the persons as to whom he was going to object in the suit; and, at the trial, he seems to have made a somewhat roving attack upon certain persons with regard to whom he thought he could make a case. The learned Munsif came to this conclusion: "It is quite possible," said the learned Munsif "that one or two unqualified men may have been registered as voters but there is no evidence to prove thir," and, yet the learned Subordinate Judge who heard the appeal came to the conclusion that there were 13 persons as to whose qualification he was not satisfied. Assuming that finding to be correct,—as we must, because this is a second appeal—in my judgment, having regard to the facts of this case, that is not sufficient to justify the setting aside of the election: In fact, the learned Vakil who argued this appeal on behalf of the plaintiff did not really base his argument upon this ground, but relied mainly upon another ground to which I shall have to refer directly. It seems to me that even if we accept the finding of fact of the learned Subordinate Judge in the first appeal, it by no means follows that the plaintiff would have been elected even if the votes of all these 13 voters had been disallowed. Indeed, in my judgment, having regard to the number of votes recorded for the successful candidates and for the plaintiff, which I have already mentioned, it is apparent that even if the votes of the 13 voters, who were held to be disqualified, had been disallowed the result of the election would have been the same.

Now I come to the other point, upon which reliance has been chiefly placed in this Court, and that is, that the plaintiff was not allowed to be present at the place where the votes were being recorded. In a sense he was present, that is to say, he was on one part of the premises, whereas the votes were being recorded in another part. But in order to make clear what the position really was I will read a short passage from the learned Munsif's judgment in which he gives a graphic description of what took place. "The voting took place in the Municipal Office.....The votes were recorded by the Deputy Magistrate in the Hall of this building. A little on the south of the entrance the indentification stand was erected. The Head Clerk distributed the identification cards after satisfying himself as to the identity of the persons claiming identification cards. Each voter on receiving the card was examined at the entrance by the Chairman in the presence of the candidates and outsiders as to the correctness of the identity of each of the voters. Objections as to the right of the person to vote were invited at this stage with the idea that if there were any objections the Presiding Officer would be communicated with. There were no objections nor is there any allegation of false personation. From the entrance the passage to the Hall was fenced so that the voter had no other way of getting out except through the Hall where the Presiding Officer was seated." The learned Munsif then proceeds to refer to the fact that "the Act does not give any right to the candidate to be present at the place where the voting is recorded by any positive section." He goes on to say: "The so called right is inferred from the fact that a candidate is required by the Act to take objections, regarding the admissibility or otherwise of a voter, to the Presiding Officer at the time of recording the votes. Here although the candidates were not allowed in at the Hall where the votes were recorded, ample opportunity was provided to the candidates to take objections if they wanted. The Presiding Officer sat within hearing distance and also came out in the verandah to hear complaints if any. The plaintiff's right to be present arises from the fact that he can take objections before the Presiding Officer. Here his privilege of taking objections was not interfered with. The procedure was adopted on the suggestion of the Commissioner of the Division. There were complaints before him that Zemindars intimidated and used undue influence to secure elections in their own way. The Commissioner on enquiry was satisfied as to the truth of these allegations and suggested the present procedure to secure the free exercise of the right of franchise by the Municipal voters unhampered by threat or permission." That finding of fact has not been interfered with by the learned Judge; and, I should have been prepared to hold upon that finding of fact that there was no ground for setting aside this election.

I do not intend to express any general opinion as to how these elections are to be conducted. That is not my business. I am only concerned with the facts of this particular case; I have stated the facts as found by the learned Munsif; and, as I have already said, if the case rested there I should have been prepared to hold that the facts relating to this point did not disclose a sufficient ground for setting aside this election. I do not mean to say that I approve of the arrangement nor do I mean to say that I disapprove of the arrangement. I express no opinion in one way or the other. But the case does not rest there, because I find that on the day of the election the plaintiff himself wrote a letter to the Presiding Officer—and here I may mention that the Presiding Officer was a Sub-Divisional Officer, Mr. Dutt, against whose integrity and uprightness not a word has been said— the plaintiff wrote to him in these words: "In enclosing herewith a copy of my letter to the Chairman I beg to request that you will kindly consider the facts mentioned therein and either allow me or my agent to be present by the side of the Election Committee or you will kindly record the votes personally as the recording of votes in secret is quite illegal and fraud also might occur in the proceedings." Upon which Mr. Dutt made a note: "I am recording votes personally. So this may be filed." The plaintiff uses the phrase there "recording the votes in secret." It is perhaps right to add that votes were not recorded in secret: the Presiding Officer, as I have already said, was there, and there was a Committee consisting of three men who had been appointed by the Chairman of the Municipality. As against these three men, as far as I know, there is not a word to be said as regards their integrity and honesty.

Having regard to the facts found by the learned Munsif and having regard to the letter which the plaintiff himself wrote, which, in my opinion, amounts to a waiver of his alleged right to be present in the place where the votes were actually recorded, provided the Presiding Officer himself recorded them, in my judgment there is no ground for setting aside the election.

For these reasons, in my judgment, this appeal ought to be allowed, the decree of the lower Appellate Court set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored.

The plaintiff-respondent will pay the costs of the appellant in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court. The defendants-respondents will pay their own costs in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court. We assess the hearing fee in this Court at two gold mohurs.

The appeal being disposed of no order is necessary in respect of the Rule for stay of execution or in respect of the application of the Intervenor to be made a party to the Rule. The Intervenor will pay his own costs. We make no order as to the costs in the Rule.

CHOTZNER, J.—I agree.

MOHAMMAD YASIN ALI KHAN—DECREE-HOLDER—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXIII, r. 3—Compromise decree—Court competent to grant relief agreed to by parties—"So far as it relates to the suit," meaning of—Decree, compromise, interpretation of.

In a decree passed on the basis of a compromise there is nothing whatsoever in the terms of O XXIII, r. 3, Civil Procedure Code, to prevent a Court from granting a relief to a defendant which can be put in execution, so long as that relief has been agreed to by the parties and is one of the lawful considerations on which the compromise is based. [p 234, col. 2.]

The phrase "so far as it relates to the suit", as used in O. XXIII, r. 3, Civil Procedure Code, does not mean that in a compromise decree only such reliefs can be granted as the Court might have granted on the trial of a suit. All conditions which are considerations for the compromise are conditions relating to the suit and as such should be embodied in the decree. [p. 234, col. 2.]

In order to interpret a compromise which has been embodied in a decree, it should be read as a whole. [p. 234, col. 2.]

In a suit for pre-emption in respect of a 2-annas share in a village, a decree was passed in terms of a compromise according to which the plaintiff's suit in respect of 1-anna share was dismissed and the defendant was held entitled to receive possession of 1-anna share immediately after the termination of the lease under which the plaintiff was holding the village. It was contended that the suit being a simple pre-emption suit the defendant could not be given a decree for possession and that it should be construed as merely declaratory of his rights :

Held, that it was not merely a declaratory decree but one for possession and that the defendant was entitled on the expiry of the lease to apply for delivery of possession in execution of the decree under section 47, Civil Procedure Code, and that a separate suit for possession would not lie. [p. 234, col. 2.]

Appeal against an order of the District Judge, Fyzabad, dated 31st August 1921, upholding that of the Subordinate Judge, Sultanpur, dated 29th July 1921.

Dr. J. N. Misra, holding brief of Mr. G. N. Misra, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ali Mohammad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Bisheshar Singh, the appellant, brought a suit for pre emption in respect of a 2-annas share in Mauza Kachnaon. That suit was finally decided by this Court on the 23rd of June 1915. The decree of this Court was in terms of a compromise entered into between the parties. The first two paragraphs of that compromise run as follows:—

"(1) That out of a 2 annas share in suit in Mauza Kachnaon, Pargana Jagdishpur, Tahsil Musafirkhana, District Sultanpur, a decree in respect of a 1-anna share by right of pre-emption on payment of a moiety of the consideration money, Rs. 2,500 be passed in favour of the plaintiff against the defendant and the plaintiff-respondent's claim in respect of the remaining 1-anna be dismissed. Out of Rs. 5,000 the consideration money deposited by the plaintiff respondent in Court, he should withdraw Rs. 2,500 while the defendant appellant should realise from the Court the remaining Rs. 2,500,

"(2) That the plaintiff has continued to be in possession of the entire Mauza Kachnaon aforesaid, the property of Babu Ali Bahadur Khan, under a lease (mustajiri) which would expire in January 1919, and after the expiry of the period of lease (mustajiri) the plaintiff has the right to hold the said village in his possession on the basis of the mortgage-deed, dated the 16th May 1899, executed by the said Babu Ali Bahadur Khan, till redemption. Besides the said mortgage deed, other deeds of further charge, miscellaneous debts detailed below and other debts create a charge on Mauza Kachnaon and are due to plaintiff. But the defendant appellant shall be entitled to receive possession over his 1-anna share mentioned in paragraph 1 thereof immediately (fauran qabza pane ka mustahaq hoga) on the termination of the period of lease (mustajiri). The plaintiff-respondent shall be entitled to realise the money due to him in respect of the said mortgage-deed, etc, from Babu Ali Bahadur Khan, the mortgagor, and the defendant-appellant shall not be liable for the said debt in respect of his 1-anna share."

The only question in this appeal is whether under the terms of this compromise Mohammad Yasin Ali Khan who was the defendant in the suit is entitled to be put in possession of his 1-anna share in execution of the decree passed on the 23rd of June 1915 or whether this decree merely declares his title and he cannot obtain possession without bringing a separate suit. Both the Courts below have held that the decree of the 23rd of June 1915 is not merely a declaratory decree so far as the 1-anna share of Mohammad Yasin Ali Khan is concerned but that it is in fact a decree for possession after the expiry of the lease of that share held by Bisheshar Singh. The learned Counsel for the appellant argues that the suit was a simple pre-emption suit, that the plaintiff's claim was in respect of a 2-annas share but he got a decree in respect of a 1-anna share only and his suit in respect of the other 1-anna share was dismissed, that the respondent was defendant in that suit and in such a suit could not be given a decree for possession of a share and that, therefore, paragraph 2 of the decree cannot be interpreted as granting the defendant the suit a decree for possession of the 1 anna share in respect of which the plaintiff's suit for pre-emption was dismissed but must be construed as merely declaratory of the defendant's rights. R. 3 of O. XXIII of the First Schedule to the Code of Civil Prosedure provides that where it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court that a suit has been adjusted wholly or in part by any lawful agreement or compromise the Court shall order such agreement or compromise to be recorded and shall pass a decree in accordance therewith so far as it relates to the suit. The interpretation of the phrase "so far as it relates to the suit" has been the subject of discussion in various reported cases. In Venkatappa Nayanim v. Thimma Nayanim (1) it was held that these words must be restricted to a relief which the Court could have given in the suit, and will not embrace reliefs which could only have been given in a suit based upon a different cause of action. This view, however, was dissented from in Joti Kuruvetappa v. Icari Sirusappa (2). That was a suit for money where the plaintiff asked for a simple money decree and it was decided by a compromise in which the parties agreed that the amount decreed should be a charge on certain properties, and this agreement was embodied in the decree. It was held that the agreement to make the decretal amount a charge was an agreement relating to the suit and was rightly embodied in the decree. The learned Judges remarked that the language used in section 375 of the old Code, which corresponds to r. 3 of O. XXIII, was wide and general and it would be highly inconvenient if the parties should not be allowed to settle their disputes on such lawful terms as they might agree to without being restricted to such relief as one only of the parties had chosen to claim in the plaint. And in the case of Purna Chandra Sarkar v. Nil Madhub Nandi (3) it was held that a decree passed on a compromise cannot be regarded as ultra vires simply because it goes beyond the subject matter of the suit and contains other conditions, and that those other conditions, if they are considerations for the compromise of the subject-matter of the suit, must be incorporated in the decree, but if the other conditions are independent of it they may be regarded as mere surplusage. It seems to me that it would be putting much too restricted an interpretation on the words "so far as it relates to the suit" to hold that in a compromise decree only such reliefs can be granted as the Court might have granted on a trial of the suit and that all conditions which are considerations for the compromise are conditions relating to the suit and as such should be embodied in the decree. In my opinion, in a decree passed on the basis of a compromise there is nothing whatsoever in the terms of r. 3 of O. XXIII to prevent a Court from granting a relief to the defendant which can be put in execution so long as that relief has been agreed to by the parties and is one of the lawful considerations on which the compromise is based. In order to interpret the compromise which has been embodied in the decree it must be read as a whole and the intention of the parties clearly was that the plaintiff should be given a decree for pre-emption of 1-anna out of the 2-annas claimed on condition that the defendant should be given possession of the other 1 anna free altogether of the mortgage debt after the period of the plaintiff's lease had expired. The condition that the defendant should get possession of 1-anna free from the mortgage-debt after the period of the plaintiff's lease had expired was a consideration for the compromise of the suit for pre-emption and was rightly embodied in the decree. The words used both in the compromise and the decree are "that the defendant-appellant shall be entitled to receive possession over his 1 anna share mentioned in paragraph 1 thereof immediately on the termination of the period of lease: fauran qabza pane ka mustahaq hoga." This is not merely a declaratory decree but a decree for possession on the expiry of the lease. The defendant respondent was entitled on the expiry of the lease to apply for delivery of possession in execution of the decree under section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure and a separate suit for possession would not lie.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 25 (3)—Bond executed by Hindu father in lieu of time-barred debt—Contract, validity of—Sons, liability of, on death of father—Hindu Law—Extinction of claims by efflux of time.

It is within the competency of a Hindu father to execute a bond in lieu of a time-barred debt, and the bond amounts to a valid contract against him, under section 25 (3) of the Contract Act; on his death, therefore, his sons are liable to pay the money which he was bound to pay.

Narayanasami Chetti v. Samidas Mudali, 6 M. 293; 7 Ind. Jur. 357; 2 Ind Dec (N. S.) 483, followed.

Hindu Law does not recognise any rule as to the extinction of claims by efflux of time.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Ghazipur, confirming that of the Munsif.

Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, for the Appellant.

Mr. Uma Shankar Bajpai, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the defendant in a suit brought by the plaintiffs for recovery of the amount due to them on three bonds executed by the father of the defendant. The only plea which has been argued before us is one of limitation. The case has been put before us by the learned Vakil for the appellant in this form. He said that, on the date the father executed the bonds, which are now being sued upon, the earlier bonds in exchange for which the fresh bonds were executed had become barred by time and, therefore, there was no consideration for them, and execution of these bonds would not be binding on the sons. There is no doubt whatever that the father was competent to execute the present simple bonds in lieu of time-barred debts. Against him the contract would have been a valid one under section 25, clause (3) of the Indian Contract Act. Moreover, the Hindu Law does not recognise any rule as to the extinction of claims by the efflux of time, so that, looked at from any point of view, the bonds in dispute amounted to a valid contract made by the father. The father being dead, the sons were liable to pay the money which their father was bound to pay. This view finds support in Narayanasami Chetti v. Samidas Mudali (1). In our opinion the decree of the lower Appellate Court was a correct one. We accordingly confirm the decree of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sch. II, paras. 18, 22—Arbitration—Subsequent institution of suit about same subject-matter—Arbitration, supersession of.

The institution of a suit has not ipso facto the effect of superseding a previous reference to arbitration dealing with the same subject-matter, but if after the institution of the suit neither party applies for a stay of the hearing of the suit under paragraph 18 of Schedule II, Civil Procedure Code, either at the time of the settlement of issues or before it, the effect of such a failure is to supersede the arbitration for good and any decision which might be arrived at in that suit would be binding on the parties as if no reference to arbitration had been made prior to the suit. Civil revision against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Gonda, dated the 30th June 1921, upholding that of the Probationary Munsif, Gonda, dated the 6th December 1920.

Mr. Mohammad Ayub, for the Applicant.

Mr. Mohammad Wasim, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—Musammat Zainab and Musammat Budhna are the two widows of Makhdum. There was a dispute between them with regard to the property left by Makhdum, which was referred to certain arbitrators for decision by means of an agreement executed by them on the 18th November 1919. The arbitrators did not, however, come to any decision for a long time. On the 13th March 1920 Musammat Zainab filed a suit for partition against Musammat Budhna in the Court of the Munsif of Utraula. Musammat Budhna raised an objection that the value of the property in dispute exceeded the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Munsif. This issue was tried with the result that the plaint was directed to be returned to Musammat Zainab for presentation to the proper Court.

During the pendency of that suit no reference was made by either party to the previous reference to arbitration. Under paragraph 18 of the Second Schedule of the Code of Civil Procedure either party could have applied to the Court for the stay of the suit, stating that she was ready and willing to do all things necessary to the proper conduct of the arbitration. Such an application could only have been made at the time of the settlement of issues or before it, but no such application was actually made. The order, returning the plaint, was passed on the 1st June 1920. On the 12th June 1920 the arbitrators made an ex parte award after giving due notice to the parties. Musammat Zainab appeared, but Musammat Budhna decided not to appear before the arbitrators. Musammat Zainab next took steps to enforce the award by means of an application under paragraph 20 of the Second Schedule of the Code of Civil Procedure. That application has been thrown out by the Courts below on the ground that the parties had by their conduct cancelled the reference and that the award made thereafter was ultra vires.

The institution of a suit has not ipso facto the effect of superseding a previous reference to arbitration, dealing with the same subject matter; but if after the institution of the suit neither party applies for a stay of the hearing of the suit under paragraph 18 either at the time of the settlement of issues or before it, the effect of such a failure is to supersede the arbitration for good; and any decision, which might be arrived at in that suit would be binding on the parties as if no such reference to arbitration had been made prior to the suit. As pointed out in Arpavu Routher v. Seeni Routher (1) and Sheobabu v. Udit Narain (2), a private reference to arbitration of a subject of dispute does not prevent either party from filing a suit in a Court of Law in respect of the same matter, for the effect of paragraph 22 of the Second Schedule is to remove the bar which existed to the institution of a suit by a person who refused to abide by the contract of reference. If an application is made under paragraph 18 of the same Schedule for the stay of a suit and such stay is granted, the arbitration can proceed; but if such stay is refused and the order refusing the stay becomes final, the arbitrator becomes functus officio. There is, however, a third contingency, namely, where no application for stay is made within the limit allowed by law. The effect of the institution of the suit and its decision would in such a case equally be to supersede the arbitration and render any award made therein after the institution of the suit unenforceable.

The learned Counsel for the applicant, Musammat Zainab, contends that the plaint having been returned, the powers of the arbitrators, which had been temporarily suspended, revived, but there is no authority for such a proposition. A revival can only take place by means of a fresh reference to arbitration in Court or out of it in the manner provided by law. In Sukhnath Rai v. Nehal Chand (3) and Dinabandhu Jana v. Durga Prasad Jana (4) the effect of an order of stay made in a suit, the subject-matter of which was the subject of a previous reference to arbitration, was considered, and it was pointed out that the arbitrators were bound to wait until the Court in which the suit was instituted determined whether it would proceed with the suit itself or will stay its proceedings and refer the parties to their own chosen tribunal, namely, the arbitrators. In other words, they could not proceed with the arbitration till such a stay was granted. In Ram Prosad Surajmull v. Mohan Lal Lachminarain (5) it was held that where an action was commenced upon a contract which contained a provision for a reference to arbitration, and a reference to arbitration was made before the commencement of the suit and resulted in an award, the award was of no effect, unless the suit had been stayed pending the arbitration. No such application for stay was made in this instance, and the mere fact that the plaint was eventually returned after the preliminary issue had been decided made no difference. The reference did not revive by reason of the return.

The application is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Mortgage—Perpetual lease in favour of mortgagee—Same transaction—Clog on redemption.

Where a perpetual lease by a mortgagor in favour of the mortgagee of the property mortgaged and the mortgage form one and the same transaction, the lease acts as a clog on the equity of redemption and the Courts are bound on principles of equity to relieve against it.

Appeal from a decree of the First Additional District Judge, West Berar, Akola, in Civil Appeal No. 200 of 1919, dated the 28th February 1921.

Mr. A. V. Khare, for the Appellant.

Messrs. M. K. Phadke and M. R. Bobde, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—There is no force in this appeal. The facts are sufficiently given in the judgments of the two Courts below and it has been held that the document sued on is a usufructuary mortgage and not a perpetual lease. The appellant's prayer for a declaration that he was a perpetual lessee has not been granted and he comes up here claiming that he should have been so declared and contending that in any case the lease of the Inam lands during the lifetime of the executing Inamdar was valid and that three of the four fields were not covered by the mortgage. It was further contended that the condition of perpetual lease did not operate as a clog on the equity of redemption, ABDUR RAHMAN V. HAR NARAYAN.

The point really at issue is a very short one: it is, whether the lease and the mortgage were or were not parts of the same transaction. It is obvious that they were; and because they were parts of the same transaction the Courts are entitled to apply the principle of equity: see Bhimrao Nagoirao v. Sakharam Sabaji (1). I have no hesitation in finding that the mortgage and the lease were parts of the same transaction and the perpetual lease is a clog on the equity of redemption.

The result is that this appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. The appellant will pay respondents' costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 92—Execution sale, application to set aside—Notice of application, when to be given—Time for giving notice not limited.

It is not necessary that the notice required by r. 92, O. XXI, Civil Procedure Code, to be given of an application to set aside an execution sale, should be served on all the parties affected by the sale within thirty days of the date of the sale. The rule prescribes no limitation for giving such notice. Once notice is given to all the parties affected by a sale, the Court has authority to proceed to decide the application on its merits.

Mr. Zahur Ahmad, for the Appellant.

Mr. Makhan Lal, for Respondents Nos. 1 and 3.

Mr. G. N. Mukerji, for Respondents Nos. 4, 5 and 6.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from an order passed by the Subordinate Judge of Unao refusing to set aside a sale on the application of the judgment-debtor. The order of the learned Subordinate Judge points out that when the application to have the sale set aside was made, only two out of the six decree holders auction-purchasers were mentioned in the application. He has held that as the period allowed for making an application to set aside the sale had elapsed the other four decree-holders auction-purchasers cannot now be made parties to the application and that the applicant cannot now question the sale so far as those four persons who were not originally made parties to the application are concerned. He has further held that as those four persons have not been made parties notice cannot be issued to them and as they are persons affected by the sale the sale cannot be set aside under r. 92 of O. XXI. We are of opinion that this argument of the learned Subordinate Judge is fallacious. The application to have the sale set aside was made within the time allowed by law. In that application the number of the execution case was given and certain of the decree-holders auction-purchasers were mentioned. It is true that the names of four of the decree-holders were not included but notice was subsequently served on them of the application. It is not necessary that notice of the application should be served on all persons affected by the sale within 30 days of the sale. R. 92 of O. XXI merely provides that no sale shall be set aside until notice has been issued to all persons affected by it. But there is no limitation provided for giving such notice. In the present case the application to have the sale set aside has been made and notice has been given to all the parties affected by it. The Court is, therefore, in a position to proceed to decide the application on its merits. In the view which we take we are supported by the ruling Ganesh Bab Naik v. Vithal Vaman

Mahalya (1). We allow the appeal and set aside the order of the learned Subordinate Judge. The case will go back to the lower Court with a direction to readmit it on its original number in the register and to decide it on its merits. The respondents will pay the appellant's costs in this Court.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s 78—Contract to purchase ascertained goods—Delivery postponed by agreement—Property in goods, when passes—Suit to recover price of goods, maintainability of.

When a purchaser of goods agrees to take the goods as ascertained, but at his request delivery is postponed, the property in the goods passes to the purchaser, under section 78 of the Contract Act, as soon as the proposal for sale is accepted, and a suit to recover the price of goods is maintainable.

Second appeal from a decree of the Second Subordinate Judge, Cawnpore, confirming a decree of the Munsif.

Dr. Kailas Nath Katju and Mr. Indu Bhushan Banerji, for the Appellants.

Mr. Pearey Lal Banerji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the suit out of which this appeal has arisen are these:—The defendants' firm are proved to have contracted to purchase from the plaintiffs' firm 22 maunds, 14 seers and 13 chatacks of Balchar on the 27th of February, 1920, at a price which was fixed at Rs. 815 1-3.

The lower Appellate Court has believed the evidence of the witnesses produced by the plaintiff upon this point. According to the evidence the defendants' firm agreed to take these goods as ascertained but requested the plaintiffs' firm to postpone delivery until it was convenient for the defendants' firm to take delivery. In these circumstances, the provisions of the latter part of section 78, Act IX of 1872, come into operation. The parties had agreed that the delivery should be postponed. The property in the Balchar, therefore, passed to the defendants' firm on the 27th February 1920 as soon as the proposal for sale was accepted. Such being the case, the plaintiffs' suit, which was a suit for the price of goods sold, was regular and in proper form.

We, therefore, allow this appeal and pass the following decree. A decree will be given to the plaintiffs for Rs. 824-8-3 with interest pendente lite and future interest till the date of realization at 6 per cent. per annum from 1st of May 1920 up to the date of realization. The defendants' firm will pay their own costs and those of the plaintiffs' firm in all Courts. These costs will include in this Court fees on the higher scale. This decree will not be put into execution until the plaintiffs' firm deliver the 22 maunds, 14 seers and 13 chatacks of Balchar to the defendants of the quality agreed upon or make it available for the defendants' firm to take delivery.

Where an appeal is dismissed in default the effect is to relegate the parties to the position as if there had been no appeal, or as if it had been dismissed on the merits. [p 241, col 1.]

Though an order in execution does not operate as res judicata strictly within the meaning of section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908, such a decision becomes final between the parties upon general principles of law as an interlocutory order in the suit. [p. 241, col. 1.]

Mr. S. B. Gokhale for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In Suit No. 456 of 1905 a decree was drawn up on the 7th August 1905 which purported to be in accordance with the award of the Board of Conciliators who consolidated two mortgage-debts and other debts and ordered a total sum of Rs. 2,600 to be paid by 15 annual instalments with the direction for sale of two-thirds of the debtor's absolute occupancy fields to the creditor in full satisfaction of all debts in the event of non-payment of three consecutive instalments. The words used in the decree are that the "two-thirds shall be sold to them by him." The award on which the decree was drawn up did not make any mention of the execution of a sale-deed, but said that the property was in case of default to go to the creditor, and it is specifically mentioned that the mortgages will still remain in force.

It is contended here, as it was contended in the lower Courts, that the decree should have been in the form of a mortgage-decree and that, even as it stood, it is a mortgage decree and should not be executed merely by the defendant executing a sale-deed in favour of the plaintiff. It is contended on behalf of the appellant that the application for execution now before the Court should be regarded as an application for a decree final for foreclosure in which case time might possibly be granted to the appellant who does not get any time for payment under the order that a sale-deed should be drawn up. I cannot, however, deal with the matter of the interpretation of the award and the decree on the merits since this has already been the subject of judicial decision, though it is contended, probably correctly, that the decision was a wrong one. On 18th June 1919, the decree-holder applied for execution of the decree and asked that the decree should be executed by the judgment-debtor by executing a sale-deed. The following order was passed by the Court on 11th September 1919 :—

"Decree-holder, Behari Lal, present. Judgment-debtor absent. Order passed. It is ordered that the land is sold to the decree-holder in full satisfaction of the decretal debt now due. Judgment-debtor will execute the sale-deed. If not, the Court will execute it on behalf of judgment-debtor. One month's time is granted to execute the sale deed."

On 8th March 1920 the execution was struck off because the decree-holder had not in time paid the process-fees for noticing the judgment-debtor to execute a sale-deed. Meanwhile the judgment-debtor appealed against the order of 11th September 1919. The appeal was dismissed for default and the Appellate Court refused an application for restoring the appeal to file. Against this order an appeal was made to this Court and was dismissed on 5th November 1920. The decree-holder filed a fresh application for execution on 10th March 1920 and the judgment-debtor objected that the remedy asked for was not one warranted by the decree or the award, and it was contended that the decree holder was, therefore, bound to bring a regular suit either for foreclosure or that he must get the decree made final. On this the Subordinate Judge ordered that he could not re-open the question already decided by his order of 11th September 1919, but the judgment-debtor should execute a sale-deed as ordered. On appeal to the District Judge it was held that the First Court had rightly decided that the nature of the decree had already been determined by the order of 11th September 1919 and could not be re-opened. The District Judge upheld the decision of the Subordinate Judge

BHIKHARI DAS v. ABDULLAH.

In appeal to this Court it is urged that the remedy sought for is not in accordance with the decree based on the award. This may be so, but I have to see whether this matter has been concluded by the order of 11th September 1919. It is urged for the appellant, firstly, that as the appeal against that order was not dismissed on the merits but for default, the original order cannot be regarded as still subsisting. No authority at all to the point has been cited in support of this proposition. There is no doubt that the effect of the dismissal of the appeal for default is to put the parties in the same position as if there had been no appeal or as if it had been dismissed on the merits. This ground of appeal has no force in it.

It is secondly contended that, because the judgment-creditor did not proceed with his execution application but allowed it to be struck off on account of default, the order passed in those proceedings is no longer of any effect, since the proceedings did not come to any final determination on the merits. It has been held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that though an order in execution does not operate as res judicata strictly within the meaning of section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908, such a decision becomes final between the parties upon general principles of law as an interlocutory order in the suit: vide Ram Kirpal v. Rup Kuari (1), and Mungul Pershad Dichit v. Grija Kant Lahiri (2). As to the contention that the decision ceases to be a decision if the case is subsequently struck off, I would refer to Murlidhar Sukul v. Narsingh Das (3), where it is laid down that if an order has been made which directly or by implication determines the rights of the parties to an execution proceeding, the fact that the decree-holder does not choose to proceed with the execution and the case is struck off does not entitle any party to re-open the question upon which there has been a previous adjudication. There can be no doubt that the order of 11th September 1919 was an adjudication upon the question as to what was the nature of the decree and how it should be executed, and the fact that the execution application was subsequently struck off does not entitle the judgment-debtor to question the nature of the decision.

The case has been rightly decided by the lower Courts and the appeal is dismissed with costs. I fix Pleader's fee at Rs. 10.

Messrs. Hribans Sahai and Panna Lal, for the Appellant.

Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-appellant obtained a decree in 1913 for possession of certain property against certain persons and in execution of that decree he got possession of the major portion of the property in suit, but he was resisted by one Abdullah, who was not a party to the decree, on the ground that the premises in the possession of Abdullah were his own property and were not covered by the decree. The plaintiff applied to the Executing Court for possession against Abdullah but that Court by an order dated the 31st of July 1915 passed under

SHYAM NARAIN v. JADUNATH SINGH.

O. XXI, r. 99, upheld Abdullah's contention. This suit was brought in 1919 for possession of the property in Abdullah's possession. It has been dismissed on the ground that it was barred by limitation under Art. 11A of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act. In appeal before us it has been argued that that Article does not apply to a suit brought by a decree holder. This point seems to us to be covered by Sardhari Lal v. Ambika Pershad (1). In that case their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the opening words of Art. 11 of the Limitation Act XV of 1877, namely "a person against whom" included the decree-holder. Article 11A contains words to the same effect and, therefore, the ruling of the Privy Council is equally applicable to this new Article. This view was taken in this Court in Ganpat Rai v. Husaini Begam (2). R. 103 of O. XXI only enables a party other than a judgment debtor against whom an order is made under r. 98 or 99 or 101 to institute a suit to establish the right which he claims to the possession of the property. That, however, does not touch the question as to the period of limitation within which such a suit must be brought. In our opinion that is settled by Art. 11A of the present Limitation Act. In this view the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

The question whether such property would after her death form part of her personal estate, depends on whether she has shown any intention of appropriating it for her own benefit in her lifetime. A mere expression of opinion as to what she would do with it, would not amount to an act of appropriation. But where she has entered into an agreement showing how the property will be appropriated, her intention that it should form part of her personal estate, is sufficiently manifest. [p 245, col 2]

It is not necessary that such property should have come into her physical possession during her lifetime and a widow is competent to appropriate property to which she has established her title even though the same be wrongfully withheld from her by a person in unlawful possession of it. Appeal against an order of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Lucknow, dated the 19th April 1921, confirming that of the Munsif, South Lucknow, dated the 9th March 1921.

Messrs. Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava and Gaya Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. Surendra Nath Roy, for the Respondent.

ORDER.

DANIELS, J. C.—(August 17, 1921).—Musammat Janaka was the widow of Sultan Singh. She is dead. The respondent, Jadunath Singh, is both her heir and the reversioner of Sultan Singh. The decree holder-appellant, Shyam Narain, has obtained a decree against the respondent as heir to Musammat Janaka limited to her personal estate. In execution of that decree he seeks to attach a decree for mesne profits obtained by her against one Ram Sahai, the amount of which has been deposited in Court. The question in dispute is whether the amount decreed forms part of the assets of the deceased in the hands of her heir or whether it is an accretion to the estate of Sultan Singh.

Musammat Janaka had mortgaged certain property. She filed a suit for redemption alleging that the mortgage had been more than paid off from the profits of the property and that there was a surplus in the hands of the mortgagees. Her claim was allowed and she got a decree for redemption and for surplus profits collected by the mortgagees. It is these profits which are now in dispute.

There is no dispute that a widow has full power to dispose of the income of her husband's estate as it accrues. It is also settled by the decision of the Privy Council in Saodamini Dasi v. Administrator-General of Bengal (1) and subsequent cases, that a widow has full power during her lifetime to invest or otherwise dispose of accumulated income accruing during her possession of a widow's estate. On the other hand, it appears to be equally clear that savings which she does not attempt to appropriate during her lifetime pass to the reversioner as part of her husband's estate. In the words of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Isri Dutt Koer v. Hansbutti Kosrain (2): "If she has made no attempt to dispose of them in her lifetime, there is no dispute but that they follow the estate from which they arose." The decision in this case, therefore, depends on whether Musammat Janaka had shown any intention of appropriating these profits for her own benefit in her lifetime. The learned Subordinate Judge has not considered this point. He seems to have held, on the basis of an unreported Calcutta ruling, that because these profits never actually came into the hands of the widow they must necessarily form part of the husband's estate. I have examined the decision on which the learned Subordinate Judge relied, which is printed as Bhagabati Koer v. Sohodra Koer (3) and find that it does not lay down any such proposition. The judgment lays down that the true test to determine whether accumulations in the hands of a Hindu widow follow the estate is whether she intended to treat them as part of the estate or as temporary savings to be spent by her subsequently. A part of the property in dispute consisted of accumulations of rent due from tenants. As to this the Court remarked—and this is the passage especially relied on by the respondent—"In so far as the rents not realised from the tenants are concerned, it has not been seriously disputed that they cannot be treated as temporary savings liable to be applied in satisfaction of any personal debts of the widow." The ground of decision in the case appears to have been that there had been no attempt to appropriate this income.

In the present case the appellant relies on two circumstances as showing intention on the part of Musammat Janaka to appropriate these profits for her own benefit. The first is that before her death she had put the decree in execution. This circumstance appears irrelevant. It would be equally necessary for her to execute the decree whether the profits were to be spent by her or to be added to the estate. The second circumstance, however, has a very direct bearing on the question at issue. It is that in the very bond in favour of Shyam Narain, appellant, on the basis of which the decree now in execution was obtained, it was expressly stated by Musammat Janaka that if she could realise the amount of her decree against Shyam Narain, she would immediately pay off the debt in lieu of which she was executing the bond. This shows that she intended to appropriate the profits now in dispute in payment of her personal debt to the appellant.

It is objected by the respondent that this mortgage-bond is not proved. The document bears the Court's endorsement—"Let it remain on the file" (shamil misl rahe), but no other endorsement. Under these circumstances I remand the case under O. XLI, r. 25, to the lower Appellate Court for a finding as to whether the document, dated 18th December 1918, which is to be found at pages 5/1, 5/2, 5/3, of the file B of the Munsif's record, was executed by Musammat Janaka. The parties will be at liberty to adduce evidence. Seven days from the date of finding will be allowed for objections.

Messrs. A. P. Sen, B. K. Ghose and Gaya Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. J. K. Banerji, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

DANIELS, A. J. C.—(November 30, 1921).—The facts of this case have been stated in my order of remand of 17th August last which should be read as part of this judgment. Musammat Janaka, deceased, had obtained in her lifetime a decree against one Ram Sahai for redemption of a mortgage and for a considerable sum of surplus profits in the hands of the mortgagee which were due to her. It was found that the mortgage had been more than redeemed out of the profits of the property of which the mortgagee was in possession

(1) 20 C. 433; 20 I. A. 12; 6 Sar. P. C. J. 272; 17 Ind. Jur. 223; 10 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 293 P. C.).

On 24th July 1919 Musammat Janaka had executed a pro note in favour of Shyam Narain. Musammat Janaka died in February 1920. In March 1920 Shyam Narain obtained a decree on the basis of his pro note for a sum of Rs. 566 (as stated in the application for execution) recoverable from the assets of Musammat Janaka in the hands of the judgment-debtor respondent, Jadunath Singh. In execution of this decree Shyam Narain, who is the appellant before this Court, obtained an order attaching Musammat Janaka's decree for surplus profits already referred to. The judgment-debtor objected on the ground that these profits formed part of the estate of Musammat Janaka's husband, Sultan Singh, and were not assets of the deceased in his hands. Both Courts below have allowed his objection and Shyam Narain comes to this Court in second appeal. As was mentioned in my order of remand the respondent is at one and the same time the reversioner of Sultan Singh and the heir of Musammat Janaka.

The sole question at issue is whether this decree for surplus or mesne profits formed part of the assets of Musammat Janaka or not. In my order of remand I held that this depended on whether she had in her lifetime shown an intention of appropriating them for her own benefit. As evidence that she had done so the appellant relied on a covenant entered into by her in a mortgage-bond executed by her in favour of Shyam Narain in which she undertook to satisfy the debt she was incurring to him whenever she should obtain a decree for mesne profits against Ram Sahai and out of the amount of that decree. By an oversight it was stated in my order of remand that this covenant was contained in the very bond on which Shyam Narain's decree was based. This was not the case. The bond on which Shyam Narain got a money decree was a simple bond, dated 24th July 1919, for Rs. 500. The covenant in question was contained in a mortgage-bond for Rs. 750 executed on 18th December 1918. It was objected by the respondent that this mortgage-bond had not been proved and, therefore, the Court should not take it into consideration. The Trial Court having omitted to endorse on the bond whether it was proved or not, I remanded an issue on this point. The finding on that issue is in favour of the appellant and is not disputed. On the view of the law taken in my remand order that finding should naturally result in a decree in favour of the appellant.

The respondent has contended at the hearing to day, first, that the money could in no case be treated as assets of the deceased unless it actually came into her hands in her lifetime, and secondly, that as no decree for mesne profits had been obtained when the mortgage-bond of December 1918 was executed, anything said in that bond was a mere expression of intention as to what Musammat Janaka would do in the hypothetical event of her ever becoming possessed of this money and is, therefore, absolutely irrelevant for the purpose of this case.

In the case of a remand under O. XLI, r. 25, nothing has been finally decided and it is open to me, should I see reason to do so, to re-consider the view of the law on which the remand was based—Mashunnissa v. Kanis Sughra (4).

Before dealing with the respondent's contention it will be convenient to state briefly the history of the ligitation which resulted in the decree for mesne profits. This has been ascertained by reference to the records of this Court.

Musammat Janaka's suit was instituted in the year 1915.

On 28th April 1916, she obtained a decree in her favour from the Court of the Munsif.

On 14th November 1916, that decree was modified adversely to her by the District Judge on appeal. She came to this Court in second appeal. Her appeal was to a large extent accepted and by an order of remand, dated 31st July 1917, the case was sent back to the lower Court for an account to be made up on the basis of this Court's finding.

(4) 60 Ind. Cas. 975; 43 A. 377; 19 A. L. J. 189; 8 U. P. L. R. (A.) 80.

On 16th March 1918, the District Judge recorded a finding showing a sum of Rs. 1,722-5-8 as due to her on account of surplus profits. Both parties objected to the finding. The respondent's objections were rejected and those of Musammat Janaka were accepted in part, and by an order of 30th August 1918 this Court again remanded the case to the District Judge to prepare a correct account in accordance with the findings arrived at by this Court. The Munsif had originally found a sum of Rs. 2,512-10-9 to be due to Musammat Janaka, a fact which appears on the face of this Court's order and the order of this Court expressly states that the account prepared by the Munsif is to be taken as substantially correct and only to be modified by excluding certain items relating to grove lands.

Finally, on 8th December 1919, this Court gave Musammat Janaka a decree for Rs. 2,661-7-6 together with interest and costs.

In support of his contention that no item can be treated as assets of a Hindu widow unless it has come into her physical possession before her death the respondent has cited only one Calcutta case, Jhagabati Koer v. Sohodra Koer (3). That case has been fully discussed in my order of remand, and the respondent's Pleader has nothing new to say with regard to it. On principle there appears to be no reason why a widow should be precluded from exercising an act of appropriation with regard to property to which she has established her title and which is being wrongfully withheld from her by a person in unlawful possession of it. In this case it was quite certain at the time when she contracted to pay these mesne profits to the appellant, that a considerable sum of mesne profits would be due to her, and the only question remaining for decision was as to the exact amount. This is quite clear from the order of remand of this Court, dated 30th August 1918, which was passed three months previous to the execution of the mortgage-bond. I am quite prepared to agree with the respondent's contention that a mere expression of opinion as to what she would do with property which might at some future time come into her possession would not amount to an act of appropriation on the part of the widow. In this case there was much more than that. In the first place, proceedings for recovery of this money were actually pending, and, as I have said, the order of this Court had left no doubt that a considerable sum of money was actually due to her. In the second place, the contract which she made with Shyam Narain was not a mere expression of intention. There was a distinct agreement that the money should be applied in settlement of the mortgage which she was executing, and there was, moreover, a further covenant entitling the mortgagee to realise the mortgage-money out of the amount of the decree for profits which she expected to obtain. Under these circumstances, I hold that there had been a manifestation of intention by Musammat Janaka to appropriate the money sufficient to prevent its passing as a part of her husband's estate.

I accordingly allow the appeal with costs in all Courts and, setting aside the orders of the Court below, direct the Trial Court to restore the execution proceedings to the file and proceed with the execution from the stage which it had reached when the judgment-debtor's objection was allowed. I am informed that after the attachment the money was actually realised and paid into Court and that it was withdrawn after the passing of an order in the judgment-debtor's favour by one of the Courts below. Under these circumstances, the appellant will be entitled to apply to the Trial Court for appropriate relief under the provision of section 144 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), s. 16 (2) (a)—Acquisition of property by insolvent after adjudication—Receiver, vesting in—Declaratory suit by Receiver, competent.

NAGESHAR v. BHAGY DUBEY.

All property which is acquired by or devolves on an insolvent after the passing of an order of adjudication and before his discharge, vests in the Court or Receiver and becomes divisible among the creditors in accordance with the provisions of section 16 (2) a of the Provincial Insolvency Act, and the Receiver is entitled to a declaration that such property is saleable for the benefit of the creditors; he is under no obligation to sue for physical possession of the insolvent's property and can seek mere declaratory relief.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Moradabad.

Mr. S. A. Haidar, for the Appellant.

Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Although we do not agree with the reasons given by both the Courts below in support of their judgments, we are nevertheless of opinion that the decree in favour of the plaintiff is substantially correct. The plaintiff is Receiver in insolvency of one Abdur Rauf, who was declared insolvent on the 13th July, 1915. More than two years after the adjudication order a sister of the insolvent, Musammat Musharraf un nissa, died and Abdur Rauf, as one of her legal heirs, became entitled to a two-ninths share of her estate.

It appears that, after the death of Musharraf-un-nissa, the appellant before us managed in some way or other to have a mutation order made in her favour. It seems that she put forward a Will which she said had been executed in her favour by Musharraf-un-nissa who was her aunt.

The Receiver brought this suit asking for a declaration that a two-ninths share of the estate of Musharraf-un-nissa became the property of the insolvent, Abdur Rauf, on the lady's death and that it was saleable in satisfaction of the amount due to Abdur Rauf's creditors. It was, therefore, prayed that it might be declared that the name of Musammat Fatima had been entered in the revenue papers wrongly and contrary to facts.

Both the Courts have found that the story of the Will in favour of Mohammad Fatima is untrue.

A legal plea was raised in both the Courts below, namely, that the plaintiff was under an obligation to sue for possession and could not seek mere declaratory relief under the provisions of section 42 of the Specific Relief Act. Both the Courts below overruled this contention. The learned Judge of the First Court seems to have thought that because the property of an insolvent vests in the Receiver, that is the same thing as the Receiver's actually being in possession of the property. This view, of course, has not been supported. The learned Judge of the Court below held, however, that a declaratory decree was permissible inasmuch as the declaration which was sought for would enable the Receiver to sell or mortgage the property for the benefit of the creditors.

In our opinion the Receiver was entitled to ask for declaratory relief and to obtain it. Under the provisions of the Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), which were in force at the time the inheritance opened, all property such as may be acquired by or devolve on the insolvent after the passing of an order of adjudication and before his discharge, forthwith vests in the Court or Receiver and becomes divisible among the creditors in accordance with the provisions of sub-section (2), clause (a) of section 16. In these circumstances, we are satisfied that the plaintiff as Receiver was entitled to the relief which he claimed in paragraph 8, clause (a) of the plaint. We do not think that it can reasonably be argued that the Receiver was under an obligation to bring a suit for physical possession of the insolvent's property. The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Suit, dismissal of, in default—Restoration against some defendants and exemption of others by plaintiff—Court's power to restore against others.

JAGANNATH v. BALWANT SINGH.

Revision against the order of the Munsif, Fyzabad, dated the 19th July 1921.

Mr. H K Ghosh, for the Applicant.

Mr. M. Wasim, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—A suit was filed by the plaintiff for partition against two sets of defendants. One set comprised the defendants Nos. 1 to 6 and another set comprised the defendants Nos. 7 to 13. The second set denied the title of the plaintiff. On the date fixed for the hearing of the suit the plaintiff and the defendants Nos. 1 to 6 were not present. The defendants Nos. 9 and 10 were present. The suit was, therefore, dismissed for default. On the same day an application was made by the plaintiff for the restoration of the suit to the file. His allegation was that he was busy negotiating a compromise with some of the defendants and did not hear the call. In support of his allegation he filed a petition of compromise, showing the terms settled between him and the defendants Nos. 1 to 6 and stating that the remaining defendants Nos. 7 to 13 might be exempted from the claim. The Munsif allowed the application for restoration as against the defendants Nos. 1 to 6, who verified the compromise, and passed a decree against them in accordance with its terms.

The plaintiff did not evidently want to proceed with his application as against the remaining defendants, for in his petition of compromise he agreed to exempt them from his claim. No notice of the application for restoration was, therefore, sent to the defendants Nos. 7 to 13. When an application was filed by the plaintiff for the preparation of a final decree for partition, the Probationary Munsif, who succeeded the officer who had originally passed the decree, came to the conclusion that the defendants Nos. 7 to 13 were necessary parties and that they had been wrongly discharged. He further thought that the said defendants could very well question the validity of the preliminary decree for partition and object to its being made final. He, therefore, started proceedings suo motu for the restoration of the original suit, in which the preliminary decree was passed, as against the defendants Nos. 7 to 13 and ultimately set aside the ex parte order of dismissal and restored the suit as against them also. The procedure adopted by him was, however, absolutely irregular. The plaintiff had himself exempted the defendants Nos. 7 to 13 and contented himself with the restoration being effected as against the defendants Nos. 1 to 6 alone, with whom he had entered into a settlement. The Court had no power to take action of its own motion as against the defendants Nos. 7 to 13 and to restore the suit as against them.

The application is, therefore, allowed and the order of the Court below set aside. No order is made, in the circumstances, as to the costs of this proceeding in either Court.

Revenue and Civil Courts, conflict of—Landlord, civil suit by, for declaration that defendant not adopted son of deceased occupancy tenant—Relation of landlord and tenant subsisting between the parties—Civil Courts, jurisdiction of Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), ss. 5, 9, 187—Revenue Courts—Jurisdiction to decide questions of status or adoption

While it is necessary to guard against formulating any such general rule as that, a suit for a declaration of legal status cannot be entertained by a Civil Court merely because such a suit may be brought in consequence of a dispute which originally arose between landlord and tenant, nevertheless where it appears on an examination of the plaint in the light of the surrounding circumstances that the suit in fact offends against the provisions of section 187 of the Agra Tenancy Act, the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts is ousted. [p. 248, col .]

In all such cases it must be determined what is the real contest between the parties and what is the real object of the suit. [p 248, col. 2.]

L. an occupancy tenant died The defendant alleging that he was the adopted son of L applied for mutation of his name in place of the deceased. The landlord brought this civil suit for a declaration that the defendant was not the adopted son of L. From an examination of the pleadings it appeared that the relationship of landlord and tenant subsisted between the parties and the only dispute was as to the nature of the tenancy:

Held, (1) that the appropriate suit by either party would be under section 95 (a) and (b) of the Agra Tenancy Act, a suit as to which the cognizance of the Civil Courts was expressly ousted; [p. 249, col. 2]

(2) that the object of the present suit being to forestall that suit or else to enable the plaintiff to bring a suit for ejectment under section 8 on the ground that the defendant was a non-occupancy tenant, it was not cognizable by the Civil Court. [p 249, col 2.]

A Revenue Court has jurisdiction to decide a a question of status or adoption. [p. 250, col. 1.]

Letters Patent Appeal from the judgment of Mr. Justice Lindsay, reversing a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Meerut.

Dr. S. M. Sulaiman and Mr. Saila Nath Mukerjee, for the Appellants.

Mr. Gulzari Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts out of which this appeal arises are shortly as follows:—Lalji was an occupancy tenant of a holding in the village of Khajuri, of which the plaintiffs-respondents are the Zamindars.

Lalji died recently, and on his death the defendants appellants applied for mutation of their names in the place of Lalji, as being entitled to succeed to his occupancy holding. While those proceedings were pending, this suit was brought in the Court of the Munsif for a declaration that the defendants were not the grandsons of Lalji. The pleadings will be examined in detail later on. One defence to the suit was that it was not cognizable by the Civil Court.

The Munsif held that he had jurisdiction, as the prayer was for a declaration only, and on the merits, decreed the suit.

The defendants appealed and again objected to the jurisdiction of the Civil Court to entertain the suit. The District Judge upheld this contention, and dismissed the suit. The plaintiffs appealed to this Court, and a learned Judge of this Court allowed the appeal and sent the case back to the District Judge to try the appeal before him on the merits.

From that order, the defendants have brought this appeal under the Letters Patent.

After hearing full argument, we think the appeal must be allowed and the suit dismissed on the ground that it was not cognizable by the Civil Court.

This appeal raises the question of the conflict of jurisdiction between the Civil and the Revenue Courts in a particularly convenient form.

Section 167 of the Agra Tenancy Act provides, that all suits.....of the nature specified in the Fourth Schedule shall be heard and determined by the Revenue Courts and, except in the way of appeal as provided in the Act: "No Court other than a Revenue Court shall take cognizance of any dispute or matter in respect of which any such suit ...might be brought."

In Ram Charitar Rai v. Jiani (1), (to which decision one member of this Court was a party) it was laid down that, while it is necessary to guard against formulating any such general rule as that, a suit for a declaration of legal status cannot be entertained by a Civil Court merely because such a suit may be brought in consequence of a dispute which originally arose between landlord and tenant, nevertheless an examination of the plaint in the light of the surrounding circumstances may show that the suit in fact offends against the provisions of section 167. It was there pointed out that a plaint might be so drafted in which a mere declaration as to the existence of a valid marriage, or as here, of a valid adoption, might have been sought in respect of which it could scarcely have been held that the jurisdiction of the Civil Court was ousted.

The ratio decidendi of that case was that in all such cases we must determine what was the real contest between the parties and what was the real object of the suit. And for this purpose we must examine the plaint with care. Two similar cases are Dori Lal v. Sardar Singh (2) and Sri Mahant Bramha Birham Khushal v. Umera (3).

The plaint opens with the statement that Lalji was an occupancy tenant of the plaintiffs who are the Zamindars of the village. He died "without leaving any son or other legal heirs" one and a half months before the suit. Thereupon, the defendants, who are described as the grandsons of Lalji's sister, made an application in the Revenue Courts on the 3rd January 1918 for the entry of their names as occupancy tenants in the place of the deceased Lalji. They asserted that Lalji executed a deed of adoption on 11th February 1905 stating that he had adopted Gobind as his son and that the defendants are the sons of Govind, who is also dead.

The plaint goes on to say that Lalji also made two Wills in defendants' favour but that both are "legally null and void" and that the defendants have not acquired occupancy rights.

(1) 21 Ind. Cas. 859; 36 A. 48; 11 A. L. J. 1022.
(2) 5 A. L. J. 514; A. W. N. 1909, 240.
(3) 18 Ind. Cas. 957; 35 A. 299; 11 A. L. J. 810.

With regard to the adoption, it is stated that Lalji was a Gaur Brahman by caste, and thus could not legally adopt his sister's son. Other objections were taken to the adoption culminating in the assertion that, as a matter of fact, it never took place. Govind died four years before suit in the lifetime of Lalji.

Then comes a very significant statement which really contains the kernel of the case for the plaintiffs:—Paragarph 7. "The defendants are the grandsons of the sister of Lalji deceased. Their father, Govind, was not adopted by Lalji, and their possession over the occupancy holding of Lalji is simply that of non-occupancy tenants from year to year"

The cause of action is said to have accrued on the 3rd January 1918 the date of defendants' application for mutation of names, and in the beginning of February 1918 when the defendants refused to withdraw that application. This act is stated to be "prejudicial to the plaintiffs' rights" and hence the suit.

The only relief sought is, "that it may be declared that Govind was not the adopted son of Lalji, and that the defendants are not the grandsons of Lalji."

Now the plaintiffs admit that they are the landlords and that the defendants are in possession as their tenants, but only as non occupancy tenants from year to year and it seems fairly obvious from the plaint itself that the object of the suit is to get a declaration that will prevent the defendants from establishing their claim to succeed to Lalji's occupancy holding.

When we turn to the written statement, the matter is placed beyond all doubt.

The defendants say, in effect, that Lalji who had no son did adopt Govind, and that by a special custom of the brotherhood, the adoption of a sister's son was valid. That ever since the adoption which took place before 1905, (when the deed of adoption was executed), Lalji brought up Govind, got him married, and that Govind and his sons, the defendants, have all along been sharing in the cultivation of the occupancy holding and living with Lalji. After the death of Govind, Lalji executed the two Wills in defendants' favour merely as a precaution, and the plaintiffs have brought this suit to deprive them of their occupancy holding. Lastly, it is pleaded that the dispute can only be decided by the Revenue Courts, and the claim for a declaration cannot be maintained, and the suit is not cognizable by the Civil Court.

Taking the pleadings together, it is admitted that the relationship of landlord and tenant subsists between the parties and that the tenancy is still existing. The only dispute is as to the nature of that tenancy. Is it an occupancy tenancy, as the defendants claim, or a non-occupancy tenancy from year to year, as the plaintiffs assert?

The answer depends, according to the parties, on whether Lalji's alleged adoption is proved and is valid in law.

We must now turn to see whether any one of the suits specified in the Fourth Schedule to the Agra Tenancy Act might be brought in respect of the dispute between the parties; because if there is an appropriate suit provided in the Revenue Court, then the cognizance of the Civil Courts is ousted.

It seems to us that a suit by either party would lie under section 95 (a) and b). A suit under this section is included in group C, item No. 34 in the Fourth Schedule and, therefore, the object of the present suit is either to forestall a suit under section 95 at the instance of the defendants for a declaration that they are occupancy tenants of the holding, or to strengthen the hands of the plaintiffs in the event of it being necessary for them to bring a similar suit for a declaration that the defendants are non-occupancy tenants, or else to enable the plaintiffs to bring a suit for ejectment under section 58 on the ground that the defendants are non-occupancy tenants. The suit being of this nature, we are of opinion that it is not cognizable by the Civil Court.

It was, however, argued by the learned Advocate for the plaintiffs, that the question of jurisdiction was purely academic and that whether the original Court had or had not jurisdiction, once the matter went on appeal to the District Judge, he and this Court have jurisdiction to decide it, having regard to the provisions of sections 196 and 197 of the Act. This view seems to have commended itself to the learned Judge of this Court. In his judgment he says:—

"It is clear that no Revenue Court has jurisdiction to pronounce a final decision upon a question of status or adoption. If the decision of the lower Appellate Court is maintained and the plaintiffs are referred to a suit under section 95 of the Tenancy Act, in the Revenue Courts, the question of adoption will necessarily come up for disposal. It is only on the basis of an adoption that the defendants in any circumstances could be held to be entitled to occupancy right in this holding.

"I am unable, therefore, to see why in the present case, this suit should not be entertained and disposed of by a Civil Court, which admittedly is the only Court which can come to a final decision upon the question of adoption, and although the purpose of the plaintiffs may be eventually to obtain a decision from the Revenue Court that the defendants are merely tenants-at-will and not occupancy tenants, I fail to see why, having asked the Civil Court for a relief which the Civil Court alone is competent to give, the Civil Court should decline jurisdiction."

The learned Judge's decision seems largely to be based on the assumption that the Civil Court alone could decide the question of adoption. In this view we are unable to agree.

We have, however, to consider whether sections 196 and 197 can apply. Section 197 only applies, if under section 196 the appeal lies to the District Judge or High Court.

In our opinion the appropriate suit for the plaintiffs to have brought was for a declaration under section 95 of the Tenancy Act. Turning to group C of the Fourth Schedule, we find such a suit (item No. 54) is triable by an Assistant Collector of the First Class, and the appeal lies to the Revenue Court and not to the District Judge or High Court.

Section 197, therefore, has no application

The result is we allow the appeal, set aside the order of remand made by this Court, and restore that of the District Judge dismissing the suit.

The appellants will be entitled to their costs throughout, which in this Court, both before the Single Judge and here, will include fees on the higher scale.

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Hardoi, dated the 28th July 1921, confirming that of the Munsif, Sandila, dated the 15th September 1920.

Mr. Zahur Ahmad, for the Appellant.

Mr. Basudeo Lal, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—The point at issue in this case is whether an appeal filed before the learned District Judge of Hardoi was filed within time or not. The judgment of the Trial Court was pronounced on the last day before the Civil Court vacation. The copy of the judgment was applied for on the day on which the Courts reopened after the vacation. The question is whether under these circumstances the appellant is entitled to include the vacation as part of the time requisite for obtaining the copy under section 12 (2) of the Limitation Act. The appeal was actually filed on 25th November. If the vacation is counted as part of the time requisite for obtaining the copy it was within time; if not, it was time-barred.

So far as I am aware the only direct authority on the points contained in the regular law reports is the case of Saminatha Ayyar v. Venkatasubba Ayyar (1). There are also two other cases in which the question was decided in favour of the appellant. One of these is a Patna case Debi Charan Lal v. Mehdi Hussain (2). The other is a Calcutta case Sri Chandan Bhuya v. Haroo Sethi (3). In the former case the leading judgment was delivered by Sir Edward Chamier who held that a case like this was not covered by any general rule but must be decided with reference to its special circumstances. He further remarked that so far as he was aware it was the universal practice to exclude the day on which the case was decided for all purposes connected with the calculation of limitation for an appeal. The Madras case of Saminathra Aygar v. Venkatasubba Ayyar (1) was followed and approved. The only authority to which I have been referred on the other side is the case of Donopudi Subramanyam v. Nune Narasimham (4) in which a doubt was expressed of the correctness of the decision in Saminatha Ayyar's case (1). The later case was, however, not on all fours with the earlier, as in that later case the application for a copy was not made on the day of re-opening of the Courts but some days later. The general rule, in my opinion, undoubtedly is that laid down by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Bechi v. Ahsanullah Khan (5) that the time requisite for obtaining a copy does not begin until an application for copies has been made. The case in which the judgment was not delivered until the last day before vacation and the application is made on the first day after it is, however, in my opinion, an exception to that rule. There is nothing to show at what hour the judgment was delivered. It may have been delivered just as the Court was rising for the day. For practical purposes it must be taken that an application made as soon as the Courts re-open was made on the earliest occasion on which it was possible to make it and under these circumstances it is only reasonable to include the vacation as part of the time requisite for obtaining the copy. If the application had not been made on the day on which the Courts re opened my decision might have been different but under the circumstances o this case I am of opinion that the appellant is entitled to succeed.

I accordingly set aside the decision of the Court below and direct the learned District Judge to admit the appeal and decide it on the merits. The appellant will get his costs of this appeal. Other costs will abide the result.

Civil Procedure Code Act V of 1908, O. XXII, r. 4 (1) —Preliminary decree—Death of defendant—Representative not brought on record—Abatement of suit—Locus standi of heirs to apply for final decree.

Therefore where after the passing of a preliminary decree the defendant dies and no application is made under O. Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Benares, confirming that of the Munsif, Jaunpur.

Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, for the Appellants.

Dr. Kailas Nath Katju, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts are as follows:—Baldeo Singh and Lakhpati executed a deed of usufructuary mortgage in favour of Bhurai. Ram Karan Singh and others instituted a suit to set aside the mortgage. On the 8th September 1914 a compromise was executed between the plaintiffs and the defendants to the effect that if the plaintiffs paid Rs. 1,200 to Bhurai on or about the 15th June 1916, the mortgage would stand redeemed and that if they did not pay that amount by that date, the mortgage property should be put to sale and the amount due to Bhurai should be recovered therefrom. A portion of the mortgage money was paid before the 10th July 1916, and the parties agreed to an extension of time by which the remainder should be paid within a year later. Bhurai died, it is not clear when, but at any rate, before the end of 1916. Now, Moti Lal v. Ram Narain (1), is authority for the view that a preliminary decree does not put an end to a suit which remains pending till the final decree and that, therefore, when a defendant dies after a preliminary decree has been passed, the provisions of O. XXII, r. 4 have application. It is thus clear that in so far as Bhurai was concerned as no application was made under sub-r. 1, O. XXII, r. 4 for the substitution of his legal representatives within the time of limitation following his death, the suit abated against him.

On the 14th June 1919 the sons of Bhurai applied that a final decree should be prepared in the suit. Their application has been dismissed by the Munsif whose order has been upheld by the District Judge. Their application must clearly be dismissed. We need not go into the points taken by the District Judge. It is only necessary to note one point which was fatal to the application at the beginning. The suit had abated against Bhurai. The applicants have no locus standi. They profess to represent a man against whom the suit abated some years ago. They may have other remedies. We express no opinion upon that point but they certainly have no remedy in this manner as they are not parties to the proceedings. We accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

Where a person acquires possession of a holding under a sale, which is in contravention of the provisions of the Central Provinces Tenancy Act, he cannot, on being dispossessed, recover the money paid by him as consideration for the sale. But before he is dispossessed he is entitled to claim compensation, and the deed evidencing the sale is admissible in evidence to prove the passing of consideration. [p. 254, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the Additional District Judge, Wardha, in Civil Appeal No. 165 of 1919, dated the 10th February 1920.

Mr. W. V. Gharpure, for the Appellants.

Mr. M. B. Kinkhede, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The parties to this appeal are co-sharers in Mouza Keli in the Wardha Tahsil. Defendant holds a one pie share in the village. One Musammat Raji was the tenant, in ordinary right, of fields Nos. 40 and 39 at the village. In the plaint the plaintiffs allege that Musammat Raji had relinquished her holding and defendant was in possession. They claimed joint possession to the extent of their shares. Defendant pleaded that Musammat Raji surrendered the land to him by a registered deed, dated the 28th November 1916, taking Rs. 776 from him. The surrender was with the consent of the lambardar Gajrabai, who, on the 16th May 1917, confirmed such consent by a written document. Defendant had, therefore, been recognised as a tenant of the proprietary body and could not be ejected. But should it be held that plaintiffs were entitled to joint possession they shou'd only be given possession on payment of their quota of the amount paid by defendant for the surrender.

The findings of the First Court may be summarised thus :

The lambardar's consent was not obtained at the time to the transaction, but was subsequently obtained by the document of 16th May 1917, that the lambardar does not represent the proprietary body in matters inter se between the co-sharers, and the consent given in the present case was invalid not making the defendant a tenant. The transaction was a sale, not a surrender, but registration of a sale being prohibited under section 71 of the C. P. Tenancy Act, the defendant obtained no absolute title by the document of the 28 h November 1916. The consideration for the sale was held proved, and in equity defendant was entitled to a re-imbursement to the extent of plaintiffs' share before they could obtain possession.

After remanding the case on an allegation regarding improvements said to have been made to the land for trial by the lower Court, the lower Appellate Court held that defendant acquired no proprietary right in the land. Dealing with the question of law the Judge writes: "It is next urged that as the transfer to the defendant was a sale and not a surrender, and as the lands were of ordinary tenure, so the deed was not validly registered and was not admissible in evidence to prove the passing of the consideration. There can be no doubt but that the deed should not have been styled as a deed of surrender. Its registration cannot hence be taken to be valid. The deed would, however, be admissible in evidence to prove a collateral fact like the passing of the consideration which is independent of the purpose to effect which the law requires registration. [Narayan Bisnoi v. Jaswant Singh (1), Kalicharan v. Lal Inlar Shah (2) and Sambu v. Nama (3)]. The plaintiffs seek to share in an advantage gained by the defendant. They are bound to pay their share of the expenses of acquiring the advantage [Moolchand v. Ohittoo (4)]." The appeal and a cross objection filed by defendant were both dismissed.

It is here contended that the deed evidencing the transaction was not admissible in evidence and should not have been looked at to prove the passing of consideration and that plaintiffs are entitled to joint possession without payment. It cannot be said that the defendant in taking the fields from Musammat Raji represented the proprietary body. The consent of the lambardar was not taken at the time. Her subsequent consent given for consideration as expressed in the document of the 16th May 1917 cannot bind the proprietary body: defendant did not obtain tenancy rights in the land, as the deed by which he acquired the land is not a surrender it is a transfer: see Ramdayal v. Gulabia Bai (5). The defendant, therefore, acquired possession under a sale, and such sale being void under the Tenancy Law, the document should not have been registered. The question, therefore, arises whether money paid in contravention of section 70 (5) of the Tenancy Act can be recovered. It was held in Bharath Singh v. Debi Dayal Singh (6) that in the case of a sale made to circumvent the Statute prohibiting the sale of ex-proprietary rights the consideration was not recoverable. Similar cases are Murlidhar v. Pem Raj (7), Dipan Rai v. Ram Khelawan Rai (8) and Bhikham Singh v. Har Prasad (9). Defendant, if he had failed to get possession, could not have recovered the consideration from Musammat Raji on the ground that the so-called surrender was a sale in contravention of the Tenancy Act, and the registration obtained was a fraud upon the Registration Statute. Can he, nevertheless, claim compensation from the plaintiffs before they are given possession? I think under the law prevailing in this Court, Moolchand v. Ohittoo (4) he can, and the deed is admissible in evidence to prove the passing of consideration.

The result is that this appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Musammat FAKHR JAHAN BEGAM— DEFENDANT NO. 2 AND OTHERS —RESPONDENTS

Muhammadan Law—Sunni—Gift—Will—Distinction—Gift, essentials of—Usufruct, reservation of, by donor—Possession, constructive, by donee—Registration—Zemindari estate Mutation of names—Construction of document—Gift or Will—Taluqdari law—Primogeniture sanads—"Successor," meaning of.

In Muhammadan Law the broad distinction between a gift hiba and a bequest wasiat is that in the case of a gift the immediate right of property in the subject-matter of the gift is conferred and in the case of a bequest the vesting of the right of property is postponed. [p. 259, col. 2]

For a valid gift inter vivos under the Muhammadan Law three conditions are necessary:—(1) manifestation of the wish to give on the part of the donor, (2) the acceptance of the donee, either expressly or impliedly, and 3 the taking of possession of the subject-matter of the gift by the donee, either actually or constructively. [p. 260, col. 2]

The reservation of usufruct by a donor does not by itself make a gift of the property void under Muhammadan Law. [p. 260, col. 1.]

A Taluqdar made a gift to the following effect: "I have gifted my moveable and immoveable property, all my Zemindari and lambardari estate, etc. to M. with the exception of the villages set out below which will remain in my possession for the duration of my life and dependent relatives free of rent and Government revenue...such villages will be kept by me without transfer by mortgage or sale or gift for my lifetime and after my death the donee will be the proprietor malik) of the aforesaid excepted property whose revenue the donee will pay from the Ilaqa, and will pay all the debts outstanding against the estate." M. did not take physical possession of the excepted villages till after the death of the donor nor did he apply for mutation of names in his favour in respect of them. He, however, obtained mutation of names in his favour of all the other Zemindari property and paid the Government revenue which became due in respect of the taluqdari part of the entire property:

Held, (1) that the document could not even in regard to the excepted property be regarded in any respect as a Will but was a deed of gift inter vivos; [p. 260, col. 1]

(2) that the whole Zemindari property mentioned in the deed must be regarded as one property, the taking possession of any part of which being constructively a taking possession of the whole. [p. 260, col. 2.]

(3) that the actual physical possession of the donee over a portion of the zemindari estate and the mutation of names in respect thereof and the payment of Government revenue by him in respect of the taluqdari part of the entire estate must be regarded as amounting to constructive possession of the donee over the whole property, subject of the gift in question, and that the gift of the excepted villages was also consequently valid. [p. 261, col. 1.]

Nawab Umjad Ally Khan v. Musammat Mohumdee Begum, 11 M. I. A 517 at pp. 547, 558; 10 W. R. P. C. 25; 2 Suth P. C. J. 98; 2 Sar. P. C. J. 315; 20 E. R. 195, referred to.

In considering what is the Muhammadan Law on the subject of gifts inter vivos it must be borne in mind that when the old and admittedly authoritative texts of Muhammadan Law were promulgated there were not in the contemplation of any one any Transfer of Property Acts, any Registration Acts, any Revenue Courts to record transfers of the possession of land or any zemindari estates, large or small, and that it could not have been intended to lay down for all time what should alone be the evidence that titles to lands had passed. The object of the Muhammadan Law as to gifts apparently was to prevent disputes as to whether the donor and the donee intended at the time that the title to the property should pass from the donor to the donee and that the handing over by the donor and the acceptance by the donee of the property should be good evidence that the property had been given by the donor and had been accepted by the donee as a gift. [p. 260, col. 2.]

The word "successors" in a primogeniture sanad means those designated persons who would succeed in the event of an intestacy and not persons who may take by sale, gift or bequest. [p. 259, col. 1.]

Consolidated appeals from a judgment and two decrees of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, Oudh, dated the 19th December 1917, reported as 45 Ind. Cas. 507, reversing a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Kheri.

Mr. DeGruther, K. C. and Mr. Kenworthy Brown, for the Appellants.

Mr. Dube, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

SIR JOHN EDGE.—These are consolidated appeals by the plaintiffs from two decrees, dated the 19th December 1917, of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, which reversed the decree, dated the 13th July 1915, of the Subordinate Judge of Kheri and dismissed the suit.

The suit was brought on the 20th February 1914, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge by Mohammad Abdul Ghani Khan and Mohammad Abdul Rahman Khan against Mohammad Hamidullah Khan, Musammat Fakhr Jahan Begum, Musammat Asghari Begum, Musammat Chand Bibi and Pandit Sheo Dayal for the possession of Mauza Mundia Misir, a 4 annas 5-pies share in

ABDUL GHANI KHAN v. FAKHR JAHAN BEGAM.

Mauza Gundhia, and two groves, a house and certain sir land in Jalalpur and for mesne profits. It was a suit of ejectment on title. The plaintiffs alleged that the right to possession of all the properties in suit was in them as the heirs of Mussammat Munni Bibi, who had died on the 16th June 1906, and that the defendants had no title. The defendants, who are the respondents, were not all jointly interested in any of the properties. Some of the defendants were in possession of some of the properties, others of the defendants were in possession of other parts of the properties in suit, but the different titles of all the defendants originated in a document of the 7th March 1884, which was executed by Munni Bibi, and has been variously construed as a deed of gift and as a Will.

Munni Bibi was the widow of Niamat-ullah Khan, who died childless on the 29th August, 1867. Niamat-ullah Khan, Munni Bibi and the plaintiffs, who were her first cousins, were Muhammadans of the Sunni sect, and the plaintiffs were, when Munni Bibi died in 1906, her heirs, according to the Muhammadan Law applicable to Sunnis. The family to which these Muhammadans belonged had several centuries ago been Thakurs professing the Hindu religion, who were converted to Islam, and at one period of this suit it was contended by the defendants, or some of them, that the family had always continued to be governed in matters of succession and inheritance by the rules of the Mitakshara and not by the Muhammadan Law. That contention has been abandoned.

Niamat-ullah Khan lived in the village of Jalalpur and was a taluqdar of Oudh. After the Mutiny of 1857 he received from the British Government the taluqa of Agar Buzurg, which included, with many villages not now in question, all the immoveable property in question in this suit except the 4 annas 5-pies share in Mauza Gundhia, which was granted to Munni Bibi on the 15th November 1876 by the British Government absolutely in her own right. Although Niamat-ullah Khan had died in 1867, his name was entered as that of the taluqdar of the taluqa Agar Buzurg in lists I and II, which were prepared under Act I of 1869. Instances of the names of other persons who had died before 1869 being entered in those lists occur.

The British Government granted to Niamat-ullah Khan in his lifetime a primogeniture sanad in which the taluqa Agar Buzurg is described as the estate of Jalalpur in Zillah Mohamdi. That sanad is as follows:—

"C. WINGFIELD,

"Chief Commissioner of Oudh.

"To

NIAMAT-ULLAH OF JALALPUR.

"Know all men that whereas by the Proclamation of March, 1858, by His Excellency the Right Honourable the Viceroy and Governor-General of India, all proprietory rights in the soil of Oudh, with a few special exceptions, were confiscated and passed to the British Government, which became free to dispose of them as it pleased, I, Charles John Wingfield, Chief Commissioner of Oudh, under the authority of His Excellency the Governor-General of India in Council, do hereby confer on you the full proprietary right, title and possession of the estate of Jalalpur in Zillah Mohamdi consisting of the village as per list attached to the kabuliyat you have executed, of which the present Government revenue is Rs. 5,752 (five thousand seven hundred and fifty two).

"Therefore this sanad is given you in order that it may be known to all whom it may concern, that the above estate has been conferred upon you and your heirs for ever, subject to the payment of such annual revenue as may from time to time be imposed, and to the conditions of surrendering all arms, destroying all forts, preventing and reporting crime, rendering any service you may be called upon to perform and of showing constant good faith, loyalty, zeal and attachment to the British Government according to the provisions of the engagement which you have executed, the breach of any one of which at any time shall be held to annul the right and title now conferred on you and your heirs.

"It is another condition of this grant that in the event of your dying intestate, or of any of your successors dying intestate, the estate shall descend to the nearest male heir, according to the rule of primogeniture, but you and all your successors shall have full power to alienate the estate either in whole or in part by sale, mortgage, gift, bequest, or adoption to whomsoever you please.

"It is also a condition of this grant that you will, so far as is in your power, promote the agricultural prosperity of your estate and that all holding under you shall be assured in the possession of all the subordinate rights they formerly enjoyed. As long as the above obligations are observed by you and your heirs in good faith, so long will the British Government maintain you and your heirs as proprietors of the above mentioned estate, in confirmation of which I herewith attach my seal and signature."

The kabuliyat mentioned in the sanad, related to more than 30 villages and included Mauza Mundia Misir and Mauza Agar Bozurg (Jalalpur), parts of which are claimed by the plaintiffs in this suit. The plaintiffs do not claim any interest in any of the other villages mentioned in the kabuliyat, and do not contend that Munni Bibi was not entitled to give or bequeath those other villages to whom she liked. As will be seen presently, her title to, and interest in, all the villages mentioned in the schedule to the kabuliyat was as the devisee of her husband Niamat-ullah Khan.

On the 20th May 1865 Niamat-ullah Khan made the folloing Will:—

"I am Muhammad Niamat-ullah Khan, talukdar of Jalalpur, Pargana Karanpur and Aligauj.

"Whereas the Government has asked for a Will from the declarant, and the declarant has no issue and is issueless up to this time, and it is necessary to appoint a legatee after me, I, while in the enjoyment of sound health and perfect intellect, during my litetime, having executed this Will, declare that, after me, my wedded wife shall be the owner and possessor of the moveable and immoveable property, like myself. If the heirs belonging to the brotherhood lay a claim, the same shall be invalid and untenable before the Government. Wherefore I have executed these few presents by way of a Will so that it may serve as an authority and be of use in time of need.

"Scribed by Najju Khan, General Agent. Dated, 20th May 1865.

"Niamat-ullah Khan,

"Talukdar of Agar Buzurg."

Under the sanad Niamat ullah Khan had power to bequeath the taluqa of Bazarg (the estate of Jalalpur) to whom he pleased, and under that Will the taluqa passed on his death on the 29th August 1867 to his widow, Munni Bibi. At the date of the Will of Niamat ullah Khan, there were living two younger brothers of Niamat-ullah Khan, of whom Latf ullah Khan was the elder and Ibrahim Khan was the younger. Those younger brothers survived Munni Bibi. One question in this case is whether Munni Bibi was a "successor" of Niamat ullah Khan within the meaning of the sanad; if she was, she had power to make a gift of or to bequeath the whole taluqa or any part of it to whom she pleased. If she was not a "successor" of Niamat-ullah Khan within the meaning of the sanad, she had power to make such a gift as would be recognised as a valid gift by the Mahammadan Law applicable to Sunnis, of the whole taluqa or of any part of it to whom she pleased.

On the 7th March 1884 Munni Bibi executed a document which has been construed by the Subordinate Judge as partly a deed of gift and in part a Will, and has been construed by the Judicial Commissioner as a deed of gift. As translated by the official translator it is, so far as is material, as follows:—

'I am Thakurain Musammat Munni Bibi, wife of Mohammad Niamat-ullah Khan, talukdar of Mirzapur and Jalalpur, Parganas Bhur and Paila, District Kheri.

"Whereas my husband, during his lifetime bequeathed the entire property of the aforesaid taluqa to me, and I, in accordance with the said Will, am in possession and ownership of the same; now I, while in sound health and in possession of perfect intellect, without force, and reluctance of my own free will, make a gift of the moveable and immoveable property, the entire zamindari and lambardari estate, etc., in favour of Mohammad Lutfullah Khan, son of Mohammad Ibad-ullah Khan, the brother of my husband, the detail whereof is being given below with the exception of the villages and sir lands, etc., of the estates specified below, which, shall, during my lifetime, remain in my and my relation's possession, free of rent and without payment of Government revenue; and I do hereby invest the donee with the power to have the mutation of names effected in his favour. Now I have nothing to do with the gifted property and estate. I shall keep the villages and sir lands, which have been exempted hereunder for my life, time without the power of alienation by mortgage, sale and gift; and after me the donee shall also be the owner of the said exempted property. The donee shall pay the Government revenue of the exempted estate from the ilaqa with the exception of the revenue of patti village Gandhia, which I shall pay out of my own pocket. The donee shall pay all the debt with which the estate is encumbered, I, the donor, having nothing to do therewith. Wherefore I have executed these few words by way of a deed of gift on a stamp of Rs. 600 8-0 by fixing the value of the property at Rs. 60,000 (sixty thousand) so that it may serve as an authority and be of use when required.

"Detail of the gifted immoveable property together with the amount of revenue and the boundaries.

"Detail of the moveable property gifted Rs. 2,610

"Detail of the property exempted Rs 1,555.

"Pargana Bhur, Rs. 1,490.
"Village Mundia standing in the name of me, the donee, during life, rent and revenue free Rs. 855

Mr. Kanhaiya Lal, in his judgment on the appeal to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, gives a slightly different translation of part of the document of the 7th March, 1884, as follows:—

"Now in sound health and full possession of my senses, without any persuasion or compulsion and of my own accord I have gifted my moveable and immoveable property, all my zamindari and lumbardari estate, etc., to Muhammad Lutf ullah Khan, son of Muhammad Ibad-ullah Khan, the brother of my husband, according to the details given below with the exception of the villages and sir land, etc., set out below, name by name, which will remain in my possession for the duration of my life and my dependent relatives free of rent and Government revenue, out of the aforesaid estate. At this time having exempted them I have made a gift, and by virtue of the deed have authorised the donor to get mutation of names made in his favour, and now I have nothing to do with the estate and property gifted; and such villages and sir land aforesaid as have been at this time for the duration of my life excepted (left out) will be kept by me without transfer by mortgage or sale or gift for my lifetime, and after my death the donee will be the proprietor (malik) of the aforesaid exempted property, and of the exempted property the donee will pay the revenue from the ilaqa except of the patti Mauza Gundhia. Of the patti Gundhia, I will pay the revenue from my own pocket and the donee will pay all the debts outstanding against the estate. I have nothing to do with them. Therefore these few words have been written by way of a deed of gift of inheritance and proprietorship on a stamp of Rs. 600-8-0 on a stated value of Rs. 60,000 as a title-deed which will be useful at the time of need."

In the opinion of their Lordships there is no material difference between the two translations, they bear the same meaning. It should be mentioned that the punctuation in each translation is the punctuatin of the person who made the translation. "Patti Mauza Gundhia" was the 4 annas 5-pies share in Mauza Gundhia which the Government had, subject to the payment of the Government revenue, granted to Munni Bibi absolutely in 1876.

On the execution of the document of the 7th March 1884 Lutf ullah Khan got actual possession of all the property mentioned in it except Mauza Gangipur and the property now in question in this suit. Of the property now in question Lutf ullah Khan did not obtain physical possession until Munni Bibi died in 1906.

Lutf-ullah Khan mortgaged, on the 27th November 1907, the 4-annas 5-pies share in Mauza Gandhia for Rs. 11,000 to the defendant Pandit Sheo Dayal. Lutf-ullah Khan died some years later, leaving him surviving his widow, Musammat Chand Bibi, and his son, Hamid-ullah Khan. Hamid-ullah Khan, after his father's death, transferred to his wives, Musammat Fakhr Jahan Begam and Musammat Ashgari Begam, or to one of them, portions of the property now in question. On the 17th January 1913, there being then due to Pandit Sheo Dayal Rs. 20,000 under the mortgage of the 27th November 1907. Hamid-ullah Khan, Musammat Chand Bibi and Musammat Ashgari Begam sold the 4-annas 5-pies share in Mauza Gondhia to Pandit Sheo Dayal for Rs. 21,000.

Before referring to the judgments of the Trial Judge and in the Court of the Judicial Commissioners, it is advisable to mention some other matters. Niamat-ullah Khan's youngest brother was Ibrahim Khan, who died and left four sons surviving him, of whom Ehsan-ullah was the eldest. Ehsan-ullah and his three brothers on the 20th December 1910, brought a suit against Hamid-ullah Khan, his two wives, and Muhammad Abdul Ghani Khan and Muhammad Abdul Rahman Khan, who are the plaintiffs in the present suit, and in their plaint, alleging that Munni Bibi had by a Will of the 10th June 1906, bequeathed to their father, Ibrahim Khan, Mauza Mundhia Misir, the 4-annas 5-pies share in Mauza Gundhia, and the two groves, the house and sir land in Mauza Jalalpur, all of which are claimed by the plaintiffs appelants in the present suit, asked for a decree for possession. To that suit these plaintiffs-appellants offered no defence, and on the contrary the plaintiff appellant here, Muhammad Abdul Gani Khan on the 4th November 1910, wrote to Ehsan-ullah as follows :—

" Claim for possession.

"My dear Muhammad Ehsan-ullah Khan and Abdullah Khan, raises of Jalalpur.

"After affectionate greetings I write to say that as regards the property left and possessed by my deceased sister, Munni Bibi, the wife of Niamat-ullah Khan, taluqdar and rais of Jalalpur, you enquire about, I do not at all turn against the purport of her Will. You can obtain the said property under the Will by bringing a suit or otherwise, and I have no objection. You are quite free to take necessary steps. Abdul Rahman Khan too says the same thing. I have enquired from him also.

" With kindest regards.

" Yours affectionately,

"ABDUL GHANI KHAN,

"Taluqdar of Kukra.

" Dated 14th November 1910. "

Muhammad Abdul Ghani Khan was called as a witness for the plaintiffs in the suit of 1910, and on being shown his letter of the 4th November 1910, said: "This letter I wrote with the permission of my brother, Abdul Rahman Khan, who is joint with me " and " I never thought of the matter whether I am entitled to the assets of Munni Bibi or not. I disclaim a share in the property if I am entitled to it." When Abdul Ghani Khan gave his evidence in that suit he was 42 years of age, and it appears to their Lordships impossible to believe that he and his brother had never before 1910 considered the question as to whether they as the heirs in Muhammadan Law of Munni Bibi had any claim to any part of the valuable property which had been hers. The plaintiffs in the suit of 1910 failed to prove the execution of the alleged Will, and their suit was dismissed.

The learned Subordinate Judge, Mahmud Hasan, who tried the present suit, construed the document of the 7th March, 1884, as a Will, so far as it related to the property in question here, and as a deed of gift so far as it related to the other property dealt with by it. He held that section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, did not apply to the cases of Pandit Sheo Dayal and of the other transferees, and as he considered that it was not proved that Munni Bibi's heirs had assented to the bequest by her of the property in question, he gave the plaintiffs a decree for the possession of a two-thirds share of that property. It should here be mentioned that it does not appear from the record that Pandit Sheo Dayal had given evidence in this suit or that he had made any enquiry as to the title of Lutf ullah Khan to mortgage, or the title of Hamid ullah Khan and his mother and wife to sell the 4 annas 5-pies share in Mauza Gundhia. From that decree the defendants, Musammat Fakhr Jahan Begam and Pandit Sheo Dayal appealed to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner. Their appeals raised the question as to the true construction of the document of the 7th March 1884 and consequently raised the question as to the right of the plaintiffs to maintain this suit. The plaintiffs filed cross-objections.

The appeals and the cross-objections were heard by the learned Judicial Commissioners,

ABDUL GHANI KHAN v. FAKHR JAHAN BEGAM.

Mr. Stuart and Mr. Kanhaiya Lal, and they delivered their very carefully considered judgments on the 19th December 1917. Mr. Stuart held that under the taluqdari sanad Munni Bibi was a successor within the meaning of the term "successors" in that sanad, and consequently had an absolute power to give or bequeath the taluqdari property to whomsoever she pleased, a power of alienation which was not controlled by Muhammadan Law. Mr. Kanhaiya Lal was of the contrary opinion; he rightly held that as Munni Bibi obtained her title to the taluqdari property, not by right of inheritance under the sanad but under the Will of her husband, Niamat ullah Khan, she was not a successor within the meaning of the sanad.

In 192 , the Board, in Ghulam Abbas Khan v. Amatul Fatima (1), which was an appeal from Oudh, held that the word "successors" in a similar primogeniture sanad meant those designated persons who would succeed in the event of an intestacy and not persons who took by sale, gift or bequest. Had it not been for Niamat-ullah Khan's Will the taluqdari property would, on his death, have vested by right of inheritance under the sanad in Lutf-ullah Khan, who was the elder of his two brothers. Under the circumstances, Munni Bibi's right to dispose by gift or by Will of the taluqdari property was the right of an owner under the Muhammadan Law, and was the same right which she had to dispose of the 4-annas 5-pies share in Manza Gandhia.

The Judicial Commissioners agreed in their construction of the document of the 7th March 1884 and held that it was, and operated as, a deed of gift, and that all the property mentioned in it passed as a good and valid gift under the Sunni Law to Lutf-ullah Khan. They held that Munni Bibi by that deed transferred the corpus of the property, the taluqdari property and the 4 annas 5-pies share in Manza Gandhia, to Lutf-ullah Khan, reserving to herself for her life the usufruct of the property in question in this suit. Apparently they based their judgments on a decision of the Board in 1867, in Nawab Umjad Ally Khan v. Musammat Mohundee Begum (2).

It had been contended on behalf of the plaintiffs before the Judicial Commissioners that there had been no possession of this property now in question given to or taken by Lutf-ullah Khan, and that consequently the gift was void under the Muhammadan Law, but they considered that the clear intention of Munni Bibi as shown by her deed was that the title to this property should immediately vest in Lutf-ullah Khan, and that she should have no right to sell, mortgage, or otherwise dispose of the property, and they found that as the usufruct was reserved for her life by Munni Bibi it was not possible for physical possession of the property in the suit to be given to Lutf-ullah Khan in Munni Bibi's lifetime. In the opinion of the Judicial Commissioners everything which was reasonably possible to make perfect the gift had been done and that nothing more was required to make the gift a good gift according to Muhammadan Law. The Judicial Commissioners, by the decree of the 19th December 1917, set aside the decree of the Subordinate Judge, and dismissed the cross-objections and the suit. From the decree of the Judicial Commissioners these consolidated appeals have been brought.

Their Lordships will now consider whether the document of the 7th March 1884 may be regarded, so far as the property now in question is concerned, as a Muhammadan Will, and if it is not a Muhammadan Will, but is a deed of gift, then the question arises whether, in the circumstances of this case, the gift of this property to Lutf-ullah Khan became a valid gift under the Muhammadan Law applicable to Sunnis.

In construing the document of the 7th March 1884 it has to be borne in mind that in Muhammadan Law the broad distinction between a gift (hiba) and a bequest (wasiat) is that in the case of a gift the immediate right of property in the subject of the gift is conferred, and in the case of a bequest the vesting of the right of property is postponed. Owing to the fact that there is in India no uniform or accurate system of conveyancing, and to the fact that deeds and Wills are in India, as a rule most inartificially drawn up, frequently by persons not possessed of legal knowledge, it is often difficult to ascertain with certainty what was precisely intended by the document, and, in some cases, to ascertain whether the document was intended to operate as a deed of gift or as a Will. Their Lordships have, for the following reasons, come to the conclusion that the document of the 7th March 1884, cannot be regarded in any respect as a Will,

On the 7th March 1884 Munni Bibi was, as she recited in the document, the owner in possession of the entire property of the ilaqa (the taluqa of Agar Buzurg) which her husband had bequeathed to her, and she was also the owner in possession of the 4 annas 5-pies share in Mauza Gundhia; that 4-annas 5-pies share and the taluqdari property constituted her zemindari estate. As their Lordships read the deed, Munni Bibi by it made a gift to Lutf-ullah Khan of "my moveable and immoveable property, all my zemindari and lumbardari estate, etc," reserving to herself for her life the usufruct of the property now in question, but making it clear that by that reservation of the usufruct she did not reserve to herself any right to transfer by mortgage or sale or gift any part of the property. As their Lordships read the deed, it was intended to be and to operate as an immediate and irrevocable disposition of all Munni Bibi's moveable and immoveable property, and all her zemindari and lambardari estate mentioned in the deed and in the schedules to it, subject to the reservation for her own use during her lifetime of the usufruct of the property in question here, and it must be construed as a deed of gift and not as a Will.

The reservation of the usufruct did not by itself make the gift of the property now in question void under Muhammadan Law. So far as that is concerned, there is the authority of the Board in Nawab Umjad Ally Khan v. Musammat Mohumdee Begum (2) for that statement as to Muhammadan Law, although the parties in that case were Shias and not Sunnis. But in the Courts below and in this appeal it has been contended that the deed of the 7th March 1884 is void so far as it purported to be a gift of the property in question, in this suit, on the ground that no possession was actually taken of this particular property and no mutation of names in respect of this particular property was obtained, by Lutf-ullah Khan until Munni Bibi had died in 1906.

That contention has raised a question by no means easy of solution. The solution of that question depends upon what are the facts here and upon what is the rule of Muhammadan Law applicable to those facts. In considering what is the Muhammadan Law on the subject of gifts inter vivos their Lordships have to bear in mind that, when the old and admittedly authoritative texts of Muhammadan Law were promulgated, there were not in the contemplation of any one any Transfer of Property Acts, any Registration Acts, any Revenue Courts to record transfers of the possession of land or any zemindari estates, large or small, and that it could not have been intended to lay down for all time what should alone be the evidence that titles to lands had passed. The object of the Muhammadan Law as to gifts apparently was to prevent disputes as to whether the donor and the donee intended at the time that the title to the property should pass from the donor to the donee, and that the handing over by the donor and the acceptance by the donee of the property should be good evidence that the property had been given by the donor and had been accepted by the donee as a gift.

For a valid gift inter vivos under the Muhammadan Law applicable in this case, three conditions are necessary, which their Lordships consider have been correctly stated thus:—"(a) manifestation of the wish to give on the part of the donor; (b) the acceptance of the donee, either impliedly or expressly; and (c) the taking of possession of the subject-matter of the gift by the donee, either actually or constructively." (Muhammadan Law, by Syed Ameer Ali, 4th Edition, Volume I, page 41). In their Lordships' opinion the whole zemindari property mentioned in the deed, and not parts of it only, must, for the purposes of this case, be regarded as one property, the taking possession of any part of it being constructively a taking possession of the whole. The wish of Munni Bibi to give that property to Lutf-ullah Khan and his acceptance of it on the 7th March 1884, are clearly manifest from a perusal of the deed which he received and acted upon The question is, did Lutf-ullah Khan actually or constructively take possession of the property in question in this suit? That he did not, until Munni Bibi's death in 1903, take physical possession of Mauza Mundia Misir, the 4 annas 5 pies share in Gundhia or the two groves, the house and sir land in Jalalpur, or apply for mutation of names in his favour in respect of those particular properties, is admitted. On the execution of the deed of gift in 1884, Lutf-ullah Khan did obtain mutation of names in his favour of all the other zemindari property, and from the 7th March 1884, until Munni Bibi died in 1903, he paid the Government revenue which became due in respect of the taluqdari part of the property now in question. If Lutf-ullah Khan had received, after the 7th March 1884, and before Munni Bibi died in 1906, any of the rents or profits of the property now in question, he would be held to have received them as a trustee for Munni Bibi although the title to the corpus of the property was in him. In their Lordships' opinion Lutf-ullah Khan must be regarded as having been constructively in possession, although not in physical possession of the corpus of the property now in question from 1884 until 1903, and the gift was a valid gift.

Their Lordships will accordingly humbly advise His Majesty that these consolidated appeals should be dismissed with costs Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 82—Mortgagor, rights of, purchased by mortgagees—Redemption.

Where the integrity of a mortgage is broken, a mortgagor who owns a part of the equity of redemption can redeem his own part, but where the rights of the mortgagors have vested partly in a prior mortgagee and partly in a subsequent mortgagee after a suit has been brought by each of them to enforce his mortgage, the former cannot be compelled to redeem the whole nor can he compel the latter to give up his interest in the share of the mortgagor which he has acquired. In such a case the rights of the parties can be properly safeguarded by applying the principle recognised by section 82 of the Transfer of Property Act and allowing redemption in respect of such rights as have been acquired by each party. JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff-appellant for the redemption of a two-thirds share of Katra Gulab Singh situated in Kashmiri Bazar, Agra. The Katra originally belonged to Dhumi Singh who left three sons, Jawala Prasad, Bhawani Shankar and Debi Shankar. On the 28th November 1877 these three brothers mortgaged two stables and a house situated in Katra Gulab Singh in favour of Sukhdeo Rai. The mortgage was simple. On the 6th March 1878 the three brothers mortgaged the said Katra Gulab Singh with other properties with possession in favour of Sheikh Abdullah. On the 30th May 1878 two of them, Bhawani Shanker and Jawala Prasad, mortgaged their two-thirds share of Katra Gulab Singh in favour of Durga Prasad.

On the 15th August 1879 Sukhdeo Rai sued on his mortgage of the 28th November 1877 without impleading Sheikh Abdullah or Durga Prasad and obtained a decree for sale, in execution of which the mortgaged property, namely, two stables and a house in Katra Gulab Singh, was sold by auction and purchased by Sheikh Abdullah, the subsequent usufructuary mortgagee. On the 12th October 1879 Durga Prasad sued on his mortgage of the 30th May 1878 without impleading any of the prior mortgagees and got a decree for sale, in execution of which he brought to sale the two thirds share of his mortgagors in Katra Gulab Singh and purchased it himself.

The present suit has been filed by the plaintiff-appellant, who is the son of Durga

Prasad, for the redemption of the usufructuary mortgage of the 6th March 1875 in respect of that two-thirds share. The defendants are the sons of Sheikh Abdullah. One of them disclaimed any interest in the mortgage; the other defendants pleaded that they had spent a considerable amount in the repairs and improvements of the mortgaged property and that a sum of over a lac and seventy-six thousand was due to them under the mortgage. There were other pleas too, with which this appeal has no concern.

The Court of first instance held that the contesting defendants had spent Rs. 1,000 in repairs, that they were not entitled to claim the cost of any additions or improvements made by them, and that Rs. 8,343 5 4 were due to them on account of a two-thirds share of Katra Gulab Singh purchased by the plaintiff. It decreed the claim accordingly for redemption subject to the payment of the said amount. On appeal the lower Appellate Court allowed to the defendants a right to redeem the mortgage of the 28th November 1877 on the payment of the amount of the decree obtained on foot of that mortgage by Durga Prasad within a certain date, and further directed that if such payment was not made, it shall proceed to determine upon payment of what amount the plaintiff should be allowed to redeem the mortgage held by the defendants. In effect it recognised the right of the defendants, who had purchased two stables and a house in Katra Gulab Singh in satisfaction of the mortgage of the 28th November 1877, to redeem the subsequent mortgage of the 30th May 1878 in preference to the plaintiff who by virtue of his purchase claimed a right to redeem the prior usufructuary mortgage of the 6th March 1878.

No question of preference is, however, really at issue No right of redemption was claimed by the defendants in their written statement or otherwise asserted in the course of the trial. The rights of the original mortgagors have been split up. The defendants have purchased two stables and a house in Katra Gulab Singh in satisfaction of a prior mortgage and they are entitled to retain the same until some person entitled to redeem comes forward to pay the money due on that mortgage. The plaintiff holds the rights of a puisne mortgagee under the mortgage of the 30th May 1878 and has purchased the rights of two of the mortgagors in Katra Gulab Singh in satisfaction of that mortgage. A portion of the rights of the original mortgagors has thus vested in the defendants and another portion in the plaintiff; and the plaintiff cannot be allowed to redeem more than what he has purchased on payment of a proportionate share of the mortgage money any more than the defendants can be allowed to redeem more than what they have purchased on payment of a corresponding part of the mortgage-money.

The claim in the present suit is, however, confined to the redemption of the usufructuary mortgage of the 6th March 1878, and the plaintiff is clearly entitled to a decree for the redemption of that mortgage, so far as it relates to the two-thirds share of his mortgagors, on payment of such proportionate amount as may be found due on that mortgage, including the cost of any repairs, that may have been carried out by the mortgagee, and free from any liability for such improvement as the mortgagee may have made, which were not needed for the protection or preservation of the mortgaged property. The proportionate mortgage money payable on account of such portion of the mortgaged property as has been purchased by the defendants in satisfaction of the prior mortgage, should be determined after excluding the prior mortgage money, computed as laid down in Mutru Mal v. Durga Kunwar (1) from the value of the said property inclusive of any interest chargeable after decree.

The learned Counsel for the defendants-respondents relies on the decision in Yad Ali Beg v. Tuka Ram (2), but in that case one of the mortgaged fields had been purchased by a third person before the mortgagee had sued to enforce his mortgage. In the present case the rights of the mortgagors had not passed to any third persons on the dates on which the suits on either of the mortgages of Sukhdeo Rai and Durga Prasad were filed. The mortgagors were parties to those suits; and the only effect of not making the prior or subsequent mortgagees parties to them was to leave their rights of sale or redemption unaffected. The father of the plaintiff and that of the defendants subsequently purchased the rights of the mortgagors in certain portions of Katra Gulab Singh in satisfaction of their respective mortgages: and the only manner in which the rights of the parties can now be properly safeguarded is by applying the principle recognised by section 92 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) and allowing redemption in respect of such rights as have been acquired by each party subsequent to the above suits. A reference has also been made to the case of Parasram Singh v. Pandohi (3). In that case one of the parties had sued the mortgagors and obtained a decree for foreclosure without making the subsequent mortgagee a party to the suit, but no rights in the mortgaged property had been acquired by the subsequent mortgagee. Section 60 of the Transfer of Property Act lays down that where a mortgagee has acquired in part the share of the mortgagor, a person interested in the remaining portion of the mortgaged property is entitled to redeem the same on payment of a proportionate part of the mortgage-money. As observed in Dinanath v. Lachmi Narain (4), Kallan Khan v. Mardan Khan (5) and Munshi v. Daulat (6), where the integrity of a mortgage is broken, a mortgagor, who owns a part of the equity of redemption, can redeem his own part, but where the rights of the mortgagors have vested, as in this case, partly in a prior mortgagee and partly in a subsequent mortgagee after a suit had been brought by each of them to enforce his mortgage, neither the former can be compelled to redeem the whole nor can he compel the latter to give up his interest in the share of the mortgagor which he has acquired.

The question of the costs of repairs and improvements claimed by the mortgagee does not present any difficulty. The parties agree that the cost of the repairs should be charged against the mortgaged property in connection with which such costs have been incurred. The mortgagee has no right to claim any cost of the improvements made by him but if he has re built any fallen portion in order to retain the income which was derivable from the same, he can legitimately get the cost thereof and charge the same on the property in connection with which such expense was incurred. In other respects the mortgagee can only claim a right to remove the materials of any improvements which may have been made by him, unless the portions so improved are such as can be allotted to him when a partition takes place, without impairing the rights of the plaintiff. But in no event he can claim the cost thereof from the persons, who have acquired the rights of the mortgagors therein.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed and the suit remanded to the lower Appellate Court with a direction to re admit the appeal under its original number and to dispose of it in accordance with the directions above given. The costs here and hitherto will abide the result.

Lala Jagan Nath, for the Appellants.

Messrs. N. C. Mehra and Shamir Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The suit giving rise to this appeal relates to a piece of land situated in Pana Chandan, Mauza Hilalpur, Tahsil Sonepat, in the District of Rohtak. The plaintiffs are some of the proprietors of Panna Chandan while the two contesting defendants are proprietors in Pana Resan. These two defendants were Daryao Singh and his brother Mukhtar Singh. Daryao Singh was a Zaildar and Safedposh and died while the appeal was pending in the Court below. Daryao Singh owned a baithak which abutted on a road or lane on the opposite side of which is situated the plot in suit. On the other sides of this plot are houses belonging to the residents of Pana Chandan. The plaintiffs sued for possession of this plot on behalf of themselves and the other proprietors of Pana Chandan alleging that it belonged to them and had been wrongly occupied by Daryao Singh and Mukhtar Singh. These two defendants denied the plaintiffs' title and also asserted that they had been in adverse possession of this plot for a period exceeding 12 years. The Trial Court found that the plaintiffs were the original proprietors of the site in suit, but that the defendants had been in adverse possession of it for more than 12 years. On these findings the suit was dismissed. The plaintiffs thereupon preferred an appeal to the District Judge. The respondents attacked the finding of the Trial Court on the question of proprietorship of the site, and the learned District Judge dealt with this contention first in his judgment and arrived at the same view as that taken by the Trial Court. He then proceeded to deal with the question of adverse possession and, holding that the defendants had failed to prove their assertion, decreed plaintiffs' suit. The defendants have now come up to this Court in second appeal through Mr. Jagan Nath, and I have heard Mr. Nihal Chand Mehra for the plaintiffs. Mr. Jagan Nath contended that the learned District Judge had approached the case from an erroneous point of view and had dealt with the respondents' contention first. There is, however, no force in this, for it is perfectly clear that the learned District Judge had two points on which he had to adjudicate. One was as to the proprietorship of the land and the other was the question of adverse possession. The Trial Court had held that the plaintiffs had proved that they were proprietors. As the then respondents (now appellants) contested the correctness of that finding, and as a finding on that point in their favour would have disposed of the case, the learned District Judge very naturally dealt with that part of the case first.

Mr. Jagan Nath then contended that this case was not governed by the decision reported in Framji Cursetji v. Goculdas Madhowji (1) as held by the learned District Judge, and urged that it was incumbent on the plaintiffs to show that they had been in actual possession of this plot of land within a period of 12 years prior to suit. The learned Vakil showed me the plan which I have considered, and it seems to me that there can be no doubt at all that the plot in suit is a vacant site. It is not enclosed by walls as alleged by Mr. Jagan Nath, although it is correct to say that on three sides of it, the walls of houses exist, whereas on the other side is a road. The site being thus a vacant one in a village, I consider that possession must be held to go with title and that, therefore, it was incumbent on the defendants-appellants to prove that their possession had been adverse for a period of at least 12 years. Had the learned District Judge definitely stated that he found that the defendants-appellants had not been in adverse possession for 12 years, no further discussion would have been necessary as that would have been a finding on a question of fact. He has, however, expressed himself so as to leave room for argument that he had not arrived at a clear finding on this point, although I must confess that as I read his judgment that is what he intends to hold. Now to establish their adverse possession the defendants had led a mass of evidence to show that they had been using this plot for a very long time. This evidence consists of the testimony of Police and other officials and neighbouring Zaildars who say that on occasions when they visited the defendant's village they had put up at the defendants' baithak and had seen the defendants' oxen tied on the site in dispute and their own horses had been tethered there. They also say that they have been in the habit of easing themselves there and that latrines had also been placed there, Bricks belonging to the defendants were also found there when the Munsif visited the spot. It appears that a manger had also been erected by the defendants on the site.

Having regard to the fact that Daryao Singh was a Zamindar it was only natural that officials and others visiting the village would put up at his baithak, and as this open site was situated in front of the baithak on the opposite side of the road, it was also natural that the horses and cattle of visitors would be tethered on this site which was obviously a convenient place for that purpose. The proprietors of Pana Chandan would certainly not object to this being done. Mere storage of bricks and wood and tethering cattle on a site of this nature would also not be regarded as objectionable by the proprietors of the land, and such acts of user would not, as pointed out in Framji Oursetji v. Goculdas Madhowji (1), amount to an assertion of ownership on the part of defendants. In these circumstances, I consider that the case is covered by Framji Oursetji v. Goculdas Madhowji (1) and that the decision of the learned District Judge is correct.

I accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 7 (iv) (c), (v) (a)—Suit for cancellation of sale-deed and possession—Suit essentially for recovery of possession - Property in suit assessed to revenue—Valuation for purposes of Court-fee—Decree for possession—Appeal—Court-fee.

The share of the plaintiff in a joint property was sold by his co-sharer without his concurrence. The suit, which he brought, however, instead of being framed as one for recovery of possession pure and simple, asked for the cancellation of the sale-deed as well. The property being Zamindari property, the plaintiff valued the suit for purposes of jurisdiction at Rs. 10,000 but paid Court-fee on ten times the Government revenue under section 7 (v) (a) of the Court Fees Act which worked out only at Rs 75. The lower Court gave a decree for possession merely and the defendant appealed, also paying Rs 75 as Court-fee. On a stamp reference that the suit as well the appeal should have been assessed under section 7 (iv) (c) of the Court Fees Act on the stated value of the property:

Held, (1) that the essential relief sought being recovery of possession, the suit could have been framed for recovery of possession pure and simple; [p. 264, col. 2.]

(2) that it was against the intention of the Legislature that in a suit or appeal where the question in issue is the possession of land assessed to revenue, the valuation of the property for purposes of the court-fee assessment should be otherwise than under section 7 (v) of the Court Fees Act; [p. 266, col 2]

(3) that, however, the plaint as worded fell within the purview of section 7 (iv) (c) and the plaintiff must pay Court-fee accordingly unless he was permitted to amend either (a) the plaint itself or (b) the statement of "the amount at which the relief sought is valued" in the said plaintiff at the hearing of the appeal [p. 266, col 2.]

(4) that the position of the appellant was different who was entitled to appeal against the decree as it stood and to value his appeal for purposes of Court-fee under section 7 (v) (a) of the Court Fees Act. [p 267, col 1.]

Mr. Kamalakant Verma, for the Appellants.

Mr. Surendra Nath Sen, for the Respondents.

FACTS appear from the following—

OFFICE REPORT.—The suit giving rise to this appeal was brought for cancellation of a sale deed and possession over the Zamindari property involved in the said sale deed. The suit wes valued at Rs. 10,000, for purposes of jurisdiction but the Court fee was paid on Rs. 1,000 being 10 times the Government Revenue.

In view of a ruling reported in Dhakeswar Prasad Singh v. Jioo Choudhry (1), which lays down that in a suit for a declaration that the sale was invalid and for restoration of possession the plaintiff must pay an ad valorem Court-fee on the value of the whole estate sold and was not entitled to calculate an ad valorem fee on 10 times the amount of the Government revenue, the Court fee payable on the plaint of this suit is to be calculated on Rs. 10,000, being the price of the property in dispute, which comes to Rs. 475. Deducting Rs. 75 already paid, there is a deficiency of Rs. 400 payable by plaintiff-respondent for the Court below.

The Court below decreed the plaintiff's suit subject to payment of Rs. 4,000 by the plaintiff to defendants Nos. 1 to 6. The said defendants appealed to this Hon'ble Court with the prayer that the decree of the Court below be set aside and that the plaintiff's suit dismissed. They valued their appeal at Rs. 10,000 and paid Rs. 75, the same Court-fee as was paid on the plaint. For the reasons stated above, the memorandum of appeal to this Court was deficiently stamped by Rs. 400.

The result is that the deficiency payable by defendants appellants for this Court is Rs. 400 and due from the plaintiff-respondent for the lower Court is Rs. 400.

OBJECTION.—I dispute the correctness of the stamp report. The facts of the case reported in Dhakeswar Prasad Singh v. Jioo Choudhry (1) are entirely different and that case does not apply to the present case. There it was held by the Patna High Court that the relief for declaration was essential and that the plaintiff could not succeed without the declaration sought for.

In the present case the suit is by a Hindu co parcener for possession of family property (which belonged to him as much as to his father and brother) on the ground that it had been transferred by the father and the brother without legal necessity. Such a suit is essentially a suit for possession. It is settled law that, so far as limitation is concerned, such a suit is governed by the twelve years rule of limitation, and not by the three years rule under Art. 91, or by the six years rule under Art. 120, of the Limitation Act, the reason being that in such a suit the main relief is one for possession and it is not necessary for the plaintiff to obtain a declaration or cancellation of the sale deed, as a condition precedent for getting possession. In the present case itself the suit has been brought about eight years after the execution of the sale-deed. Such a suit, therefore, falls under section 7, clause (v) of the Court Fees Act. The ruling reported in Dhakeswar Prasad Singh v. Jioo Choudhry (1), therefore, does not apply. But if it be held to apply to a case like the present, then I contend that it does not lay down the law correctly.

JUDGMENT.—The Stamp Reporter has done no more than his duty in bringing this question forward, and the position taken up by him can be supported by strong arguments based upon the actual wording of the relevant clauses of the Court Fees Act. Nevertheless, I cannot escape from the feeling that the line of action suggested does violence to the spirit of the Act. The plaintiff's case is, that property of which he is the joint owner has been sold without his concurrence or authority, and the essential relief sought is recovery of possession upon such terms as the Trial Court may see fit to impose. The suit could have been framed as one for recovery of possession pure and simple; this is made the more apparent by the form of decree actually passed. The case of Dhakeswar Prasad Singh v. Jioo Choudhry (1) is not really in point. The sale in that case had been held by order of a public officer acting under statutory powers; it conveyed a good title to the purchaser unless it could be set aside on the ground of irregularity or fraud. "The declaratory relief sought was a necessary part of the suit." Here no relief by way of declaration has been granted; the decree passed is one for recovery of possession of property paying annual revenue to Government. It seems to me clearly against the intention of the Legislature that in a suit (or appeal) where the question in issue is the possession of land so assessed to revenue the valuation of the property for purposes of Court fee assessment should be otherwise than under section 7 (v) (a) or (b) of the Court Fees Act.

The difficulty remains that the plaint has been so worded that it falls within the purview of section 7 (iv) (c). This difficulty is a real one, and I do not think it can be got over unless the plaintiff can be permitted even at this stage to amend either

(a) the plaint itself, or

(b) the statement of "the amount at which the relief sought is valued" in the said plaint.

I hold, therefore, that, as against the plaintiff, who is the respondent to this appeal, the report must be affirmed. It will remain open to the said plaintiff to move the Bench, hearing the appeal, for leave to amend either the plaint or the valuation as above suggested. I would, however, warn him that he would do well to present himself at the hearing with the money necessary to make up the reported deficiency in his hand: if he is refused leave to amend, he may be required to make good the deficiency before he is heard on his petition of cross-objections.

The position of the appellants is different. Even on the principle suggested by the Stamp Reporter, the report is unjust to them; for the ad valorem fee would require to be calculated on Rs. 10,000, less Rs. 4,000 which the plaintiff has been ordered to pay, i. e. on Rs. 6,000. I think, however, that they are entitled to appeal against the decree as it stands and to value their appeal for the purposes of the Court Fees Act, under section 7 (v) (a) of the said Act. I hold that the memorandum of appeal is sufficiently stamped.

Execution proceedings—Execution application, dismissal of, in default—New application filed before dismissal—Proceedings, whether independent—Limitation, plea of, not raised in previous proceeding—Objection, whether entertainable in subsequent proceeding.

Although the execution of a decree may have been actually barred by time at the date of an application made for its execution, yet if an order for such execution has been regularly made by a competent Court having jurisdiction to try whether it was barred by time or not, such order, although erroneous, must, if unreversed, be treated as valid. [p. 268, col. 1.]

An application for the execution of a decree was made more than three years after the last application for execution. One of the judgment-debtors appeared and raised various objections but did not take any objection about limitation. This application was dismissed for want of prosecution. Before the dismissal of the above-mentioned application, another application for execution was made;

Held, (1) that the present application for execution was substantially an independent proceeding;

(2) that the judgment-debtor, not having raised an objection about limitation in the previous execution proceeding, was precluded from raising the said objection in regard to that execution in the present execution proceeding [p. 268, col 1.]

Revision against the order of the Subordinate Judge, Kheri, exercising Small Cause Court Jurisdiction, dated the 30th June 1921.

Mr. Ram Prasad Varma, for the Applicant.

Mr. Raj Narain Shukla, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of an order, dismissing an application for execution as barred by time. The decree was passed on the 21st February 1911. After some previous attempts at execution an application was made for execution on the 21st August 1917 on which a notice was issued to the judgment-debtors under O. XXI, r. 22, of the Code of Civil Procedure. The judgment debtors were served and one of them appeared and filed an objection on the 8th November 1917, which was disallowed on the 1st December 1917 and an order for the attachment of certain moveables was directed to issue. The decree-holder did not, however, file the requisite process fee and the application for execution was accordingly dismissed for default on the 10th January 1918.

On the 25th November 1920 a fresh application for execution was made by the decree holder, crediting Rs. 10 as having been received from the judgment-debtors. The office reported that the application was barred by time unless the alleged payment saved limitation. A notice was issued to the judgment-debtors under O. XXI, r. 22, of the Code; and after several unsuccessful attempts at service, they were served. One of them, Dip Singh appeared and objected that he had paid Rs. 50 in satisfaction of the decree on the 14th March 918. The Court executing the decree refused to take cognizance of the alleged payment on the ground that it had not been certified within the time allowed by law and directed attachment to issue. The decree-holder did not, however, prosecute that application further and it was dismissed on the 30th April 1921.

The present application for execution had, meanwhile, been filed on the 27th April 1921, which the Court below has held to be barred by time. With regard to the previous application for execution, made by the decree holder on the 25th November 1920, the Court below observes that it was barred by time, and therefore, a nullity in the eyes of law. But as pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Mungul Pershad Dichit v. Grija Kant Lahiri (1), although the execution of a decree may have been actually barred by time at the date of an application made for its execution, yet if an order for such execution has been regularly made by a competent Court, having jurisdiction to try whether it was barred by time or not, such order, although erroneous, must, if unreversed, be treated as valid. In Lakshmanan Chetti v. Kuttayan Chetti (2) it was held that a judgment-debtor, to whom a notice of the previous execution was issued was precluded from raising a question of limitation in regard to that execution in a subsequent execution proceeding, if he had omitted to raise that question at the time when the notice of the previous execution was issued to him. In Gauri Shankar v. Musammat Lachhmin Kunwar (3), and Sri Ram v. Mohan Lal (4) a similar view was taken.

The learned Counsel, who appears for the opposite party, contends that the present application for execution is virtually a continuation of the previous execution proceeding and that the question of limitation can, therefore, be re-opened. But the present application for execution is substantially an independent proceeding, and the judgment-debtor-objector is precluded from raising an objection, which it was open to him to raise in the course of the previous execution proceeding in his defence. The present application is within time from the date of the issue of the notice on the previous application for execution.

The application is, therefore, allowed and the case remanded to the Court below with a direction to reinstate the execution proceeding under its original number and to dispose of it in the manner provided by law. The decree holder applicant will get his costs from the judgment-debtor objector, who will bear his own costs throughout.

Deed, alteration of—Explanatory alteration immaterial—Deed not vitiated.

A deed is vitiated and deprived of all its effect by the making in it of a material alteration without the knowledge of the party affected by it. But the alteration must be material, the mere addition to a deed of words explaining it, would not vitiate it. [p. 269, col 1.]

JUDGMENT.—That the interlineated words and figures in the ikrarnama were written after it had been signed by the defendant, Motiram, has to be assented as a fact and undoubtedly is a fact. But that fact does not appear to vitiate the document. In Sonajee Mali v. Uttamchand Bania (1) and Ganpat v. Ramkrishna Puri (2) and a number of other cases it has been held that a document is vitiated and deprived of all its effect by the making in it of a material alteration without the knowledge of the party affected by it. But the alteration has to be material. Here the plaintiff's allegation, which is certainly supported by evidence, is that there was an agreement made before the execution of the ikrarnama that the share should be sold for Rs. 2,000 and the sir surrendered for Rs. 1,200. There is no finding on this point, but if the allegation is true, the additions to the document do not alter it in the least but merely explain it. The case of Ananda Mohon Saha v. Ananda Chandra Saha (3) is almost exactly similar. In a mortgage-bond for Rs. 200 the interest was stated as "one rupee per mensem" and the mortgagee added the words "per centum" after the word "rupee." As this was proved to be in fact the agreement between the parties, which had been inaccurately recorded, the High Court awarded interest at one per cent. per mensem, which was two rupees per mensem.

We have then to treat the document as if the additions had not been made. The plaintiff is permitted by proviso (2) of section 92 of the Evidence Act to adduce oral evidence of the oral agreement between himself and Motiram in respect of the apportionment of the Rs. 3,200 between the two transactions. The matter was in issue and there is evidence in respect of it, but it has been left undecided by the lower Appellate Court. All other matters having been settled, the decision of the case rests now entirely on the answer to the question, whether the agreement between the plaintiff and Motiram before the execution of the ikrarnama was that Rs. 3,200 should be paid in a lump for both share and sir, or that Rs. 2,000 should be paid for one and Rs. 1,200 for the other. In the former case, the suit must be dismissed, and in the latter, the claim must be decreed. The decree of the lower Appellate Court is, therefore, set aside and the case is remanded to that Court for a fresh decision. Costs of this appeal will follow the event.

Railways Act (IX of 1890), s. 72—Consignment of goods under Risk Note, form H—Contract, if legal—Suit for damages—Onus probandi—Undue delay, if actionable without proof of its being wilful.

There is nothing illegal in a consignor, in consideration of the reduced rates charged, agreeing to hold the Company liable only on certain specified contingencies. [p. 270, col. 1.]

Delay in the delivery of goods in order to be actionable must be shown to be wilful. It does not follow that because there was delay it was wilful. [p. 270, col. 2.]

Petition under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, South Kanara, in Small Cause suit No. 551 of 1920, dated the 13th December 1920.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. Manna A. T. Coelho, for the Petitioners.—The general liability of Railway Company for liability for damages for loss or destruction or deterioration of goods consigned is imposed by section 72 of the Railways Act. The facts relating to the loss are within their special knowledge and the onus lies on them to show that they are not liable. Section 106 of the Evidence Act applies.

See Jhunni Lal v. Bombay Baroda and Central India Railway Company (1), Sesham Fatter v. L. S. Moss (2), Ghoutmull Doogur v. Rivers Steam Navigation Co. 3), Rivers Steam Navigation Company v. Ghoutmull Doogar (4), India General Steam Navigation Co. v. Bhagwan Chandra Paul (5).

There was also an undue delay of 40 days in the carriage of the goods.

Mr. Visvanatha Sastri, for the Respondents.—The consignor here agreed to consign the goods under a special Risk Note. The onus is on him to show that the Company are liable under the contract. East Indian Railway Company v. Nilkanta Roy (6), East Indian Railway Company v. Nathmal Behari Lal (7), Bombay Baroda and Central India Railway Company v. Ranchhodlal Ohhotalal & Co. (8).

JUDGMENT.—The goods were consigned under Risk Note, form H, which saves the Railway Company from liability for loss, destruction or deterioration of or damage to the consignment from any cause whatever except for the loss due either to the wilful neglect of the Railway Administration or to theft by or to the wilful neglect of its servants, etc.

The liability of the Railway Company is, therefore, not the general liability imposed on common carriers or imposed by section 72 of the Railway Act. Under section 72, the Company was entitled to contract themselves out of the provisions of the Act if the form of the contract was approved by the Governor General in Council and there is nothing illegal in the consignor, in consideration of the reduced rate charged, agreeing to hold the Company liable only on certain specified contingencies.

In such cases the onus of proving the fact necessary to bring the Company within the terms of the contract and the liability imposed by it will be on the consignor. I need only refer to East Indian Railway Company v. Nilkanta Roy (6), East Indian Railway Company v. Nathmall Behari Lal (7), Bombay Baroda and Central India Railway Company v. Ranchhodlal Ohhotalal & Co. (8), Jhunni Lal v. Bombay Baroda and Central India Railway Company (1) where it was held that the onus lies on the person who alleges that the case fell within the exceptions mentioned in the Risk Note to prove the fact necessary to charge the Company with liability. It has been argued for the petitioner that section 106 of the Evidence Act applies and that as the facts which relate to the loss of the oil can only be in the special knowledge of the Railway Company the onus lies on them. Reference was also made to Sesham Fatter v. L. S. Moss (2), Ghoutmull Doogur v. Rivers Steam Navigation Company (3) which was approved by the Privy Council in Rivers Steam Navigation Company v. Ghoutmull Doogar (4), India General Steam Navigation Co. v. Bhagwan Chandra Paul (5). These cases did not relate to the carriage of goods by a Railway Company under a special form or Risk Note exempting the Company from liability except in certain specified cases. If in all cases or loss of destruction or deterioration of goods consigned the onus will be on the Company to prove how it came about, the special contract will be useless.

It is also argued that there was undue delay in the carriage of the goods. There was a delay of 40 days between the consignment and delivery. It is not shown that the delay was wilful. The consignment was in March 1919 and the delay may well be due to want of rolling stock. It does not follow that because there was delay it was wilful. As there is no evidence to charge the Company with liability under the terms of the contract the suit was rightly dismissed.

The revision petition fails and is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is a Rule granted by my learned brother and myself calling upon the opposite party to show cause why a certain order should not be set aside. The order in question is an order of the 27th of November 1920 made by the learned Subordinate Judge. The facts of this case, which it is necessary for me to state, are as follows: It is alleged in the petition that the petitioner purchased the property in question on the 30th of November 1915 at a sale in execution of a decree for rent and obtained possession through the Court. It is then alleged that the judgment-debtor borrowed money from the decree-holder; and, it now appears that the money was borrowed before the sale of 1915 on a promissory note; and it is also stated that there was an equitable mortgage. The decree-holder obtained his decree on the 17th of January 1917 for the sale of the above mentioned property and for the realization of the money. There was an application for execution in March 1918 and the sale was fixed for the 8th of July 1918. Then a claim was put in by the petitioner—a claim to the properties in question. In the order-sheet of that case appears this passage: "18th June 1918. One Mahabir Prasad Singh prefers claim of the entire properties attached. Register it. Put up on 22nd June next for orders." I need not go through all the orders in the case, but the decree holder appears to have taken no steps, and the result was that the execution case was dismissed for default. It is not clear whether the properties had in fact been attached: I should infer from the previous orders in that execution case that the properties had not been attached, because I find on the 8th of May there was an order directing proclamation of sale to issue. However, in my judgment, it is not material to come to any final decision upon that point in this case. The first execution case having been dismissed, a second execution case was instituted in 1920, and a sale proclamation was issued fixing the sale for the 13th of December 1920. But prior to that the petitioner lodged a petition on the 17th of November 1920. We are informed by the learned Vakil that the petition was lodged under the provisions of O. XXI, r. 58 of the Civil Procedure Code. When the application was heard by the learned Subordinate Judge he declined to entertain the claim and to register it: and his judgment which is very short is as follows: "The execution is of a mortgage decree, and no attachment has been effected; and so no claim is competent. That there was a claim before, which was allowed, does not I think stand in the way; for there might have been attachment in the other execution, treating it as a money decree: Joy Prokash Singh v. Abhoy Kumar Chund (1) may be cited in support of this view, and so I decline to entertain this claim and decline to register it." The strongest way, it seems to me, the case could be put up for the petitioner is that the learned Subordinate Judge had jurisdiction to adjudicate upon this matter, and he declined to exercise his jurisdiction: and, consequently, we should have power to interfere under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. The circumstances of this case, I admit, do seem, to lead to a curious result, looking at them from one point of view. In the first execution case the claimant lodged a claim to this property protesting against the execution of this decree, and upon such claim being considered by the Court the claimant succeeded and the first execution case was dismissed. Now the decree-holder has again applied for execution of the decree and the Court has declined to entertain the petition of the petitioner.

In my judgment, however, we are bound to discharge this Rule on the authority of the case, Deefholts v. Peters (2). There the proceedings by way of claim were taken under section 278 of the Code of Civil Procedure which was then in force and which corresponded to O. XXI, r. 58 of the present Code of Civil Procedure. There the learned Judges distinctly held that the procedure under that section was not applicable to a mortgage decree which contained a provision that the property in question should be sold. In this case there is no doubt that the decree was what is called a mortgage-decree, and contained a provision that this property should be sold. Consequently, it was not open to the Execution Court to entertain and adjudicate upon a claim, which was presented by the petitioner under O. XXI, r. 58. The learned Judges in that case said as follows: "We think that proceedings by way of claim are not applicable to a case of this kind. Proceedings by way of claim are applicable only in cases of money-decrees where property of the judgment-debtor has been attached; that is, where some property of the judgment-debtor is attached for the purpose of satisfying any general money claim. In that kind of claim it is clear that there should be some speedy remedy for the purpose of ascertaining whether the property claimed is the property of the judgment-debtor at all; but in a case like this, where the property has been dealt with in a solemn way by the decree of the Court, and has been declared liable to sale under the mortgage, that remedy would not be applicable." Then they proceeded to point out that the petitioner would have other remedies. On the authority of that case, which, to my mind, covers this case, we have no option but to direct that this Rule should be discharged with costs—hearing fee, one gold mohur.

RICHARDSON, J.—I agree.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XVI, r. 1 s. 99 Case not closed—Suit adjourned—Parties right of, to summon witness—Discretion of Court—Exclusion of evidence Merits of case not affected—Appellate Court, whether bound to interfere—Evidence believed to be based on hearsay—Court, if can refuse to record.

As long as the hearing of a suit stands adjourned in the ordinary course of trial and so long as the party who wishes to summon witnesses has not closed his case, the Court is bound to summon them. There is nothing in O. XVI, r. 1 of the Civil Procedure Code to show that the adjournment of which a party may take advantage must be granted at his own instance: he can take advantage of the adjournment granted to his adversary. [p 273, col. 2]

Under section 99 of the Civil Procedure Code an Appellate Court is not bound to interfere in appeal unless the exclusion of evidence has affected the merits of the case. [p. 273, col. 2.]

A particular answer, after it is given by a witness, may be ruled out as irrelevant but no Court can say beforehand that the whole of the evidence to be given by the witness is going to be irrelevant, and the Court's belief that the evidence is biassed is not a valid ground for refusing to record it. [p. 274, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Nimar, dated the 30th September 1921, in Civil Suit No. 2 of 1919.

Mr. M. Gupta, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. B. Gokhale, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The first four grounds of appeal complain that the learned District Judge has improperly excluded evidence which ought to have been admitted. We must, therefore, deal first with these grounds of appeal.

The circumstances leading to the first ground of appeal are as follows. On the 17th February 1921 the following was the order passed in the order-sheet:—

"Parties file lists of witnesses. For evidence of plaintiff, on 14th April 1921. Process fees in three days."

The plaintiff failed to pay his process-fees within three days and paid them on the 14th March. The following is an extract from the order-sheet of the 14th April :—

"Process-fee was paid on 14th March 1921. It should have been paid on 20th February 1921. The only reason given for an adjournment is that the plaintiff is a pauper. I cannot give an adjournment on this ground. Mr. P. C. Lal is not served. He is reported gone on tour. Komalram is reported gone to Seoni,.....Other summons are not returned. .....No adjournment can be given to the plaintiff as process-fees were paid late. For evidence of defendant on 21st July 1921."

Thus though the plaintiff was refused permission to summon his witnesses again for a future date, that is to say, though he was refused an adjournment for that purpose, the hearing of the case was adjourned to the 21st July for the purpose of hearing the evidence of the defendant. R. 1 of O. XVI, First Schedule of the Civil Procedure Code, is as follows :—

"At any time after the suit is instituted, the parties may obtain, on application to the Court or to such officer as it appoints in this behalf, summonses to persons whose attendance is required either to give evidence or to produce documents."

It was observed by Bose, A. J. C. in Moti v. Kanhya (1): "All the High Courts are at one in holding that under section 159 of the old Civil Procedure Code corresponding with O. XVI, r. 1 of the new Code the Court had no discretion in the matter of an application for summonses on witnesses if such application be made before the day of hearing. The hearing may not be concluded on the date fixed and an adjournment may take place in the usual course of the progress of the trial and the Court cannot refuse to allow any of the parties to reap the benefit of such an adjournment in the matter of giving evidence." The law on the subject has been well stated in Indro Chunder Baboo v. Mr. Hamilton Grant Dunlop (2): "There is nothing whatever in the Code of Civil Procedure which either expressly or impliedly declares that witnesses must necessarily be summoned before the day fixed for the first hearing of the suit. If a day, whether it be the first or a subsequent day, is fixed for hearing a case, the Court is not bound (and ordinarily ought not), without very good reason being shown, to adjourn the hearing in order to give a party time to summon or produce his witnesses. Nor, if the case of a party (whether plaintiff or defendant) has been gone into and closed is the Court bound (nor ought it ordinarily) to summon further witnesses for him. But as long as the hearing of the suit merely stands adjourned, and so long as the party who wishes to summon witnesses has not closed his case, the Court is bound to summon them." Since the above ruling, the word : "At any time after the suit is instituted" have been added to the provisions of law, as it now stands, which makes the case even clearer. Though the plaintiff was not entitled to ask for an adjournment, he was entitled to take advantage of any adjournment given for other reasons and there is nothing in the rule to show that the adjournment of which he may take advantage must be granted at his own instance. The law, in our opinion, is quite clear, that as an adjournment of the case was ordered and the plaintiff had not closed his case, the Court was bound on being so requested to grant summonses for witnesses named by the plaintiff. The three witnesses whom the plaintiff-appellant wishes so to be summoned are Mr. P. C. Lal and Komalram mentioned in the order-sheet and Govindram who, it is alleged, was one of the witnesses summoned whose summonses have not been returned. The plaintiff is undoubtedly entitled to have summonses issued for Mr. P. C. Lal and for Komalram and is also entitled to have a summons issued for Govindram if it is a fact that Govindram was one of the witnesses for whom summons had been issued,

Under section 99 of the Code we are not bound to interfere in appeal unless the exclusion of evidence has affected the merits of the case. There can be no doubt that Mr. P. C. Lal was an important witness, as that fact appears from the order-sheet of the 5th February 1921, and we are satisfied that both Komalram and Govindram were witnesses whom the plaintiff had good reasons to call,

(2) 9 W. R. 530.

H. D. CHATTERJEE v. L. B. TRIBEDI.

The second ground of appeal complains that the lower Court erred in not allowing the plaintiff's eighth witness Battulal to be examined. The record of the evidence of Battulal shows that after he was asked a very few questions the Judge recorded on the evidence sheet: "This cannot be admitted as evidence," and in the order-sheet the Judge has written as follows:—

"Plaintiff has filed an application requesting that P. W. No. 8 may be examined in full. It is clear that the evidence is based on hearsay, and biassed by the evidence he has heard as an arbitrator, and in any case his evidence could only come in in case the agreement about the rates is not proved. I must, therefore, decline to examine him."

The reasons given by the Judge for refusing to allow the evidence of Battulal to be recorded are unsound. Any particular answer, after it is given, may be ruled out as irrelevant, but no Court can say beforehand that all the evidence not yet taken is going to be irrelevant and the Court's belief that the evidence is biassed is not a valid ground for refusing to record it.

The third and fourth grounds of appeal are to the effect that the lower Court erred in rejecting the certified copies of the final bills and other papers in connection with the defendant's contract with the Government. These copies have been tendered in this Court. The learned Pleader for the respondent does not object to the admission of these documents in evidence. In fact the District Judge did not himself exclude them from consideration, for he refers to some of the copies in paragraph 30 of his judgment, but on the day that the judgment was delivered all these papers which had been filed before the umpire and were brought in before the arbitration proceedings were endorsed "Returned as not proved," and the endorsement was initialled by the District Judge. This appears to have been done from an inadvertence. The order sheet of the 6th April 1920 just before the reference to arbitration shows that the originals of these copies had been produced in Court and that both parties agreed that the copies might be furnished and retained on the record. The copies are certified copies of public documents and the order that they should be returned to the plaintiff as not proved was quite unjustified.

At the request of both parties, instead of calling for evidence to be submitted in this Court under rr. 27 to 29 of O. XLI, we set aside the decree of the lower Court and remand the case for further trial. The District Judge should, subject to the plaintiff's making the necessary payment, summon the three witnesses referred to in the first ground of appeal, provided as regards Govindram that he was one of the witnesses summoned to appear on the 14th April 1921, and to take their evidence so far as that evidence relates to the issues involved in the appeal to this Court. The evidence of Battulal should also be allowed to be taken according to law on the plaintiffs again tendering him as a witness. The documents referred to in the third and fourth grounds of appeal are filed with the documentary evidence in the case, and will be sent to the lower Court. The defendants should be permitted to call evidence in rebuttal of the further evidence now ordered to be admitted in this appeal. Costs will be costs in the suit. The Pleader's fee in this Court will be Rs. 100.

G. R. D. Order accordingly.

There is nothing to prevent the Rent Controller from fixing the standard rent during the currency of a lease. [p. 277, col. 1.]

Rule issued against the order of the Court of the President of the Calcutta Improvement Trust Tribunal, in Revision Case No. 174 of 1921 and of the Court of the Controller of Rents, Calcutta, in Suits Nos. 157 and 591 of 1921.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Charu Chandra Biswas, for the Opposite Party.—I beg to take a preliminary objection to the hearing of the Rule on the ground that this matter cannot be dealt with by this Court in its revisional jurisdiction. The Rent Controller is not a Court of a Civil Jurisdiction.

Babu Surendra Mohan Mullick, for the Petitioner.—The facts arising out of this Rule are shortly these. I applied under section 15 of the Calcutta Rent Act for the standardisation of the rent of the premises. The opposite party is the tenant. The Rent Controller held that the existing rent being fair and equitable no standard rent should be fixed. He rejected my application. I then moved the President of the Improvement Tribunal but he too dismissed my application holding that the order was not revisable under section 18 of the Rent Act. Against that order the present Rule is directed. As regards the power of this Court to interfere I submit this Court has ample powers inasmuch as the Rent Controller and the President of the Improvement Tribunal are Civil Courts. Refers to r. 24 framed under section 23 of the Act. Bata Kristo Pramanik v. A. K. Roy (1). Further, even if it be conceded that you have no power under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, you have unquestionably powers under section 107 of the Government of India Act. Refers to Gobind Coomar Chowdhry v. Kisto Coomar Chowdhry (2), Nilmoni Singh Deo v. Taranath Mukerjee (3), Chaitan Patjosi v. Kunja Behari (4) and Kali Dassi v. Kanai Lal De (5). Refers to section 72 of the Calcutta Improvement Act. I submit the Rent Controller is bound to fix standard rent under section 15 of the Act, more specially so as he has held that the lease has expired.

Babu Charu Chandra Biswas (with him Babu Monindra Kumar Bose), for the Opposite Party.—I submit as regards the merits that the finding that the existing rent was fair is sufficient to dispose of the case. The Controller shall fix the standard rent when it considers the existing rent unduly low. Refers to section 15. Further the lease has not expired. Hence no such application is maintainable. They have not applied for certification of standard rent. I submit there having been no decision by the Controller the President was perfectly right in dismissing their application. That order is not revisable.

Babu Surendra Mohan Mullick replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.—This was a Rule calling upon the opposite party to show cause why the application (made by the petitioner) under section 18 of the Rent Act for revision of the order of the Rent Controller should not be heard by the President of the Improvement Tribunal; or, in the alternative, why the order of the Rent Controller should not be set aside and such other order passed as to this Court may seem proper.

It appears that the petitioner applied to the Rent Controller for fixing the standard rent of certain premises occupied by the opposite party as tenant. The Rent Controller discussed certain matters in his judgment and was of opinion that the rent paid by the tenant was fair; but he did not fix the standard rent and dismissed the application. The petitioner then applied to the President of the Tribunal under section 18 of the Rent Act. The learned President held that the order of the Controller could not be regarded as a decision fixing the standard rent of the premises concerned, and that section 18 of the Act did not confer any jurisdiction upon him to revise such an order. The petitioner thereupon obtained this Rule.

As there was no decision by the Rent Controller fixing the standard rent, the learned President was right in holding that he had no jurisdiction under section 18 of the Rent Act to revise the order.

The next question is, whether the order of the Rent Controller should be set aside by us and he should be directed to fix the standard rent.

A preliminary objection has been taken by the opposite party to the hearing of this Rule on the ground that the Rent Controller is not a Court of Civil Jurisdiction, and that even if he is, the High Court has no power of revising his orders.

Now, r. 24 of the Rules framed by the Local Government under section 23 of the Calcutta Rent Act, lays down that in all proceedings before them under the Act, the Controller and the President of the Tribunal shall have all the powers possessed by a Civil Court for the trial of suits, see also r. 4, which says that in making inquiries under the Act, the Controller or the President of the Tribunal shall follow, as nearly as may be, the procedure laid down in the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, for the regular trial of suits, the substance only of the evidence being recorded as in unappealable cases.

It is clear, therefore, that the Rent Controller is a Court of Civil Jurisdiction. The same view has been taken in Civil Revision Case No. 322 of 1921 [Bata Kristo Pramanik v. A. K. Roy (1)].

Then the question is whether the High Court has the power of revising the order of the Rent Controller under section 107 of the Government of India Act.

There is no doubt that under section 15 of the Charter, (now section 107 of the Government of India Act), the High Court has powers of superintendence over all Courts subject to its Appellate Jurisdiction.

The question whether the High Court has the power of revising the orders of Courts (other than Civil Courts) exercising civil jurisdiction, under its general powers of superintendence under section 15 of the Charter, has been considered in several cases in connection with orders of the Collector's Court under Rent Act X of 1859, and under the Land Acquisition Act. One of the earliest cases on the point is Gobind Coomar Chowdhry v. Kisto Coomar Chowdhry (2), where it was held by the Full Bench that the High Court has the power of revising an order of the Deputy Collector under Act X of 1859. In the case of Nilmoni Singh Deo v. Taranath Mukerjee (3) it was held by the Judicial Committee that the High Court has power to interfere with the orders of the Collector under Act X of 1859. See also the case of Chaitan Pateesi v. Kunja Behari (4). Then, again, in proceedings under the Land Acquisition Act it has been held that the order of the Collector when acting judicially is subject to revision by the High Court. See Administrator-General of Bengal v. Land Acquisition Deputy Collector. 24-Pergannahs (6) and Krishna Das Roy v. Land Acquisition Collector of Pabna (7).

Under the Calcutta Rent Act, in the recent Civil Revision Case No. 401 of 1921 [Kali Dassi v. Kanai Lal De (5)] the High Court, Appellate Side, revised an order of the Rent Controller, and in Civil Revision Case No. 322 of 1921 [Bata Kristo Pramanik v. A. K. Roy (1)] it revised an order of the President of the Tribunal.

It is to be observed that under section 18 of the Rent Act an application against the decision of the Controller fixing the standard rent is to be made to the President of the Tribunal appointed under section 72 of the Calcutta Improvement Act in respect of premises in Calcutta, and such an application in respect of premises outside Calcutta is to be made to the principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction in the district. Such principal Civil Court is certainly within the Appellate Jurisdiction of the High Court. As stated above, the President of the Tribunal is also within the Appellate (Revisional) Jurisdiction of this Court.

(6) 12 C. W. N. 241.

(7) 13 Ind. Cas. 470; 16 C. W. N. 927; 16 C. L. J. 165.

We are accordingly of opinion that this Court has the power of revision under its general powers of superintendence over the Rent Controller's Court under section 107 of the Government of India Act.

The next question is, whether in the present case the order of the Rent Controller should be revised.

Now, section 15, sub-section (1) lays down that the Controller shall, on application made to him by any landlord or tenant, grant a certificate certifying the standard rent of any premises leased or rented by such landlord or tenant, as the case may be.

The Rent Controller has in the present case gone into the question of rent, and has expressed his opinion that the existing rent is fair, and even in one place of his judgment he has stated that the present rent may be the standard rent of the premises under section 2 (f) (ii) but he has not fixed the standard rent. If he had fixed the standard rent, the petitioner might have asked the President of the Tribunal to revise the order under section 18 of the Act.

It is contended on behalf of the opposite party that the petitioner applied for fixing the standard rent and not for certifying the standard rent. But the standard rent cannot be certified unless it is first fixed.

The Rent Controller says that the application does not lie because it was made before the expiry of the lease. We do not see, however, anything to prevent an application being made before the expiry of the lease for fixing the standard rent.

We are of opinion that the Rent Controller was bound to fix the standard rent and certify it under the provisions of section 15 of the Act.

We do not express any opinion on any question as to the merits of the case which must be dealt with by the Rent Controller.

We accordingly set aside the order of the Rent Controller and direct him to fix the standard rent according to law. Costs two gold mohurs to abide the result.

We trust the case will be taken up by the Rent Controller as early as possible.

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, J.—The question of law that arises in this second appeal relates to the construction of section 10 of Bombay Khoti Settlement Act of 1880 as amended by Bombay Acts VIII of 1912 and IV of 1913.

The facts, which are not in dispute, are these. The plaintiff is the Khot and the defendants are the occupancy tenants and their transferee. It appears that there are several Survey Numbers referred under six serial numbers in the plaint in which the occupants had a certain share. The interest of the occupants in one of these lands referred to in the plaint as Serial No. 1 was mortgaged by them in January 1914. It appears from the mortgage-bond that they had already mortgaged this property so far back as 1872, and this was a fresh mortgage. We are, however, concerned with the fresh mortgage effected in 1914 after the amending Acts of 1912 and 1913. The Survey Numbers have been described as appertaining to four different Khatas, and it is claimed for the plaintiff that in virtue of the provisions of section 10 of the Khoti Settlement Act, as it stood at the date of this transfer by way of mortgage, all the lands constituting these different Khatas, of which the land, referred to as Serial No. 1 in the plaint, is a part, and in which the defendants as occupants have an interest, are at his disposal, as the transfer was without his consent.

The Trial Court accepted this view and passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff in respect of all the lands constituting the different holdings, of which the land mortgaged forms comparatively a small part.

The Appellate Court, however, did not accept that view, and held that the lands which were at the disposal of the Khot in virtue of the provisions of section 10 were really those lands which formed the subject-matter of the transfer, and accordingly dismissed the plaintiff's suit, except as to land Serial No. 1.

The question that has been argued in this appeal by the Khot is as to whether on a proper construction of section 10 all the holdings, of which Serial No. 1 forms a part are at the disposal of the Khot or only that part of the land which is transferred. The section as amended by Bombay Acts VIII of 1912 and IV of 1913 runs as follows:—

"If the land held by a privileged occupant lapses for failure of heirs or is forfeited on the occupant's failing to pay the rent due in respect thereof, or if any permanent tenant resigns his land or any portion of his land or does any act purporting to transfer his land or any portion thereof or any interest therein without the consent of the Khot (except in the cases provided for in section 9), his land shall be at the disposal of the Khot as Khoti land free of all incumbrances, other than liens or charges created or existing in favour of Government.

"But it shall not be competent to a privileged occupant at any time to resign a portion only of his entire holding except with the consent of the Khot; and no privileged occupant shall be deemed to have forfeited his land on failure to pay rent unless such forfeiture is certified by the Collector."

I need not quote sections 9 and 10 as they stood prior to the Amending Act of 1912. The effect of these sections prior to 1912 was that, except in certain cases expressly provided for by section 9, the occupancy was not transferable. But no consequence of a transfer of any interest in the occupancy, contrary to the provisions of section 9, was stated in the Act. Among other things by the amendment of 1912 the Legislature provided that any transfer contrary to the provisions of section 9 would involve the consequence that the land would be at the disposal of the Khot free of all encumbrances.

The question to be considered is whether the Legislature intended by the transfer of any part of the land or of any interest therein, only that land was at the disposal of the Khot, or whether all the lands comprised in different Khatas, of which the land wherein in the interest of a sharer is transferred formed a part, were at the disposal of the Khot. It appears that by the Act of 1913 certain alterations were made in sections 9 and 10, as enacted by the Amending Act of 1912. But those alterations were apparently the result of the change in the definition of the word "holding" as given in the Act of 1913. In any case it seems to me that all the alterations made by the Act of 1913 were merely consequential and do not affect the point under consideration. The alteration, with which we are concerned, is the substitution of the word 'his' for 'such' in section 10. The section provides that on the transfer of "his land or any portion thereof or any interest therein" 'his land' shall be at the disposal of the Khot. This means that where the transfer be of any portion of the land or any interest therein, what shall be at the disposal of the Khot is not merely that portion or that interest but the land itself. But the section gives no indication as to whether it means all lands comprised in the different Khatas of which the particular land forms a part or merely the land, i. e., the particular Survey Number or any recognised sub-division in respect of which there has been a transfer. The section does not state as to what is to be treated as the unit for the purpose of giving effect to the provision that his land shall be at the disposal of the Khot. This provision deprives the occupant of his existing rights in consequence of a transfer of his interest in the land not allowed by law. In the absence of any clear indication to the contrary it seems to me that such a provision should be so construed as to limit the forfeiture to the land, the interest wherein is transferred. There is no indication in the section that all the lands of the occupant are intended to be at the disposal of the Khot even though one of them or only a portion of one land may have been transferred. The second paragraph of the section, so far as it provides that it shall not be competent to a privileged occupant at any time to resign a portion only of his entire holding except with the consent of the Khot, suggests, if at all, that but for that provision the meaning of the first paragraph as regards the resignation in respect of any land or portion of the land would be that the land resigned and not necessarily the entire holding would be at the disposal of the Khot. The consideration that an occupant cannot resign a part of the entire holding without the consent of the Khot would not, in my opinion, justify the wider construction of the section which the Trial Court accepted in this case as regards the effect of an unauthorised transfer.

However that may be, it seems to me clear that as regards an improper transfer the consequences must be limited to the land transferred and cannot be reasonably extended to the entire holding or to all the lands comprised in the occupancy. For this purpose the smallest unit recognised by the Khoti Settlement Act must be taken, i. e., a Survey Number or a recognised sub-division thereof as defined by the Bombay Land Revenue Code.

The land affected by the transfer in the present case is only Serial No. 1, and that, in my opinion, is the land at the disposal of the Khot under section 10 of the Khoti Settlement Act in consequence of the transfer effected in 1914.

If this reading of the section does not represent the true intention of the Legislature, it seems to me that the section must be amended so as to convey the true meaning. The Courts have to construe such clauses of forfeiture strictly so as to involve the least interference with the existing rights consistently with the plain meaning of the words used by the Legislature.

I would confirm the decree of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss the appeal with costs.

PRATT, J.—Defendants Nos. 1 to 4 and 6 represent four brothers and are permanent tenants in the Khoti village of Ghousari and have four holdings or Khatas which include twenty-eight different Survey Numbers and Pot Numbers in that village.

Survey No. 268, Pot No. 2 is common to the four holdings and each holding comprises a one-fourth share of it.

These defendants mortgaged that Pot Number on the 27th January 1914 to defendant No. 5. This mortgage was not justified by the provisions of section 9 of the Khoti Settlement Act.

The question for decision in this appeal is what penalty attaches under section 10. Are all the lands (all the Survey Numbers and Pot Numbers) in the four holdings at the disposal of the Khot or only the particular Pot Number mortgaged?

The District Judge has held that the Khot is only entitled to the particular Pot Number. The District Judge has based his decision on a consideration of section 10 of the Khoti Settlement Act of 1880 as amended by Bombay Act VIII of 1912 but overlooked the amendment made by Bombay Act IV of 1913. This is a very excusable error, for the Legislative Department of the Government of Bombay have issued no edition of the Khoti Settlement Act since 1904, and no edition of the Bombay Code later than 1909.

It is, therefore, desirable to set forth in parallel columns the section as it stood after the Amending Acts of 1904, 1912, and 1913, and for more convenient study I shall put the clauses in parallel columns:—

If a privileged occupant resign the land or any portion of the land in his holding,	If the land in the holding of a privileged occupant lapses for failure of heirs,	If the land held by a privileged occupant lapses for failure of heirs, or if any such occupant's land lapse for failure of heirs, or other persons entitled thereto,	or is forfeited on the occupant's failing to pay the rent due in respect thereof,	or is forfeited on the occupant's failing to pay the rent due in respect thereof, or is forfeited on the occupant's failing to pay the rent due in respect thereof,	or if any occupancy-tenant resigns the land or any portion of the land in his holding	or if any permanent tenant resigns his land or any portion of his land, or does any act purporting to transfer such land or any portion thereof or any interest therein without the consent of the Khot except in the cases provided for in section 9),	or does any act purporting to transfer his land or any portion thereof or any interest therein without the consent of the Khot (except in the cases provided for in section 9),
the land so resigned, lapsed or forfeited, shall be at the disposal of the Khot as Khoti land free of all encumbrances, other than liens or charges created or existing in favour of Government.	such land shall be at the disposal of the Khot as Khoti land free of all encumbrances, other than liens or charges created or existing in favour of Government.	his land shall be at the disposal of the Khot as Khoti land free of all encumbrances, other than liens or charges created or existing in favour of Government.
But it shall not be competent to a privileged occupant at any time to resign a portion only of his entire holding except with the consent of the Khot, and no privileged occupant shall be deemed to have forfeited his land on failure to pay rent unless such forfeiture is certified by the Collector.	But it shall not be competent to a privileged occupant at any time to resign a portion only of his entire holding except with the consent of the Khot; and no privileged occupant shall be deemed to have forfeited his land on failure to pay rent unless such forfeiture is certified by the Collector.	But it shall not be competent to a privileged occupant at any time to resign a portion only of his entire holding except with the consent of the Khot: and no privileged occupant shall be deemed to have forfeited his land on failure to pay rent unless such forfeiture is certified by the Collector.

In 1904, the penalty attached in cases of resignation, lapse for failure of heirs and forfeiture for non-payment of rent.

In 1912, the penalty was extended to cases of transfer unauthorised by section 9, and this was in consequence of the decision in Yesa v. Sakharam Gopal (1).

In 1913, the amendments were merely verbal, the phrase "permanent tenant" being substituted for "occupancy tenant" and "his land" for "such land."

Now the case to be considered is one of unauthorised transfer referred to in the fourth clause of the section of 1913. The penalty refers to "his land" and this penalty attaches if "his land or any portion thereof or any interest therein" is unauthorisedly transferred.

Literal grammatical construction would lead to the consequence that a transfer of a portion of the land or an interest in that portion would involve all the land held by the permanent tenant being at the disposal of the Khot. But if there is any ambiguity in the language, the Court may adopt that construction which avoids hardship or injustice. For it is a recognized principle that the construction which appears to be the most agreeable to reason and justice should in all cases be presumed to be the true one. The phrase "his land" applies as well to all the land in the holding as to the portion transferred. It is, therefore, ambiguous, and it is more reasonable to construe it as referring to the portion transferred rather than to the whole, for if the Legislature intended to impose the severer penalty, it would have made that clear by the use of some such words as "all his land" or "the whole of the land in his holding"

Cases of lapse for failure of heirs or forfeiture for failure to pay rent necessarily affect the whole holding and need not, therefore, be considered. But the case of resignation may either be of the whole or of a part and, therefore, affords a guide to the intention of the Legislature.

Now in 1904 it was quite clear that resignation of "the land or any portion of the land in his holding" involved a penalty affecting only "the land so resigned."

The Legislature, when inducting a penalty for unauthorised transfer in 1912, could not have intended to enhance the penalty for resignation. So the words "such land" in the penal clause in 1912 and "his land" in the same clause in 1913 must mean the land or portion of land resigned. And indeed this must be so, for a resignation of a portion is only effective with the consent of the Khot and, therefore, the very phrase implies that Khot takes back a portion and the permanent tenant continues his permanent tenancy of the remainder. If the word "such" in the penal clause in 1912 includes a portion with reference to resignation, it must also be similarly construed with reference to the clause dealing with unauthorised transfers.

There could be no doubt about this but for the unfortunate phrase in that clause "such land or any portion thereof." This clause follows on the resignation clause where the words are "the land or any portion of the land in his holding." "Such land" should, therefore, refer back to this phrase and include the portion and so the words "or any portion thereof" are redundant and meaningless. If these words are omitted from that clause, all the clauses of the section of the Act of 1912 are harmonious and consistent. It is the unskilful draftsmanship of the section of 1912 that is the cause of the obscurity. And this was not remedied in 1913 when the word "his" was substituted for "such" overlooking the fact that the word 'such' had two different meanings in the fourth clause and in the penal clause of the section of 1912.

It is true that transfer stands on a different footing to resignation. There can be no resignation of a portion without the consent of the Khot. The tenant may cease cultivating a portion but he would still have to pay the rent of the whole tenancy. The resignation is only effective when the Khot accepts the portion surrendered and then there is a proportionate remission of rent presumably under section 23, r. 11 (b). The penalty in the case of resignation of a portion is not so much a penalty as a statement of the consequence of the resignation. An authorised transfer is similarly ineffective but it calls for a penalty inasmuch as it introduces a tenant whom the Khot may not like, and who may, by prescription, acquire the right of a permanent tenant and prejudice the Khot's reversionary interest. Can it be said that these considerations induced the Legislature to impose a severer penalty for the unauthorised transfer? or that the effect of limiting the penalty to the portion is to allow the tenant to do indirectly what he cannot do directly by resignation? I think not. In the first place no prescriptive title would be acquired against the Khot unless he accepted rent from the transferee and that would in itself involve consent to the transfer. Nor would the attempted transfer of the portion be equivalent to a resignation of that portion for the tenant would still have to pay the whole rent of his holding.

On the whole my conclusion is that the difficulty is due merely to unskilful draftsmanship. In Salmon v. Duncombe (2) the Privy Council declined to allow a Statute to be reduced to a nullity by the draftsman's unskilfulness and ignorance of law, and I think we would be justified in refusing to allow the same defect to lead to hardship and injustice. I, therefore, think that the phrase "his land" in the penal part of the section means the portion of the land in the holding which is purported to be transferred or in which an interest is purported to be transferred.

I, therefore, agree that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

NEHAR BEWA v. KADOR BAKAS MOHAMMED.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 596 OF 1920.

May 15, 1922.

Present:—Justice Sir Asutosh Mookerjee, KT., and Mr. Justice Chotzner.

NEHAR BEWA AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS —APPELLANTS

versus

KADOR BAKAS MOHAMMED—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Evidence—Document relevant as evidence of transaction—Recitals, if and when relevant.

Where a document containing assertions by a person who is alive is admitted in evidence as evidence of a transaction, the recitals in the document do not become part of the evidence unless the person making the assertions is brought before the Court.

Appeal against a decree of the Offisiating Subordinate Judge, Dinajpur, dated the 31st of October 1919, reversing a decree of the Munsif, Thakurgaon, dated the 21st of September 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Chunidra Lal Moitra, for Babu Girija Prasanna Sanyal, for the Appellants.—The lower Appellate Court has not come to any definite finding upon the question of title. He has not definitely found whether the property standing in the name of Bhedu belonged to all the brothers including Kanu through whom the plaintiffs claim. The learned Judge below has disposed of the suit by simply relying upon a deed of release said to have been executed by Nanu, a brother of the plaintiffs. The recitals in that dead are no evidence against the plaintiffs.

[MOOKERJEE, J.—Is Nanu alive?]

Yes.

Babu Jatindra Nath Lahiri, for the Respondent.—The learned Judge below has in effect come to a finding upon the question of title.

If the case is to go back, your Lordships will give directions for the examination of Nanu as a Court witness. The question of adverse possession by the defendants should also be taken into account.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs in a suit for recovery of possession upon establishment of title. The Court of first instance decreed the suit. Upon appeal that decision has been reversed by the subordinate Judge. We are unable to affirm the decision of the Subordinate Judge as not liable to be successfully challenged in second appeal. There are two points which have been urged against the judgment on behalf of the appellant. In the first place, it has been contended that there is no clear and definite finding upon the question of title. The property stood originally in the name of Bhedu, one of three brothers (Bhedu, Saidu, and Kanu). One side affirmed that although the property stood in the name of Bhedu it was owned by all the three brothers. Another side asserted that Kanu had no interest in the property so that after the death of Bhedu the property, passed to Saidu and after his death to Kalua, the predecessor-in interest of the defendants. Upon this fundamental question of title the lower Appellate Court does not come to any definite finding. In the determination of this question the fact of possession of the property must be taken into account and when the evidence of possession is considered, it must also be borne in mind that Bhedu, Saidu and Kanu were members of a joint family and the question of adverse possession as between co-sharers may consequently have to be taken into consideration.

In the second place, it has been urged against the judgment of the Subordinate Judge that he placed reliance upon recitals in a deed of release executed by Nanu (the son of Kanu and brother of the two plaintiffs) in favour of the defendant. No doubt the fact that Nanu executed a deed of release constitutes a transaction which is relevant for the purpose of investigation of the question in controversy. But the recitals in the document do not become a part of the evidence. They are assertions by a person who is alive and who might have been brought before the Court if either of the parties to the suit had so desired. This distinction is frequently overlooked and when a document has been admitted in evidence as evidence of a transaction the parties are often apt to refer to the recitals therein, as relevent evidence.

We are of opinion that in the circumstances of this case the appeal should be allowed, the decree of the Subordinate Judge set aside and the case remanded to him for re-consideration in accordance with law. The Subordinate Judge will take steps to have Nanu examined as a Court witness with liberty reserved to both sides to cross-examine him if so advised. Costs will abide the result.

AUDESH PRASAD SINGH AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law—Debts—Joint family property—Liability for father's debts—Pious obligation of sons to pay father's debts during his lifetime—Property passed out of family in satisfaction of father's debts—Sons' right to recover back.

Under the Hindu Law, subject to certain limited exceptions, the whole of the undivided estate of a joint family is liable in the hands of sons for the debts of their father unless the debts are taken for illegal or immoral purpose. There is a pious obligation on the sons to pay such debts. This liability, however, so long as the father is alive is only contingent. [p. 284, col. 1.]

Although where the father is alive the sons may be able to question a debt incurred by their father before the family property is sold in satisfaction of the same, if the property has passed out of the family without any objection having been taken by them or on their behalf, and rights of persons outside the family have sprung up with regard thereto, those rights cannot be defeated by the sons simply questioning the necessity for the debt. They have further to establish that the debt was one for the payment of which there was no existing or contingent obligation on them to discharge: or, in other words, that it was a debt taken for illegal or immoral purposes. JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs are the grandsons of Nageshar Singh and seek to impeach a mortgage by conditional sale effected by the latter in favour of Jaimal Prasad, the predecessor-in-title of the defendant, on the 16th December 1892. The mortgage comprised a 10-biswas share in Mahal Jaimal Prasad, village Mustafabad. The share in question was ancestral property. Nageshar Singh had a son Brahmadeo Singh, who lived jointly with him when the said mortgage was executed. Jaimal Prasad sued Nageshar Singh for foreclosure on foot of that mortgage and obtained a preliminary decree for foreclosure which was made absolute on the 9th May 1898. Brahmadeo Singh was not a party to that suit or decree. In execution of that decree Jaimal Prasad got possession of the mortgaged property on the 15th July 1898.

The plaintiffs are the sons of Brahmadeo Singh and had not till then been born. Nageshar Singh had some other share left in the mahal by virtue of which he continued to be the Lambardar thereof. On the 12th June 1901 Jaimal Prasad got the 10-biswas share obtained by him by foreclosure partitioned into a separate mahal. One of the plaintiffs was born before that partition. The other plaintiff was born later.

On the 24th October 1911 Jaimal Prasad sold a 9-10ths share of the 10 biswas share, which had been formed into a separate mahal, to Bindeshari Singh and his remaining 1-10th to Brahmadeo Singh, the father of the plaintiffs. Brahmadeo Singh filed no suit to impeach the mortgage made by his father but the plaintiffs now seek to impeach it on the ground that the property in question was ancestral property and that the mortgage was made without any legal necessity. The defendant pleaded that he was a transferee in good faith for value, that the mortgage was made to pay certain prior debts and for legal necessity with the consent of Brahmadeo Singh, the father of the plaintiffs, and was binding on them and that the claim was barred by limitation.

The Court of first instance found that the mortgage in question had not been proved to have been made for legal necessity or to pay an antecedent debt or with the consent of the father of the plaintiffs that there was no pious obligation on the plaintiffs to pay the debt of their granfather so long as their father was alive, and that the mortgage and the decree for foreclosure were consequently not binding on them. It further found that Jaimal Prasad got actual possession in July 1901, and that by reason of the previous minority of one of the plaintiffs and the existing minority of the other the claim was not barred by time. In regard to the plea of bona fide purchase for value, it held that section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) was inapplicable. The lower Appellate Court upheld that view

It is well-established that under the Hindu Law, subject to certain limited exceptions, the whole of the undivided estate of a joint family is liable in the hands of sons for the debts of their father unless the debts are taken for illegal or immoral purpose. There is a pious obligation on the sons to pay such debts. Where the father is alive, the obligation is only contingent, for the father may discharge the same in his lifetime or there may be ample personal estate belonging to the father available out of which the debts might be discharged or no joint family property left from which their satisfaction might be possible. Accordingly, where ancestral property has passed out of the family, either under a conveyance executed by the father in consideration of an antecedant debt, or in order to raise money to pay off an antecedant debt, or under a sale in execution of a decree for the father's debts, the sons by reason of their duty to pay their father's debts cannot recover that property, unless they can show that the debts were of a kind for which they would not have been liable and that the purchasers had notice to that effect. That principle was recognised by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Suraj Bansi Koer v. Sheo Persad Singh (1) and re-affirmed in Nanomi Babuasin v. Modhun Mohun (2). In the former case, the father was dead; in the latter case, the father was alive on the date on which the property passed out of the family by sale. In Sohu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (3) their Lordships of the Privy Council pointed out that the responsibility to meet the father's debts was one thing, and the validity of the mortgage over the joint estate was quite another thing; and after referring to the necessity of protecting the rights of third persons, say the purchasers of the property, who had taken their title for onerous consideration and in good faith, they observed: "A perusal of the numerous authorities will show that where a joint family property has been sold out and out, or where a decree in execution of the mortgage has been obtained against the property, and rights have thus sprung up with regard to the joint family estate, these rights are not to be defeated by the members of the joint family simply questioning the transaction entered into by its head." Where the father is alive the sons may be able to question a mortgage made by their father before the property effected is sold or foreclosed in satisfaction of that mortgage; but if the property has passed out of the family without any objection having been taken by them or on their behalf and rights of persons outside the family have sprung up with regard thereto, those rights cannot be defeated by the sons simply questioning the transaction of mortgage. They have further to establish that the debt was one for the payment of which there was no existing or contingent obligation on them to discharge, or, in other words, that it was a debt taken for illegal or immoral purposes.

The learned Counsel for the plaintiffs respondents urges that it would be open to the sons to show that the debt was not one, which they were bound to discharge, because it was not taken for legal necessity. But as pointed out by Lord Hobhouse in Nanomi Babuasin v. Modhun Mohun (2), sufficient care has not always been taken to distinguish between the question how far the entirety of the joint estate is liable to answer the father's debt and the question how far the sons can be precluded by the proceedings taken by or against the father alone from disputing that liability. If the debt was of a nature sufficient to support a sale of the entirety, the father might legally have sold it without suit or the creditor might legally procure a sale of it by suit, and all that the sons can claim is that, not being parties to the sale or execution proceedings, they ought not to be barred from trying the fact or the nature of the debt in a suit of their own. In Balwant Singh v. Aman Singh (4) and Kehri Singh v. Chunni Lal (5), it was held in somewhat similar circumstances that a suit by the great grandson of the original mortgagor to impeach a sale held in execution of a decree obtained on foot of a mortgage would not lie on the ground that he had not been impleaded. In Bharat Singh v. Sarsuti Singh (6) it was held that where the property has passed out of the family to pay off an antecedent debt either under a conveyance executed by the father or under a sale in execution of a decree for the father's debt, the son could not recover back the property unless he could show that the obligation arising out of the antecedent debt was of a character which he was not in any contingency liable to discharge. In Parmeshur Dat v. Debi Sahae (7) and Basdeo Lal v. Mahabir (8) a similar view was taken.

It makes no difference in principle whether the property passed out by foreclosure or by sale. In Sheo Shankar Ram v. Jaddo Kunwar (9) their Lordships of the Privy Council pointed out that there might be occasions, including foreclosure actions, when the mortgagors of a joint Hindu family might so effectively represent all other members of the family that the family as a whole might be bound. In Sheo Dayal v. Jagannath (10) it was held that a suit by the sons to set aside a decree absolute for foreclosure was not maintainable except on some ground which would relieve them from liability to pay the debt for the satisfaction of which the foreclosure was effected. There is no allegation in this case that the debt in question was taken for illegal or immoral purposes.

The appeal must, therefore, be allowed and the suit of the plaintiffs dismissed with costs here and hitherto.

MOHAMMED WAJID ALI KHAN PANI AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Joint possession, suit between co-owners for—Partition suit pending between the parties—Court, if should disturb existing possession—No hard and fast rule—Justice, equity and good conscience.

No hard and fast rule can be laid down for the decision of the question whether a co-owner has the right to joint khas possession of the lands which have been exclusively occupied by another co-owner. Each case must be decided on its merits according to justice, equity and good conscience. [p. 287, col. 1.]

Watson & Co. v. Ramchund Dutt, (8 C. 10; 17 I. A. 110; 5 Sar. P. C J. 535; 9 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 7 (P. C Lachmeswar Singh v. Manowar Hossein, 19 C. 253; 19 I. A. 48; 6 Sar. P. C. J. 133; 9 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 614 P. C.) relied on.

Where during the pendency of a suit for partition one co-owner brings a suit against another for joint possession of certain lands comprised in the joint estate, the Court should be unwilling to disturb the existing possession of the lands during the pendency of the suit for partition between the parties, unless it feels bound to do so for very cogent reasons. [p. 287, col. 1.]

Appeals against the decrees of the Subordinate Judge, Fourth Court, Mymensingh, dated the 20th November 1919, affirming in Nos. 961 to 963 and 978 and 979 and modifying in Nos. 964 to 977 of 1920, decrees of the Munsif, Second Court at Tangail, dated the 31st July 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Dr. Dwarkanath Mitter (with him Babu Monindranath Banerjee), for the Appellants.—This was a suit by the plaintiffs for the joint possession of certain lands. Both the plaintiffs and defendants are co-sharers. The lands in suit appertain to lands which the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 made khas. So the plaintiffs as co sharers are entitled to joint khas possession of these lands.

I submit that the learned Subordinate Judge has applied the decisions he has quoted to the facts of the case in a wrong way. Every case must be decided on its own facts and circumstances.

It may be that the defendants are expired by lofty motives in acquiring exclusive possession of these lands as they intend to set up a College and a School. But I submit that your Lordships will not be influenced by such sentimental grounds. We insist on justice at your hands. Joint possession should be given to co-owners against other co-owners who have taken possession of the land from their common raiyats. Refers to Surendra Narain Sinha v. Hari Mohan Misser (1), Watson & Co. v. Ramchand Dutt (2) and Lachmeswar Singh v. Manowar Hossein (3) are clearly distinguishable from the facts of the present cases before your Lordships.

Babu Dwarkanath Chakerbutty (with him Maulvi Md. Nur-ul-Haq Chowdhury), for the Respondents.—I submit as a suit for partition of this estate is now pending the present possession of the lands by defendants should not be disturbed. No very good reasons have been shown why your Lordships should set aside the judgments of the learned Subordinate Judge. The defendants offered to compensate the plaintiffs by granting them the lands. A huge sum has been spent by the defendants for setting up educational institutions on the lands. Apart from any question of law, justice and equity demand that there should be no disturbance of possession at the present stage.

Dr. D. N. Mitter replied.

JUDGMENT.—These 19 appeals arise out of the decision of the lower Appellate Court in the same number of appeals heard by him against the decision of the Munsif, Second Court, Tangail. In the First Court there were 19 suits which were tried jointly. Against the decision of these 19 suits 20 appeals were preferred, some by the plaintiff and some by the defendants. In one of these, Suit No. 2751 of 1917, no second appeal has been preferred as the findings of fact in the first appeal relating to that suit are conclusive. All these suits were brought by the plaintiffs against the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 who are their co-sharers for joint possession of certain lands. In 13 of these cases the First Court gave decrees for joint khas possession which were reversed by the lower Appellate Court. In the remaining six cases both Courts refused khas possession, one of these six being Suit No. 2751 already referred to.

The plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are co-sharers in estate No. 10 of the Mymensingh Collectorate and the lands to which the suits relate are situated in Mouzah Karatia. The plaintiffs' case is that the lands in suit appertain to lands which the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 made khas either by purchase or by inducing the tenants to vacate them, and that the defendants having taken khas possession of these lands they are entitled to recover joint khas possession in proportion to their share in the estate. The lower Appellate Court has held that on the principle laid down by the Privy Council in the cases of Watson & Co. v. Ramchund Dutt (2) and Lachmeswar Singh v. Manowar Hossein (3) the plaintiffs are not entitled to khas possession. These appeals depend on the principles which apply in deciding whether a co-owner has the right to joint khas possession of the lands which have been exclusively occupied by another co-owner. Several cases have been cited in which the leading cases already mentioned above have been referred to and discussed. Before dealing with the other aspects of the cases it should be mentioned that these cases differ from all reported cases in one very material particular, and that is, that there is a suit for partition of this estate now pending between the parties. In that suit the rights of the parties to khas possession of different lands will be finally decided and we should be unwilling to disturb the existing possession of the lands during the pendency of this suit, unless we felt bound to do so for very cogent reasons. These we do not find in the present suits. From the decisions of the Privy Council cited above no hard and fast rule can be laid down. Each case must be decided on its merits according to justice, equity and good conscience.

On the facts found in the present cases we are not inclined to hold that the lower Appellate Court was wrong in refusing the plaintiffs' decrees in these suits. It is not necessary to state all the facts, but those which appear to us to have the most bearing on this point are the following. The share of the principal defendants in the lands in suits is 12 annas and odd and the plaintiffs' share is 3 annas and odd. The area of the land in suit is nearly $2\frac{1}{2}$ khadas and there are about 60 khadas in Mouzah Karatia. Of the lands in suit only $6\frac{3}{4}$ pakis would be the plaintiffs' share. The main object for which the defendant No. 1 has taken possession of the land is for founding a new School and College and for this purpose he has already spent about 2/3 lakhs of rupees in improving the land building pucca structures on portions of the same. The plaintiffs have been acquiring these lands and building on them since 1313 and some of the buildings were erected about two years before the institution of the suit. A portion of the land in suit has also been included in the defendants' qari, a portion having been made into a tank and another portion into an orchard. They have also erected quarters for their Hindu amlas. There is another Mouzah Gorai Khamarchhata in the estate No. 10 in which the plaintiffs have 75 29 acres of khamar land, while the defendant No. 1 has 1. 82 acres of khamar land there, though in this village the plaintiffs' share is 7 annas $1\frac{1}{2}$ pies and defendant No. 1's share is 8 annas $2\frac{1}{2}$ gandas. The plaintiffs as proprietors have no khamar land in the village Karatia but they have 3 khadas of khas land in this village and the defendants have offered them other lands in that village to compensate them for $6\frac{3}{4}$ pakis which is the plaintiffs' share in the land and of which the defendants have taken possession.

On behalf of the appellants it was not argued that there had been any serious injustice to the plaintiffs. It was contended that they were entitled to insist on their rights and the rights of the parties should not be decided on sentimental consideration. The decision in Surendra Narain Sinha v. Hari Mohan Misser (1) has been cited. It was argued that the main principle to be followed in this case is that joint khas possession, should be given to co-owners against other co-owners who have taken possession of land from raiyats who are raiyats of all the co-sharers. It is said that this distinguishes the facts of this case from the facts of the two cases which have been decided by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. This certainly is an important distinction. But we do not think it sufficient, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, to justify the reversal of the decision of the lower Appellate Court; nor has that rule been always applied for in the case of Basanta Kumari Dasya v. Mohesh Chandra Shaha (4) a co-sharer defendant had taken possession of land which was formerly occupied by a family of barber who held at a nominal rent and used to do services for both the plaintiffs and the defendants.

Having regard, therefore, to these facts and particularly that the subject-matter of these suits is now under partition and also that on the facts found no serious injustice appears to have been done to the plaintiffs and there has been no denial of the plaintiff's title and no ouster we think that the suits were rightly dismissed. We accordingly dismiss these appeals with costs.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885*)*, ss. 60, 72—Registered proprietor—Rent-suit—Defendant paying rent to transferee under kabuliyat for long time whether protected.

Plaintiff, the registered proprietor, sued the defendant for rent The defendant pleaded payment to transferee from the proprietor. The Courts below found that although the plaintiff was the registered proprietor, his rights had long since been purchased by the transferee to whom the defendant had executed a kabuliyat and had been paying rent for a long time. The Courts, thereupon, dismissed the suit, being of opinion that section 60 of the Bengal Tenancy Act had no application to the facts of the case:

Held, (1) that the fact that the plaintiff was a registered proprietor was enough to bring the case within section 60 of the Act and the defendant was not entitled to plead in defence that the rent was due to any third person;

(2) that section 72 of the Act which protected only a tenant to whom the transferee had given notice of the transfer had no application to the case.

JUDGMENT.

COUTTS, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for rent which was brought by the registered proprietor. The defendant pleaded payment to the transferee from the proprietor. The suit was dismissed in the Court of first instance and on appeal this decision has been upheld, it having been found by the learned District Judge that although the plaintiff is the registered proprietor her rights have been transferred to one Madho Sahu and that the defendant executed a kabuliyat in favour of Madho Sahu in 1895 and has since then been paying rent to him. In these circumstances the learned District Judge has found, that section 60 of the Bengal Tenancy Act has no application.

I am unable to understand how this could be so. By section 60 it is enacted that, where rent is due to the proprietor, the receipt of the person registered under the Land Registration Act shall be a sufficient discharge for the rent and that the person liable for the rent shall not be entitled to plead, in defence to a claim by the person so registered, that the rent is due to any third person. In the present instance the plaintiff is the person registered under the Land Registration Act, so that the case comes completely within section 60 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. It is hardly necessary to quote decisions in support of this view, but I may refer to the cases of Hardayal Mahton v. Wazir Mahton (1) and Hira Singh v. Lala Keshwar Lal (2).

It has been argued that section 72 of the Act modifies section 60 and protects the defendant. Section 72, however, applies to a case in which a transferee claims rent and it protects the tenant to whom the transferee has given notice of the transfer and has nothing to do with the case now before us. Moreover, there is nothing to show that the transferee has given notice to the tenant of the transfer. In my opinion, the decision of the Courts below is wrong and must be set aside. I would accordingly set aside the decision and decree the plaintiff's suit. In the circumstances of the case, I would pass no order as to costs.

Hyderabad Assigned Districts Land Revenue Code of 8 6—"*Ante-*jagir tenant" of alienated land, payment by, whether revenue or rent – Charge under s. 56.

Under section 4 (12 of the Hyderabad Assigned Districts Land Revenue Code an ante-jagir tenant of alienated land is an inferior holder and not a tenant and the amount payable by him to the jagirdar is not rent as defined in section 4 24) of the Code, but land revenue which, under section 56 of the Code, is a paramount charge on the holding.

Appeal from a decree of the Additional District Judge, Amraoti, dated the 24th August 1920, in Civil Appeal No. 125 of 1919.

Sir B. K. Bose and Messrs. V. Bose and P. N. Rudra, for the Appellant.

Mr. V. V Ohitale, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT —The plaintiff is the jagirdar of Kasba Valgaon and sues for arrears of rent of a field for seven years 1911 12 to 1917 18. Defendant No. 1 was the ante-jagir tenant of the field. He sold the field to defendant No. 2 in 1911-12 who sold it to defendant No. 3 in 1916-17. Defendant No. 3 is the appellant in this Court. The lower Appellate Court has passed a decree against him for the rent of all the years in dispute on the ground that the amount payable by the ante-jagir tenant to the jagirdar is revenue and a charge on the holding. This finding is attacked and it is urged that the amount payable by the tenant was rent and not land revenue and that even if it was land revenue it was not a charge on the holding. The holding in suit is admittedly alienated land; section 4 (17), Hyderabad Assigned Districts Land Revenue Code, 1896. Under section 4 (12) the holder is an inferior holder. Being an inferior holder he is not a tenant: section 4 (13). What he pays is, therefore, not rent as defined in section 4 (4) but land revenue as described in the latter part of section 4 (23), since it is rent for land imposed by the Government. The sum payable being land revenue and the ante-jagir tenant a land-holder as defined in section 4 (9), it is a paramount charge on the holding under section 56.

It is contended that even if the sum claimed is land revenue the jagirdar cannot claim a charge under section 56 as that section creates a charge only in respect of land revenue as described in the first part of section 4 (23), that is, a payment due to the Government. It is said that the sections preceding section 56 commencing from section 49 show that section 56 gives a charge in respect of land revenue payable to the Government only. I can see nothing in those sections to justify the contention that section 56 gives no charge in respect of land revenue which is not a payment due to the Government. The section itself refers to an alienated holding such as the one in suit. The provision in the section of a remedy in case of failure in payment, particularly suitable in the case where the land revenue is payable to the Government, does not lead to the conclusion that the right to the charge is confined only to the Government. The decision of the lower Appellate Court is correct. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Rule against an order of the Officiating Subordinate Judge, Chittagong.

Babu Chandra Sekhar Sen, for the Appellant.

Babu Kanaidhon Dutt, for the Respondent.

JUDGMEMT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—This Rule arises out of an order of the Officiating Subordinate Judge of Chittagong, by which he overruled the decision which had been arrived at by the learned Munsif. It appears that the petitioner to this Court had obtained a money-decree against one Romesh Chandra Das and that, in execution of the decree, the property of Romesh Chandra Das was put up to sale by auction. The petitioner, the decree holder, purchased the property at the auction sale, for Rs. 375. Two days after the auction sale the judgment-debtor purported to sell the property by means of a kabala to a third party whose name was Harendra Lal Das. Hardendra Lal Das then applied under O. XXI, r. 89, Code of Civil Procedure, for the purpose of making the deposits which are therein specified. The learned Munsif came to the conclusion that Harendra Lal Das was not qualified to make the deposit under O. XXI, r. 89. The learned Munsif held that the private sale was void as against the decree-holder, who was the auction-purchaser and referred to section 64 of the Civil Procedure Code, and he confirmed the sale to the auction-purchaser. The result was that Harendra Lal Das appealed to the Subordinate Judge, who reversed the learned Munsif's order and remanded the case for taking the deposit and making the necessary orders thereon if not otherwise barred. This Rule was issued at the instance of the decree holder calling upon the opposite party to show cause why the order of the learned Subordinate Judge should not be set aside.

The question which has been argued on this Rule is, whether Harendra Lal Das was a person entitled, within the meaning of O. XXI, r. 89, to apply to have the sale set aside upon complying with the terms of that rule.

The learned Vakil who has argued this case in support of the Rule has drawn our attention to several cases, the decisions in which go to show that there is a considerable difference of opinion as to the meaning of the terms of this Rule. As for instance, the case of Anantha Lakshmi Ammal v. Kunnanchankarath Sankaran Nair (1) of the Madras High Court where the learned Judges took the view that the subsequent purchaser, if I may so call him, (Harendra Lal Das in this case) would be qualified to apply under O. XXI, r. 89; the case of Ishar Das v. Asaf Ali Khan (2) of the Allahabad High Court, where the learned Judges took a contrary view to that which was taken by the Madras High Court. Again, in the case of Dhanwanti Kuer v. Sheo Shankar Lal (3) a view contrary to that of the Madras High Court was taken by the learned Judges of the Patna High Court. The last case, to which I need refer to, is the case of Pandurang Laxman Uphade v. Govinda Dada Uphade (4) of the Bombay High Court. In some of those cases there was a discussion as to the effect of the auction sale, as to whether by reason of the auction sale the judgment debtor was divested of all his interest in the property sold. The High Court at Patna seems to have taken the view that he was: on the other hand, the learned Judges of the Bombay High Court seem to have taken the view that the judgment-debtor was not divested of all his interest in the property by reason of the auction sale, at all events, until it was confirmed. That point was raised during the argument on this Rule but I do not intend to express any opinion upon it, for, I do not think it necessary for the purpose of my judgment. I base my judgment upon what I consider to be the true interpretation of O. XXI, r. 89. So far as it is applicable to the facts of this case the rule runs as follows: "(1) Where immoveable property has been sold in execution of a decree, any person, either owning such property or holding an interest therein by virtue of a title acquired before such sale, may apply to have the sale set aside on his depositing in Court"—then follow the particular sums to be deposited, which are specified in the section.

(1) 18 Ind. Cas. 579; (1913) M. W. N. 101; 13 M. L. T. 128; 24 M. L. J. 205.

The view which was taken by the Bombay High Court in Pandurang Laxman Uphade v. Govinda Uphade (4), as appears from the head-note, was that a judgment-debtor, whose property had been sold at a Court sale in execution of decree against him, had a right to apply to have the sale set aside as a person owning the property sold in execution of the decree within the meaning of r. 89, O XXI, of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908, in spite of the fact that he had transferred his interest in the property after the Court sale. That is not a decision expressly on the point now under consideration but there are some observations in the judgments, which are applicable. Batchelor, J., at page 561* said: "I am not able to adopt the view that it is open to the subsequent purchaser to apply under this rule, for, as it seems to me, he is excluded by the terms of the rule" and later, on the same page: "For myself I can see no serious difficulty in holding that for the purpose of this rule the judgment-debtor in the position of the present applicant is still the owner of the property in the eye of the law, the auction sale being still unconfirmed;" and Shah, J., at page 563* said: "It seems to me that a person owning the property or holding an interest therein by virtue of a title acquired before the sale is within the rule, provided he owns it or holds an interest therein at the date of the sale by the Court."

In this case I have only to deal with the application by Harendra Lal Das, who purported to purchase the property from the judgment-debtor 2 days after the execution sale by the Court, and before the sale was confirmed and to decide whether he was entitled to make the deposit under O. XXI, r. 89, and to apply to have the sale set aside.

In my judgment, Harendra Lal Das, "the subsequent purchaser" as he has been called, is excluded by the express terms of the rule. The interest, if any, which he held in the property was not by virtue of a title acquired by him before the execution sale: his interest, if any, was by virtue of a title acquired after such sale and, consequently, in my judgment, he is precluded by the very terms of the rule from applying under O. XXI, r. 89. That is the only point which I decide upon this application; and, in my judgment, it is sufficient to justify me in holding that this Rule should be made absolute.

It was agreed by the two learned Vakils who argued this case that there is no decision of this Court upon the point. Reference was made to the case of Dulhin Mothura Koer v. Ganesidhar Singh (5). In that case the point, which is now before us, did not arise and was not dealt with by the learned Judges. For the above-mentioned reasons, in my judgment, this Rule should be made absolute. The result is, that the order of the learned Officiating Subordinate Judge is set aside and the order of the learned Munsif is restored. We make no order as to costs.

CHOTZNER, J.—I agree.

CIVIL REVISION No. 114-B OF 1922.

July 21, 1922.

GOPALRAO AND ANOTHER—APPLICANTS

versus

SHRAWAN AND ANOTHER—NON-APPLICANTS.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), ss. 11, 18, 48—Application for appointment as guardian refused—No appeal—Second application by same person, whether entertainable—Application for appointment as guardian after removal of existing guardian, rejection of—Appeal—Procedure under Act, whether summary—Provisions of Act ignored—Material irregularity.

Where an application for appointment as guardian of a minor is refused, and there is no appeal against the order of refusal, a subsequent application by the same person for a similar purpose, cannot be entertained.

No appeal lies from an order rejecting an application charging a guardian with misappropriation and asking for the appointment of the applicant as guardian, but it is open to the High Court to treat the appeal as an application for revision, under section 48 of the Guardians and Wards Act.

Pran Bandhu Singh v. Brahmamoyi Dasya, 1 C. W. N. 693, followed

Proceedings under the Guardians and Wards Act are not intended to be summary, and the procedure of a District Judge in appointing a guardian would be materially irregular, if he ignored the procedure enacted in sections 11 and 13 of the Act, and failed to consider whether the guardian was by character and capacity a fit person, and whether his appointment was for the welfare of the minor.

Revision against an order of the District Judge, Amraoti, dated the 14th March 1921, in Miscellaneous Case No. 52 of 1919.

Mr. M. D. Karondekar, for the Applicants.

Messrs. C. B. Parakh and A. Bhagwant, for the Non Applicants.

JUDGMENT.—In the petition of Kashibai, the mother-in-law of the minor, Shrawan, the minor's father was mentioned as the only near relative of the minor. Kashibai alleged that he had misappropriated certain property belonging to the minor. The order-sheet of the 23rd June 1919 shows that Shrawan had filed a written reply. This document is not to be found in the record. On the 25th August 1919 the District Judge appointed Kashibai guardian of the property. On the 1st May 1920 Kashibai presented an application alleging that her agent had misappropriated some of the property in her charge and asked the Court to sanction Rs. 300 for expenses of legal proceedings against him. On this application being filed, notice was issued to Shrawan to appear in the District Judge's Court if he was willing to take over the guardianship. On the 2nd August 1920 Shrawan, who was present in Court, was appointed guardian without any inquiry as to his fitness, and was asked to furnish sureties. Before the sureties were accepted Gopalrao, a first cousin of the minor's husband, Anandrao, applied to be appointed guardian. His application was rejected without any inquiry, and the order of appointment of Shrawan was issued on the 29th October 1920. On the 14th March 1921 Gopalrao and Ajabrao, another cousin of Anandrao, filed two separate applications, each praying for his appointment as guardian. Both these applications were rejected by the District Judge for reasons given in the order of the 29th October 1920. Gopalrao and Ajabrao filed an appeal against the order rejecting their applications.

Gopalrao's appeal cannot be entertained. As his application to be appointed guardian was rejected on the 29th October 1920 and he did not appeal therefrom, the second application by him was not entertainable. Ajabrao alleged that Shrawan intended to wrongfully dispose of the minor's property and had already disposed of some, and prayed for his own appointment. There is no express prayer for the removal of Shrawan but it is involved in the prayer for his own appointment. No appeal lies from the order refusing Ajabrao's application: Pran Bandhu Singh v. Brahmamayi Dasya (1). I, however, take up the matter in revision under section 48, Guardians and Wards Act. The order appointing Shrawan was passed without any inquiry at all into the allegations made against him in Kashibai's petition. We do not know what his reply was, as it is not to be found on the record. In appointing him the District Judge ignored the procedure laid down by the Guardians and Wards Act in sections 11 and 13 and failed to consider whether the guardian was by character and capacity a fit person and whether his appointment was for the welfare of the minor. His procedure was thus materially irregular. The procedure on Ajabrao's application is open to the same objection. Ajabrao had charged Shrawan with misappropriation, which is under section 39 (a) a ground for Shrawan's removal from the guardianship. As I have already said, Ajabrao's application was besides being one for his own appointment, in effect, also one for the removal of Shrawan, and the District Judge should have considered it in its latter aspect. It must be remembered, as pointed out in Sayad Shahu v. Hapiza Begam (2), that proceedings under the Guardians and Wards Act are not intended to be summary. I therefore, remand the case to be tried upon Ajabrao's application treated as one both for the removal of Shrawan under section 39 and for his own appointment. It will be necessary to consider the question of the appointment of Ajabrao only if it is decided to remove Shrawan. Any necessary amendment, formal or otherwise, of the application will be allowed by the District Judge. Costs in this Court will be paid as incurred.

Case remanded.

If an Appellate Court allows fresh evidence to be taken on behalf of a party, it must also allow the other party an opportunity to produce such evidence as they think fit to rebut the additional evidence adduced. [p. 294, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Third Court, Tipperah, dated the 26th April 1920, reversing that of the Munsif, First Court at Chandpur, dated the 31st March 1919.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Bepin Chunder Bose, for the Appellant. —The learned Judge should not have admitted evidence after the arguments in the case had been finished on both sides. And the learned Judge has referred to this inadmissible evidence in his judgment. Reads O. XLI, r. 27 as regards the admission of evidence. I had no opportunity to attack the supplementary evidence adduced by the other side and this vitiates the learned Judge's judgment. Refers to Kessowji Issur v. G. I P. Ry. Co. (1) and Gajadhar Prosad v. Lohia (2).

Babu Prokash Chunder Mozumdar, for the Respondent.—The question is to whose jote this strip of land appertains. The First Court relied on the evidence of the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs have not been prejudiced in any way by the admission of this additional evidence which is nothing but a judgment of the Revenue Court. Kessowji Issur v. G. I. P. Ry Co. (1) is of a different nature. Reads O. XLI, r. 27, clause (d), Civil Procedure Code. Refers to Hafiz Abdul Kurrim v. Sri Kissen Rai (3) and Gopal Singh v. Jhakri Rai (4).

The objection raised by the other side is of a purely technical nature and should not be allowed at this stage.

Mr. Bepin Chunder Bose was not heard in reply.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is preferred by the plaintiffs and it arises out of a suit for ejectment. The only objection taken to the judgment of the lower Appellate Court which reverses the judgment of the Trial Court is that the learned Subordinate Judge admitted evidence on behalf of the defendants after the arguments in the appeal had been heard and judgment reserved and based his decision upon that evidence. The objection taken is that the lower Appellate Court had no jurisdiction to admit the evidence complained of under O. XLI, r. 27, Code of Civil Procedure, as it did not come either under clause (a) or clause (b) of sub rule (1) of r. 27, and that the learned Judge did not record any reason for admitting it as provided by sub-rule (2) of that rule. The order of the learned Judge, dated the 2nd of April 1920, runs thus: "Arguments heard and judgment reserved. Let the document filed by the appellants be kept with the record". On the 26th of April the learned Judge delivered judgment decreeing the appeal preferred to him. It may be observed that there is actually no order, as I gather, by which the lower Appellate Court admitted their document in evidence. While, however, pronouncing judgment, the learned Judge relied upon the document, which, he says in his judgment, is marked Exhibit E. The power of the Court to admit evidence in appeal is restricted, and can be exercised only under the provisions of r. 27 of O. XLI, Code of Civil Procedure, as has been observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Kessowji Issur v. G. I. P. Ry Co. (1). Their Lordships observed referring to section 568 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882: "The legitimate occasion for section 568 is when, on examining the evidence as it stands, some inherent lacuna or defect becomes apparent, not where a discovery is made, outside the Court, of fresh evidence and the application is made to import it. That is the subject of the separate enactment in section 623." The appellants also rely upon the case of Gajadhar Prosad v. Lohia (2), the facts of which are almost the same as in the present case with regard to this question. It does not appear in this case, because nothing has been stated by the learned Subordinate Judge, as to why this evidence was taken in.

It is urged by the learned Vakil for the respondents that this document which purports to be a judgment of the Revenue Court was produced for the purpose of showing that the plaintiffs' evidence with regard to possession was untrue and that, it being a judgment, the plaintiffs could not possibly adduce any evidence in rebuttal of it and, therefore, the fact that this document was admitted and relied on by the Court of Appeal below could not have prejudiced the plaintiffs in any way and that the objection is untenable. It seems to me that where evidence has been admitted in contravention of the provisions of O. XLI, r. 27, Code of Civil Procedure, it is not for the Court of Appeal to see whether the evidence is incontrovertible or beyond doubt but it should only be seen whether it ought to have been taken at that stage or not. Reliance has also been placed on behalf of the respondents on the case of Hafiz Abdul Kurim v. Sri Kishen Rai (3) and on the case of Gopal Singh v. Jhakri Rai (4) in support of the proposition that the irregularities complained of on the part of the lower Appellate Court ought not to be considered sufficient for setting aside the judgment. I think, however, having regard to the rule and the procedure followed by the learned Subordinate Judge, that this appeal should be allowed and the case should go back to the lower Appellate Court for a re hearing of the appeal. If the Court thinks at the re-hearing that there is sufficient ground for taking additional evidence it will do so having regard to the provisions of O. XLI, r. 27, Civil Procedure Code, as explained in the cases already referred to. If the lower Appellate Court allows fresh evidence to be taken on behalf of the defendant, it must also allow the plaintiffs an opportunity to produce such evidence as they think fit to rebut the additional evidence adduced by the defendants. It is desirable, in the circumstances of the present case, that the appeal should be re-heard by some other Subordinate Judge than the Judge who heard it previously. Costs will abide the result.

An adoption with a condition that the adopted son shall not get any interest in the property of his adoptive father, till after the death of the survivor of two living persons, is valid.

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Hoshangabad, dated the 19th December 1917, in Civil Appeal No. 13 of 1917.

Mr. S. V. Deshmukh, for the Appellant.

Messrs M. Gupta and G. L. Galgil, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—It is hard to find anything to say in respect of this appeal, beyond saying that it must be dismissed. Indeed, the learned Judges of the lower Courts must have found some difficulty in discussing the absolutely futile pleas of the defendants as gravely and as seriously as they did. There is just one point which may be mentioned. It is embodied in the words of the first ground of appeal, but had to be brought to the notice of the learned Counsel for the appellants. He was arguing that any condition of postponement attached to an adoption would be invalid, but the cases, in which a man has made an adoption with a condition that the adopted son shall get no interest in his property during his lifetime and a widow had adopted a son to her deceased husband with reservation of her own life-interest in the property, are innumerable. I have not, however, come across a case before in which the full operation of the adoption is postponed for two lives, both already in existence. If, however, it can be postponed for one life, there seems no reason why it could not equally be postponed till after the death of the survivor of two living persons. The appeal is dismissed and the appellants must pay all the costs.

Appeal against a decree of the Officiating Subordinate Judge, First Court, Mymensingh, dated the 10th of July 1919, modifying that of the Munsif, Iswarganj, dated the 12th July 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Tarak Chandra Chakarburtty (with him Babu Profulla Chandra Chakarburtty), for the Appellant.—The defendant No. 1 is the appellant I am the purchaser from an occupancy raiyat. There was an usufructuary mortgage in 1912 in my favour. The landlord died in 1915. The lands adjoin the house of the landlord I was in possession to the knowledge of the landlord and rent was received by him from 1914-15. The sale in my favour took place on 6th August 1915. It has been found that I consoled the father of the plaintiff. Her father was looking after her. My purchase was consented to by him and he settled the nazar at Rs. 85. Upon his assurance the kobala was registered. The deed professes to transfer 15 annas of the holding to me. On 2nd June 1914 a Full Bench of this Court had decided that the landlord could not evict if a portion of the occupancy holding is sold and there is no abandonment. This point was entirely missed by the Courts below. I submit my purchase of a share of the holding can thus be explained. Then the landlord refused recognition. In February 1917 there was a partition between myself and my vendor who granted sub lease of his one-anna share on 20th March 1917. The present suit was brought on 11th May 1917. The lower Appellate Court says that these documents are spurious and sham transactions. Conceding that to be true, how does it affect my purchase in 1915. It has been held that there has been no abandonment. Rent for all these years have been paid and deposited in Court. First Court dismissed the suit on these grounds. The Appellate Court says that the sale was of the entire holding, I submit it is not open to the Court to say that in face of the case made out by the parties. Refers to Kabil Sardar v. Chunder Nath Nag Chowdhry (1), Dayamoyi v. Ananda Mohan Roy (2), Purna Chandra Trivedi v. Chandra Moni Dasi (3) and Mohiuddin v. Bhagaban Chandra (4). I am perfectly within my rights to avoid eviction by purchase of a portion of the occupancy holding. Refers to Bullivant v. Attorney-General for Victoria (5). In that case there were voluntary conveyances to evade payment of duties under the Statute. It was held that there was nothing illegal or improper in that. On the landlord's own showing the entire holding was not sold. Then as to abandonment, both Courts have held that there was no abandonment. I submit the decree is manifestly wrong. Refers to Monohar Pal v. Ananta Moyee Dasya (6). Then as regards my conduct, plaintiff's father was a co-executor to the Will of the plaintiff's husband. He consented to my purchase, he settled the selami and in fact everything was done to his knowledge. Refers to Ahmad Yar Khan v. Secretary of State for India in Council (7), Municipal Corporation of Bombay v. Secretary of State (8) I submit the plaintiff is bound by the conduct of the co-executor, her father.

Babu Birendra Kumar De, for the Respondent. The finding is that there has been no abandonment within the meaning of section 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. It has been found also that the money belonged to the purchaser but it was offered through the vendor. There is the finding which they cannot go behind, that the entire holding was sold. The mere mention of 15-annas in the document was a mere device. Plaintiff as landlord can show that it is a mere device.

[GHOSE, J.—But the device is supported by law.

Here the finding is conclusive that 16-annas was sold.

GHOSE, J.—Can you add to the terms of a document of sale?]

Refers to section 92 of the Indian Evidence Act. That does not affect the plaintiff at all. The purchaser is in possession of the entire holding and the original tenants have left living on the land and has left the village. Therefore, the landlord is admittedly entitled to khas possession according to the Full Bench decision in Dayamoyi v. Ananda Mohan Roy (2). Therefore, the question of abandonment has no importance at all. Section 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is not exhaustive as to the methods of abandonment. Refers to Matookdhari Shukul v. Jugdip Narain Singh (9) as regards consent by plaintiff's father, the question could not arise if the sale be of 15 annas.

Babu Tarak Chandra Chakraburtty replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.—In this case there is both an appeal and a cross-objection. The First Court dismissed the suit and the Subordinate Judge decreed the suit in part, that is, as against the defendant who was described as principal defendant No. 1 and dismissed the suit as against the rest. Against this dismissal against the rest of the defendants the cross objection is directed. The question to be decided in this appeal is whether there was or was not a sale of the entire holding. If there was a sale of the entire holding then there is no question as to the landlord's right to khas possession. That is the decision which has been adopted by the Subordinate Judge.

It has been contended before us that we are bound by his finding on this question as being one of fact. We do not think in the circumstances of this case that it can be considered as a finding only of fact. The document which conveyed the property conveyed only 15 annas of it. In my opinion the Subordinate Judge was in error in holding that there had been a sale of the whole holding. There was in fact, as the document shows, a sale only of a share of the holding. That being so, there being a sale of a share of the holding the landlord was not entitled to khas possession unless it was shown that there had been an abandonment. As regards this the learned Subordinate Judge's finding is hardly consistent with some other part of his judgment. He found that there had been no abandonment of the holding. Nor can it be said that there has been an abandonment of the holding in the face of the fact that there has been all along payment or offer of payment of rent by the tenant. This disposes of the appeal.

As regards the cross-objection, it depends upon the decision we come to in the appeal and having regard to our decision in the appeal it must necessarily fail.

We, therefore, decree the appeal and dismiss the cross objection. The appeal will be decreed with costs. As no extra time was taken by the discussion of the cross-objection there will be no order as to costs in the cross-objection.

Hindu Law—Partition—Partial partition—Presumption—Onus of proof.

Where a partial partition of the property of a joint Hindu family is admitted, the presumption is that there was a complete partition embracing the whole of the family property: where, therefore, it is subsequently alleged that some property is still undivided, the proof of such allegation rests upon the person making it.

Narayan Babaji v Nana Manohar, 7 B. H. C. R. (A. C. J.) 153, Bhola Devi v. Mohkam Chand, 48 Ind. Cas. 784; 121 P. R. 1918, relied on.

Second appeal from a decree of the Additional District Judge, Amirtsar at Gurdaspur, dated the 12th January 1916, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Amritsar, dated the 28th July 1914.

Messrs. D. C. Ralli and Mehr Chand and Mr. N. C. Mehra for Hon'ble Bakhshi Sohan Lal, K. B., for the Appellants.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for Jiwan Lal, Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal from the order of the Additional Judge, Amritsar, dismissing plaintiff's suit for possession, by partition, of one fourth of certain shops situated at Amritsar and also for a share in certain sums of money. The point on which the decision of the suit mainly depended was whether there had been a partition of the family property between the plaintiffs on the one hand and their uncle Jiwan Mal and their brothers Hazarimal and Mangal Das on the other. The plaintiffs in their plaint admitted that a part of the family property had already been divided but alleged that the property of which they now claimed a share had not been divided.

The First Court decreed the claim, holding that there had been no complete partition of the family property. The lower Appellate Court held that, as the plaintiffs had admitted a partial partition, the onus of proving that there was not a complete partition lay upon them and that they had not discharged it. It, therefore, set aside the order of the Trial Court and dismissed the suit. The plaintiffs have filed a second appeal in this Court and it is argued on their behalf by Mr. Ralli, Advocate, that the onus is really upon the defendants to show that the partition was a complete one. Mr. Ralli admits that he can show no direct authority in support of the proposition that when a partial partition of the property of a joint Hindu family is admitted, the onus is on the party alleging a complete partition to prove it. On the contrary there is ample authority against this proposition. In Mayne's Hindu Law, 8th Edition, at page 689 we find the following: "Where there has been a partition at all, the presumption is that it was a complete one and that it embraced the whole of the family property. Therefore, if property is afterwards found in the exclusive possession of one member of the family, and it is alleged that such property is still undivided and divisible the proof of such an allegation rests upon the party making it." Similarly in the Hindu Code by Gour at page 700 we find Art. 148 laying down that every partition is presumed to be complete both as to the person and the property. This view was taken so long ago as 1870 by the Bombay High Court in the case reported as Narayan Babaji v. Nana Manohar (1). The same view was taken in Bhola Devi v. Mohkam Chand (2). We, therefore, have no difficulty in agreeing with the learned District Judge that the onus lay upon the plaintiffs to prove that the partition was not a complete one. He says that the plaintiffs have produced no evidence whatever to prove this; and Mr. Ralli has been unable to refer us to any evidence on the record of the present case in support of it. He has referred to two suits brought by Jiwan Mal and Hazari Mal in 1911 which were mentioned by the Trial Court, but we do not think that these suits show in any way that the original partition was not a complete one. He has also referred to a copy of an entry in Jiwan Mal's bahi which is on the record of one of these cases which refers to a partition of certain debts and ornaments and states that the property at Amritsar is still joint. The document has not been proved by any evidence in the present case and we note that it is written in Persian characters by one Vir Bhan, and though Jiwan Mal signed in Hindi he stated that he did not know that any mention had been made of the property at Amritsar until afterwards and that this had been fraudulently entered by Vir Bhan. There is no proof that Jiwan Mal got this entry made, and plaintiffs in their replication said they knew nothing about this entry and did not rely upon it. The lower Appellate Court is perfectly correct in our opinion in stating that there is no evidence on the record to prove that the partition was not a complete one.

We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

Res judicata—Rent-decree—Rate of rent—Presumption arising from entry in the Record of Rights, rebuttal of.

A rent-decree may not be res judicata in the sense that it finally decided the rate of rent between the parties but it is res judicata that for the years for which that suit was brought the rent was the amount then found. Hence the decision may be sufficient to support a finding that the presumption arising from an entry of a different rate of rent in the Record of Rights has been rebutted. [p. 299, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Fourth Court, Mymensingh, dated the 12th March 1920, affirming that of the Munsif, Second Court at Netrokona, dated the 12th August 1919.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak (with him Babu Ramani Mohan Chatterjee), for the Appellant.—The only question involved in this case is about the rental of the tenancy. I submit that the decision of the learned Settlement Officer is not res judicata. Under section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code it cannot be held to operate as res judicata. There was, as a matter of fact, no decision. The Judge did not purport to pass a decree on decision of the point. It was a judgment on admission. The learned Judge in the Appellate Court is wrong in thinking that section 105 case considered only the excess. Reads section 105, Bengal Tenancy Act, and also sections 105 A 106, 107, Bengal Tenancy Act. The decision of the Settlement Officer in section 105 proceeding as to rent is final. The Court is in error when it treats this as presumptive evidence. The question cannot be re opened after the final decision by the Settlement Officer.

Babu Profulla Chandra Chakrabarti, for the Respondent.—Section 105 case was limited to excess of area only, the whole rental was not the subject-matter of the suit. My friend must bring forward the decision in section 105 case. I submit that the presumption arising from the entry in the Record of Rights has been amply rebutted.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak in reply—I rely on section 107, Bengal Tenancy Act, and not on section 11, Civil Procedure Code. When the Revenue Officer adopted in his judgment the entry in the Record of Rights that decision is final and conclusive between parties under section 107, Bengal Tenancy Act. And that rent cannot be varied by saying that the rent was so much in previous years. The previous judgment can have no operation in view of the decision in section 105 case.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a rent suit and the only question in dispute is the amount of rent payable. The plaintiff relies on a decision in a case under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The defendant relies on a decision in a suit for rent for the years previous to those for which rent is claimed in the present suit.

The appellant has taken back from the file of the lower Court the judgment delivered in section 105 case. Consequently I have before me only the statement by the lower Court of the purport of that judgment. From that it appears that in that case the only point which the Revenue Officer had to consider was what additional rent was to be allowed for the excess area. If that was the only point decided it is of no help to the appellant that the rent of the original area was recorded at the conclusion of that case at the same amount as it had been recorded in the khatian. The lower Courts have held that the presumption arising from the entry in the khatian was rebutted by the decree in the previous rent-suit in which the rate of rent was held to be that admitted by the defendant. It is contended that the lower Appellate Court was wrong in holding that the decree operated as res judicata. It may not be res judicata in the sense that it finally decided the rate of rent between the parties. But it is res judicata that for the years for which that suit was brought the rent was the amount then found. That decision is sufficient to support the finding that the presumption arising from the entry in the Record of Rights has been rebutted.

I accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

Custom—Widow, act of, prejudicing estate—Creation of occupancy rights—Reversioner, position of—Adverse possession against widow—Reversioner, whether affected.

An act of a widow prejudicing the estate of her deceased husband is not binding on the reversioners except for the life of the widow, and the reversioners are not bound to contest the widow's act during her lifetime. [p. 300, col. 2.]

The creation of occupancy rights by a widow, being a transfer of valuable rights, can be challenged by the reversioner [p. 300, col. 2.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Ludhiana, dated the 4th April 1916, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge Second Class, Ludhiana, dated the 23rd October 1915.

Mr. Kanwar Narain, for Sardar Sewa Ram Singh, for the Appellant.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The brief facts of the case out of which the present second appeal arises are as follows: Budh Singh, the proprietor of the land in suit died a great many years ago, it is said before 1872, leaving two widows, Musammat Chand Kaur and Musammat Nand Kaur, the last of whom, Musammat Nand Kaur, died in 1912 Sawan Singh was the occupancy tenant of the land. He died on the 22nd May 1892. On the 14th October 1890 Sawan Singh executed a deed of adoption in which he recited that he had brought up Nand Singh and had treated him as his son and that Nand Singh should be heir after his death. After Sawan Singh's death mutation of his occupancy rights was sanctioned in favour of Nand Singh on the 20th March 1893. Sawan Singh's collaterals objected to the mutation and were referred to a civil suit. In 1907 they instituted a suit which was dismissed on the ground that the common ancestor of themselves and of Sawan Singh was not proved to have occupied the land. After the death of Musammat Nand Kaur the present plaintiffs, as reversioners of Budh Singh, sued for possession of the land. The Courts below have held (1) that Nand Singh was appointed an heir according to custom by Sawan Singh and that this customary adoption, according to Hindu Law, did not give him any right to succeed to Sawan Singh's occupancy rights; and (2) that the plaintiffs' suit having been brought within twelve years of the death of the Musammat Nand Kaur, the widow of the last male proprietor, is within time.

The first point urged by Mr. Kanwar Narain in arguing the case on behalf of Nand Singh, appellant, is that the most important question in the case was whether the adoption of Nand Singh was a formal one according to Hindu Law or merely the customary appointment of an heir. He urges that the plaintiffs admitted the adoption and that, therefore, his client's Counsel in the Trial Court closed the evidence on the point. He says that the Trial Court presumed that only a customary adoption was alleged. We have examined the pleas of Nand Singh, and we find that there was no plea by him that his adoption was a formal one according to Hindu Law. The parties are Jats of Ludhiana District and, therefore, the prima facie presumption is that Nand Singh was merely appointed an heir according to custom. In a subsequent oral statement Nand Singh said that he did not know whether his adoption was a customary one or a formal one according to Hindu Law, but he admitted that in matters of inheritance he followed custom and not the Hindu Law. We think that, under all the circumstances of the case it was incumbent upon Nand Singh, if he relied upon a formal adoption, clearly to allege that such had taken place. We have no doubt that there was no intention whatever on the part of Nand Singh to allege a formal adoption, and we see no necessity for remanding the case in order that there may be any farther inquiry upon this point.

The second point is whether the plaintiffs' suit is barred by time. Mr. Kanwar Narain on behalf of the appellant has referred us to the definition of "landlord" in section 4 (6) and (7) of the Punjab Tenancy Act. We agree with him that there can be no doubt that Musammat Nand Kaur and Musammat Chand Kaur were landlords within the meaning of the Tenancy Act. He next went on to urge that the widows by not suing to oust Nand Singh allowed him to acquire the rights of an occupancy tenant. He urges that they had six years within which to sue Nand Singh for a declaration that he had not occupancy rights and that not having done so his rights cannot be called in question. He has not, however, referred to any authority in support of the proposition that this inaction on the part of the widows would bind the reversioners after their deaths. When Bidh Singh, the proprietor of the land, died, his estate vested in his widows on the usual life-tenure. Any act of their's prejudicing the estate would not be binding on the reversioners except for the lives of the widows. There is also clear authority for the proposition that the reversioners were not bound to contest the widows' acts during the latter's lifetime. They could wait until the estate fell into possession after the death of the last surviving widow and then bring a suit. In consequence of our finding that Nand Singh was not the formally adopted son of Sawan Singh, it is clear that upon the latter's death the occupancy rights determined. How then did Nand Singh acquire occupancy rights? He must have acquired them by a fresh act of the widows. They either allowed him to remain in possession as an occupancy tenant or they conferred occupancy rights upon him. It was held by a Division Bench of the Chief Court in the case reported as Ishar v. Sundar (1) that the creation of occupancy rights being a transfer of valuable rights, could be challenged by the heirs in accordance with the well recognized principles of Customary Law. If then it be considered that the widows created occupancy rights in favour of Nand Singh this act of theirs can be challenged by the heirs in accordance with custom. If it be held that Nand Singh's possession was adverse to the widows and that he acquired rights as against them, still it can not be held that this possession was adverse against the reversioners during the lifetime of the widows. See in this connection the Law of Limitation by Rustomji, 2nd Edition, page 450, where the authorities in support of this proposition will be found collected. The law allows the reversioner 12 years from the female heirs' death under Art. 141 of the Limitation Act and it is neither in her power nor in the power of any person claiming through or against her to abbreviate that period. Whether then it be held that the widows conferred occupancy rights upon Nand Singh or he acquired those rights as against them by adverse possession, the suit of the reversioners having been brought within 12 years of the death of the last surviving widow is within time. We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

The First Court directed the parties to bear their own costs and this order was maintained by the lower Appellate Court. Bakhshi Tek Chand has filed cross-objections in regard to this on behalf of the plaintiffs. He, however, does not press them before us and, taking all the circumstances of the case into consideration, we see no reason to interfere with this part of the order. We accordingly reject the cross-objections.

Bengal Tenancy Amendment Act (II B. C. of 1918), s. 49E, sub-s. (2), 49F—Power of an aboriginal to effect a mortgage of his holding to a non-aboriginal, how restricted—Permission of Collector, if can enlarge that power.

The power of an aboriginal to effect a mortgage of his land is restricted by the provisions of section 49E sub-section (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act as amended by Act II B. C. of 1918 under which such a tenant is empowered only to make a complete usufructuary mortgage of his land, and the permission of the Collector under section 49F of the Act cannot enlarge the power of the aboriginal to effect a mortgage of his holding in any other way than by a complete usufructuary mortgage.

Appeal against an order of the District Judge, Bankura, dated the 2nd of April 1921, reversing that of the Munsif, Khatra, dated the 20th of December 1920.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Narendra Coomar Bose, for the Appellants.—The restriction imposed by section 49E sub-section (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Amendment Act, II of 1918, is applicable only when the mortgage is by an aboriginal to another aboriginal. But when the aboriginal is unable to effect a mortgage to another aboriginal, then the Collector can permit him to execute a mortgage to a non-aboriginal. In the latter case the permission need not be limited to one kind of mortgage, namely, a complete usufructuary mortgage. The Collector can permit him to execute any kind of mortgage, and a simple mortgage executed by an aboriginal in pursuance of the permission of the Collector is a perfectly valid mortgage.

Babu Bishindra Nath Sarkar, for the Respondent.—The permission of the Collector as contemplated by section 49 F, sub-section (1) (a) of the Act, can enlarge the power of the aboriginal only with regard to his choice of the mortgage. Under section 49E (2) of the Act the aboriginal is empowered only to make a complete usufructuary mortgage of his holding. The permission of the Collector cannot remove this restriction with regard to the kind of mortgage that can be executed by an aboriginal.

Babu Narendra Coomar Bose, replied.

JUDGMENT.—In this case, the sole question is, whether the adjustment of a decree by way of a simple mortgage made by an aboriginal of his holding is valid having regard to the provisions of section 49 E, sub-section (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. It appears that the mortgage was made to a non-aboriginal with the consent of the Collector as provided by section 49F sub section (1) (a) of that Act. The learned District Judge has held that, under the provisions of section 49F, the Collector could only grant permission to an aboriginal to effect a transfer of his holding to a non-aboriginal if the aboriginal is unable to mortgage his land to another aboriginal as provided in section 49E, sub section (1) of the Act. The learned District Judge has, however, held that the power of an aboriginal to effect a mortgage of his land is restricted by the provisions of section 49E, sub-section (2) of the Act under which such a tenant is empowered only to make a complete usufructuary mortgage of his land and the permission of the Collector cannot enlarge the power of an aboriginal to effect a mortgage of his holding in any other way than by a complete usufructuary mortgage. We think the learned District Judge is right in his interpretation of the provisions of the sections of the Bengal Tenancy Act referred to above. The appeal, therefore, fails and must be dismissed with costs. We assess the hearing fee at one gold mohur

Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889), s. 1 (4)—Will not governed by Succession Act or Hindu Wills Act—Succession Certificate, grant of, to executor—Jurisdiction—Sub-Judge, Second Class, invested with powers of District Court—Jurisdiction to entertain application for collection of debts exceeding Rs. 5,000.

Section 1 (4) of the Succession Certificate Act does not preclude the executor of a Will, to which neither the Succession Act nor the Hindu Wills Act applies, from obtaining a certificate under the Succession Certificate Act, authorising him to collect debts due to the deceased. The mere fact that the executor might have applied for Probate of the Will is not an adequate ground for refusing to entertain his application for a Succession Certificate [p. 304, col. 2; p. 305, col. 1.]

Where a Sub-Judge of the Second Class is invested with the functions of a District Court under the Succession Certificate Act, and no restriction is placed on the limits of his jurisdiction he is competent to entertain and adjudicate upon an application for a Succession Certificate involving debts the amount of which exceeds Rs. 5,000. [p. 305, col. 1.]

Petition, under section 44 of Act VI of 1918, for revision of an order of the District Judge, Delhi, dated the 4th August 1919, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Delhi, dated the 25th February 1919.

Lala Durga Das, for the Petitioners.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. S., for Raj Singh and Lala Kishen Dayal, for Musammat Ram Kaur, Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The learned District Judge dissenting from the Subordinate Judge has found that the Will propounded by the respondent, Raj Singh, was duly executed by the deceased Nanu Singh, and that the latter had a disposing mind. Upon the strength of that Will the respondent is undoubtedly entitled to collect the debts due to the deceased, and the learned Judge has accordingly granted him a Succession Certificate in respect of these debts.

Mr. Durga Das for the petitioners contends that the Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to entertain the application for Succession Certificate, and bases his contention upon two grounds:

(1) That the respondent should have asked for a Probate of the Will, and could not make an application for a Succession Certificate; and (2) that as the debts exceeded Rs. 5,000 the Subordinate Judge, who was only a Subordinate Judge of the Second Class and could not entertain a suit the value of which exceeded Rs. 5,000, was not competent to adjudicate upon an application for a Succession Certificate in respect of debts exceeding in amount the limit of his pecuniary jurisdiction.

In connection with the first objection, my attention is invited to section 1 (4) of the Succession Certificate Act, VII of 1889, which enacts that a certificate shall not be granted with respect to any debt or security to which a right can be established by Probate or Letters of Administration under the Indian Succession Act, 1865, or by Probate of a Will to which Hindu Wills Act, 1870, applies, or by Letters of Administration with a copy of such a Will annexed. Now, it is admitted that neither the Indian Succession Act nor the Hindu Wills Act applies to the Will in question and I have not the least doubt that the words "Such a Will" in the concluding clause of the aforesaid sub-section refer to a Will to which either the Indian Succession Act or the Hindu Wills Act applies. If any authority on the subject were needed, I would cite the judgment of the Bombay High Court in Dave Liladhar Kashiram v. Bai Parvati (1) and the judgment of the Allahabad

(1) 18 B. 608; 9 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 914.

High Court in Jamna Kuar v. Daulat Rai (2). It is, therefore, clear that section 1 (4) of the Succession Certificate Act did not preclude respondent from obtaining a certificate under the Act, and the mere fact that he might have applied for a Probate is not an adequate ground for refusing to entertain his application for a Succession Certificate, vide Kalidas Fakirchand v. Baihamali (3).

As regards the objection based upon the fact that the Subordinate Judge's pecuniary jurisdiction in respect of suits was limited to suits of the value of Rs. 5,000 or less, it is sufficient to say that section 26 of the Succession Certificate Act empowers the Local Government to invest any Court inferior in grade to a District Court with the functions of a District Court under the Act, and that where an inferior Court has been so invested, it has concurrent jurisdiction with the District Court in the exercise of all the powers conferred by the Act upon the District Court. Now, it is admitted that the Local Government has by a Notification in the Official Gazette invested the Subordinate Judge of the Second Class with the functions of a District Court under the Act, and there is nothing either in the Notification or in the Act which limits the jurisdiction of the Subordinate Judge to the hearing of applications involving debts the total amount of which does not exceed Rs. 5,000 Accordingly I am of opinion that the Subordinate Judge was entitled to entertain and adjudicate upon the application made by the respondent, and his proceedings cannot, therefore, be regarded as coram non judice.

The judgment of the learned District Judge shows that he has, upon a survey of all the facts and circumstances of the case, come to the conclusion that the Will was duly executed by the deceased; and there can be no doubt that the respondent being the sole executor is entitled to collect the debts. It was unnecessary for the Court to go into the question of the validity of the Will, because the proceedings under the Succession Certificate Act are of a summary nature, and the only thing which the Court was required to decide in summary manner was whether the respondent had a prima facie right to collect the debts, vide section 7 of the Succession Certificate Act. It is to be observed that the decision of the Court under the Act upon a question of right does not bar the trial of the same question in any suit or in any other proceeding between the same parties.

For the aforesaid reasons I am not prepared to hold that any valid ground for my interference on revision has been made out. Accordingly I dismiss the application with costs.

Rule against an order of the Munsif, First Court, Krishnagor, exercising the powers of a Court of Small Cause, in Small Cause Court Suit No. 534-665 of 1921.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Sarat Kumar Chatterjee, for the Petitioners.—The defendant is the petitioner. The suit was brought in the Small Causes Court for recovery of money due on a bond. The defence was that no consideration passed. And also there was no evidence on the record to that effect either. The bond was not registered. The learned Judge has in spite of these facts decreed the suit. My submission is that the learned Judge has erred in decreeing the suit without having any evidence in support, on mere suspicion only.

Babu Hari Charan Banerjee, for the Opposite Party, was not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioners were the defendants in a suit for money brought on a bond. The suit was decreed. This Rule was granted on the ground that there was no evidence whatever before the Court with regard to the passing of the consideration in respect of which the bond is alleged to have been given.

From the record of the substance of the evidence it is true that no witness is shown to have stated that the consideration of the bond was paid. But the issue having been tried under the Small Cause Court Procedure it does not follow that because no such statement was recorded no such statement was made. Further, the defendants denied execution of the bond at all. The lower Court has found that defence to be false and having found that the defendants executed the bond and as bond contains a recital that the money was paid, no error in law would be committed if from those facts the lower Court concluded, as it has done, that the consideration was paid.

We see no sufficient ground for disturbing the decision of the Small Cause Court Judge and accordingly discharge this Rule with costs. Hearing fee one gold mohur.

Miscellaneous second appeal from an order of the District Judge, Shahpur at Sargodha, dated the 13th August 1919, reversing that of the Munsif, First Class, Sargodha, dated the 5th June 1919.

Lala Durga Das, for the Appellant.

Mr. Nanak Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—A plaint was presented to a Munsif at Sargodha in the Shahpur District. The Munsif, acting under O. VII, r. 10, Civil Procedure Code, and holding that he had no jurisdiction to deal with the case, returned the plaint for presentation to a proper Court. The plaintiffs thereupon preferred an appeal to the District Judge, Shahpur, who held that the Munsif had jurisdiction and accepting the appeal, set aside the order of the learned Munsif declining jurisdiction and remanded the suit for decision on the merits at the same time, directing the stamp on appeal to be refunded. The defendants have come up to this Court in second appeal through Mr. Durga Das and the plaintiffs have been represented by Mr. Nanak Chand.

Mr. Nanak Chand has raised a preliminary objection to the effect that no second appeal lies to this Court. His contention briefly is that, inasmuch as the plaint was returned under O. VII, r. 10, Civil Procedure Code, O. XLIII, r. 1 (a) allowed an appeal against that order and that the order of the Appellate Court on the appeal was rendered final by section 104 (2). In support of his contention he referred me to Naubat Singh v. Baldeo Singh (1) and Ohhubu Mian v. Har Charn Das (2), both of which cases are on all fours, as near as may be, with the present one and both support the learned Counsel. On the other hand, Mr. Durga Das contended that he was appealing not against the order passed by the learned District Judge on the appeal under O. XLIII, r. 1 (a) but under O. XLIII, r. 1 (u), Civil Procedure Code, and that the lower Appellate Court had no power to remand the case. After giving due weight to his contentions I am unable to accede to them. Indeed, this very point was taken in the Allahabad case referred to above, and it was there held that clause (u) of r. 1, O. XLIII, only contemplated an appeal from an order of remand under r. 23 of O. XLI. In this view I agree. R. 23 of O. XLI deals with an appeal from a decree passed in a suit which has been disposed of upon a preliminary point. In the present case the appeal to the learned District Judge was not from a decree but from an order and, therefore, the Court could not have acted under r. 23 of O. XLI. Mr. Durga Das contended, therefore, that all that the District Judge could do was to accept the appeal and set aside the order but that he could not remand the case. Here again I am unable to agree. According to section 107, Civil Procedure Code, an Appellate Court has power to remand a case subject to such conditions and limitations as may be prescribed. This power of remand has not been restricted by any provision of the Code that has been brought to my notice. In any event, the Court has an inherent power to see that its orders legally passed are carried out. Admittedly the learned District Judge had the power to set aside the order of the learned Munsif and it follows that it had power to enforce the natural result, viz., that the case should be proceeded with. Following Naubat Singh v. Baldeo Singh (1) and Ohhubu Mian v. Har Charn Das (2) I hold that the order of the learned District Judge was final and that no appeal lies. Further, I am not prepared to treat this as a revision.

Accordingly, I dismiss this appeal but in the circumstances leave the parties to bear their own costs in this Court.

Execution sale—Knocking down of property and acceptance of deposit by Nazir, whether make sale final—Discretion of Court to accept or reject bid—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908*), Sch. I, App. E Form* 29.

An execution sale is not concluded when a property is knocked down to a bidder and the necessary deposit of 25 per cent made by him and accepted by the Nazir. Having regard to the provisions of the third condition of sale set out in Form No 29 Appendix E, of the First Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code, the Court has a discretion in the matter of accepting or rejecting the bid and the Court's order directing a re-sale of a property after it has been knocked down and the deposit accepted by the Nazir, is not without jurisdiction [p. 306, cols. 1 & 2]

Rakhal Chandra Dutt v. Sitanath Roy, Civil Revision Case No. 241 of 1921, followed.

Rule against an order of the Munsif, Third Court, Sadharam, in Execution Case No. 123 of 1921.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Santosh Kumar Bose, for the Petitioner.—The question is whether after a sale having been made on proper bids, a subsequent bid can be entertaind and a re-sale be held. On appeal the District Judge has held that no appeal lay to him in this matter. The judgment-debtor has applied for setting aside sale on the ground of inadequacy of price. That matter is still pending. That application is against the last sale. I submit all these proceedings would be ultra vires. Refers to O. XXI, rr. 65, 69, 84, Civil Procedure Code. I made a deposit of the money and when I came to deposit the balance I learnt that another sale took place behind my back. I submit the Court cannot do that. The acceptance by the Nazir of my bid is final.

Babu Jitendra Kumar Sen Gupta, for the Opposite Party.—The Court has a quasi-revisional jurisdiction to accept or reject a bid. It is not true that the acceptance of a bid by the Nazir is final. Refers to Form 29, Appendix E, Schedule I, Civil Procedure Code; Rajendra Prasad Jha v. Upendra Nath Jha (1). Here the bid was accepted by the Nazir. I am not the decree-holder. I am the mortgagor in possession. Refers to a decision of Cuming, J., in Rakhal Chandra Dutt v. Sitanath Roy, Civil Revision No 241 of 1921, decided on 23rd November 1921, Kenaram v. Kailash Chandra (2). I submit if the Court thinks that the bid is inadequate he may not accept it. He has a jurisdiction to do so.

Babu Santosh Kumar Bose, in reply.—The fact that my bid was accepted by the Court is borne out by the acceptance of the deposit and the issue of chalan.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner in this case made a bid for Rs. 450 for a certain property which was being sold by the Court in execution of a decree. The actual sale was held by the Nazir who accepted this bid and the petitioner at once made the necessary deposit of 25 per cent. However, soon after the property had been knocked down the opposite party No. 10, Emadadulla, applied to the Munsif for a re sale of the property offering a bid of Rs. 700. On this the Munsif ordered a re sale of the property which was knocked down to Emdadulla for this sum. For the petitioner it is said that the knocking down of the property by the Nazir and the acceptance of the deposit made the sale final and the Munsif had no jurisdiction to put the property up again. A similar point came up for decision in the case of Rakhal Chandra Dutt v. Sitanath Roy, Civil Revision Case No. 241 of 1921. It was there decided that a sale was not concluded when a property was knocked down and the deposit made. Having regard to the provisions of the third condition of sale set out in Form No. 29, Appendix E, of the First Schedule of the Civil Procedure Code, I think the Court had discretion in the matter, and the order directing a re-sale of the property was not made without jurisdiction. Taking this view of the matter this Rule must be discharged with costs. Hearing fee one gold mohur.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 10 (2)—Security for respondent's costs—Failure to furnish security within time allowed, effect of—Appellant's whereabouts unknown, whether sufficient reason for extending time.

Where an appellant fails to furnish security for the costs of the respondent within the time allowed, his appeal is liable to be dismissed [p. 307, col. 1]

The fact that the delay in furnishing security is due to the whereabouts of the appellant being unknown, is not a sufficient reason for not following O. XLI, r. 10 (2), of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 307, col. 1.]

First appeal from a decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Jhelum, dated the 8th February 1916.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sheo Narain, R. B., for the Appellant.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

MARTINEAU, J.—On the 10th December last an order was passed by this Court requiring the appellant to furnish security for the costs of the appeal and of the Trial Court within one month. The order was communicated to the appellant's Counsel, Mr. Sheo Narain, who was in fact present when it was passed, but no security was furnished till the 9th February, when the security bond of one Khan Malik was filed in the Subordinate Judge's Court.

It is contended on behalf of the respondents that as the security was not furnished in the time fixed by this Court the appeal should be rejected. We think that this contention must prevail and it is unnecessary to consider the further objection raised on behalf of the respondents as to the surety not being a man of means.

Mr. Sheo Narain says that the reason why the security could not be furnished within the period of one month fixed by this Court was that the whereabouts of his client were not known, as his client is a fakir and was wandering about. We cannot accept this as a sufficient reason for not following O. XLI, r. 10 (2), Civil Procedure Code, which is imperative and lays down that where the security is not furnished within such time as the Court orders the Court shall reject the appeal.

We accordingly reject the appeal, but we leave the parties to bear their own costs

CHEVIS, ACTG C. J.—I think it is the duty of every litigant to keep in touch with his case, and not to go wandering around the country at large without giving any address where a communication from the Court or from his Counsel can readily find him.

Hindu Law—Joint family property—Legal necessity—Improvident transaction Presumption—Jurisdiction—Relief for possession not claimed in plaint—Appellate Court, if can decree formal possession.

Where a father, as manager of a joint Hindu family, enters into an agreement to sell the family immoveable property in his hands, the mere facts that he repents of the agreement and that his sons apply to contest the suit brought with the object of enforcing the agreement, raise a presumption that the agreement is an improvident one. [p. 311, col. 1.]

The mere existence of an antecedent secured debt cannot of itself justify the father in alienating practically the whole of the immoveable property belonging to himself and his sons if the debt can be discharged by alienating only a part of the property. [p. 311, col. 1.]

An alienation of joint family property effected by the concerted action of the adult members of the family, raises a presumption in favour of the alienation having been made for real family necessity. [p. 311, col. 2.]

Where the father enters into an improvident transaction to rid himself of his immediate embarrasments without due regard to the necessities of the case and the interests of the minor members of the undivided family, the vendee must be held to have taken the risk involved therein [p. 314, col. 1.]

Per Piggott, J.—In a suit to avoid alienation in which no relief for possession is asked, a formal decree directing the plaintiff to be restored to possession, whether conditional or otherwise, cannot and ought not to be passed. [p. 313, col. 1.]

Per Walsh, J.—When an Appellate Court is seized of the whole matter, it should not hesitate to pass such orders as are necessary to terminate the controversy and to do justice between the parties. Consequently in a suit by sons to avoid alienation made by the father, although no relief as to possession may be claimed, it is not incompetent for the High Court on appeal to decree possession to them. JUDGMENT.

PIGGOTT, J.—In this case, Govind Das and five others, being 6 out of the 7 sons of Gopal Das, sued to avoid an alienation of joint family property made by their father, Gopal Das. The defendants were the vendees under a sale-deed of the 1st of November 1917 together with Gopal Das himself and another son of his by name Debi Das who had refused to join in the suit. Three of the plaintiffs were minors on the date of the institution of the suit. The plain issue in the case was, of course, the question of legal necessity for the sales but it arisas in a peculiar form and complicated by the result of a previous litigation. The sale deed above referred to was not voluntarily executed by Gopal Das. It was imposed upon him by a decree of Court in a suit for specific performance of an agreement dated 3rd September, 1912. The position, therefore, is that Gopal Das, as the father and manager of a joint undivided Hindu family, entered into an agreement to sell joint family property in his hands (it may be noted further that the agreement covered the whole, or practically the whole, of the immoveable property belonging to the family) and repented of this agreement, but was compelled to execute the deed of transfer by decree of Court. This decree was obtained in a suit which came up to this Court as First Appeal No. 177 of 1917, decided on the 6th of March 1919. The suit as brought was a peculiar one. The plaintiffs not merely claimed specific performance of the agreement of September the 3rd 1912, but they joined with this claim one for consequential relief by delivery of actual possesston over the property in respect of which a conveyance was to be executed by decree of Court. There has been some argument before us as to whether such a suit would be maintainable at all, but I do not propose to discuss this question as it has no real bearing on the result of the present appeal. The point which requires to be noticed is the consequences which followed from the frame of that suit, especially in the execution department. The Trial Court very properly, in my opinion, held that, whether a suit so framed were maintainable or not, it certainly could not be effectively tried without making the sons of Gopal Das parties as defendants. The then plaintiffs were offered an opportunity of impleading the sons of Gopal Das and deliberately declined to avail themselves of the same. It has been pointed out that the reason for their action probably was that the suit, regarded purely as one for specific performance, would have been barred by limitation as against the sons of Gopal Das before the Court's order, which virtually directed them to be impleaded, could be complied with. However, the Court eventually determined to proceed with the trial of the suit as against Gopal Das alone. This procedure was virtually sanctioned and endorsed by a Bench of this Court before which the matter came in appeal but an examination of the record shows beyond doubt that this was only done upon the understanding that the suit was limited to the question whether Gopal Das should or should not be compelled to execute a formal conveyance in accordance with the agreement of September the 3rd 1912. No doubt, issues had been framed by the Trial Court covering the whole matter in controversy, but, from the moment that the plaintiffs declined to implead the sons of Gopal Das, the only questions which remained for determination were whether Gopal Das had, in fact, entered into the alleged agreement and whether he should, in that suit, be compelled to execute a formal conveyance in accordance with the agreement without prejudice to any right which his sons might have of challenging either the conveyance or agreement out of which it arose. The view taken by the Trial Court is sufficiently expressed in the decree actually framed, which was a mere declaration that the plaintiffs were entitled to specific performance of the contract to sell. The appeal preferred against this decree was filed in this Court on the 14th of May 1917. In the meantime, however, the plaintiffs had gone to the Trial Court with an application for amendment of the decree. This application, unfortunately, came before the successor of the Subordinate Judge who had delivered the judgment in the suit and signed the decree as originally framed. His successor was apparently impressed with the fact that the decree, as framed, did not carry out the operative portion of the judgment, according to which the suit (as brought) was decreed. He accordingly amended the decree under an order of the 12th of May 1917 by the addition of words which allowed the plaintiff's claim for delivery of possession over the property specified at the foot of the plaint. The appeal to this Court was filed in apparent ignorance of this amendment two days after the amendment had been made,

It was, in fact, filed upon a copy of the decree as unamended and was dealt with by this Court upon that basis. The learned Judges who decided the appeal were clearly of opinion that they were determining nothing which could, in any way, affect or prejudice the rights of the sons of Gopal Das. They came to the conclusion that, under the circumstances, the decree which they had before them, that is to say, the decree directing specific performance of the contract of the 3rd September 1912, had rightly been passed as against Gopal Das. They expressly reserved the right of the sons of Gopal Das to challenge the effect of this alienation upon their interests. The latter had already done so by means of the present suit, instituted on the 6th of September, 1915. The fact that one of the sons declined to join in the suit is of no legal importance. So far as we can gather from the record, the truth seems to be that Gopal Das had, while the dispute between him and his transferees was pending, granted a lease of a substantial portion of the property covered by the agreement of the 3rd of September 1912 on favourable terms to his son, Debi Das. The transferees have virtually bought off Debi Das by agreeing not to contest this lease.

The plaint, in the present suit, was amended after the decree of the Trial Court in the suit for specific performance had been passed, but, in the meantime, and, thereafter, proceedings in execution of that decree continued. A formal sale-deed was executed under orders of the Court on the 1st of November 1917. One of the points in issue had been the price for which the property was to be conveyed. This was fixed by the Trial Court at Rs. 22,503-10-10 and this finding was affirmed on appeal. The decree did not, however, direct that the whole of this money should be paid over to Gopal Das. On the contrary, there was a direction that the vendees, upon execution of the conveyance, were permitted to retain in their own hands so much money as might suffice to pay off a mortgage on the property in suit, dated the 10th of July, 1909, executed by Gopal Das and those of his sons who had, on that date, attained majority, in favour of one Manik Chand. The vendees waited until the 4th of September 1919 when they deposited in Court the amount of money sufficient to pay off this mortgage. We have been informed in argument that they were subsequently compelled to increase the amount of their deposit, that the total sum deposited by them amounted eventually to more than Rs 23,700 and that they have actually paid off Manik Chand. In saying this, we are, to some extent, travelling beyond the record before us, but what we do know is that the vendees did proceed to take out execution of their decree as amended and obtained from the Execution Court, on the 24th of January 1918 formal delivery of possession over all the property covered by the decree. It seems to me very much open to question whether, under the circumstances, the sons of Gopal Das would not have been well advised in treating that delivery of possession as one which could not affect their rights in any way. As a matter of fact, they submitted to the process of the Court and accepted the position that they had been actually ejected, along with their father, on the 24th of January 1918. They elected to come before the Execution Court with a petition purporting to be under O. XXI, r. 100 of the Civil Procedure Code. That is to say, they represented themselves as persons other than the judgment-debtor who had been dispossessed of immoveable property by the holder of a decree for the possession of such property and they asked the Court to restore them to possession at least to the extent of the shares in the property in question which would have fallen to them on a partition between themselves and their father. This application had a very curious history. It was pending in the Execution Court when one of the decree-holders, by name Sital, died. The Court thereupon held that there existed no machinery under the Code of Civil Procedure by which the legal representatives of Sital could be brought upon the record, that the application under O. XXI, r. 100, could not be further proceeded with and it was accordingly rejected. We have before us, connected with the present appeal, an application in revision against that order of the Execution Court. I have gone into this matter in such detail because I think one of the points before us for consideration is whether the decree in the present suit can, or ought to be, framed in such a manner as to rectify the error which the Execution Court undoubtedly committed when it rejected the application under O. XXI, r. 100, on the grounds on which it did so reject it. It is obvious, moreover, that in any decree, which we may now pass on this appeal, we must take account of the fact that the vendees under the sale-deed of November the 1st 1917, had rightly or wrongly, (and as I think wrongly) been placed in actual possession of the disputed property under their decree as amended.

In the light of the facts already stated, it is now necessary to come back to the one essential question in issue in this appeal, namely, whether there was legal necessity either for the sale-deed of November the 1st 1917, or for the agreement of September the 3rd, 1912, so as to make either or both of these transactions binding upon the sons of Gopal Das.

Before, however, I can consider this question in its simplicity, it seems necessary to refer to one other point about which there has been considerable controversy. The agreement of September the 3rd 1912 was of a peculiar nature in that it did not provide for the sale of the property concerned at a fixed and ascertained price, but at a price to be ascertained thereafter with reference to the profits of the property concerned. I have already stated that this price was eventually fixed at Rs. 22,508-10-10. The appellants before us have contended that one of the questions left open to them in the present suit was to claim a fresh finding upon this matter of price and there has been a good deal of argument before us on the point. When the question was dealt with by the Bench of this Court in First Appeal No. 177 of 1917, the learned Judge held that the price must be fixed with reference to the profits as they stood on the date of the agreement for sale. They brushed aside, on this ground, the contention of the sons of Gopal Das that there had been a substantial increase in the value of the property since the date of the contract. On a review of the evidence adduced in the present suit, I do not think it can be said that the plaintiffs, the sons of Gopal Das, have made out any case against the finding arrived at in the former suit which fixed the price payable under the agreement of September the 3rd 1912 calculated upon the profits as they then stood, at the sum already mentioned. A more difficult question is whether there has, in fact, been substantial increase in the profits since that date, and whether any account can be taken of this increase in the present suit. The Court below has come to the conclusion that the increase, apparent upon an inspection of the village papers, is purely fictitious, created by means of dishonest machinations on the part of Gopal Das, or of his son, Gobind Das, for the purpose of the present litigation. The question really turns on the value to be attached to the evidence given by the Patwari Bahadur Lal. This remarkable witness had made a deposition in one sense on the 8th of December 1916 in the former litigation, and he made a deposition in a very different sense in the present suit on the 17th of February 1919. The learned Subordinate Judge says that the man is a shameless liar and that no reliance can be placed either upon his evidence or upon the papers prepared by him. I entirely agree that Bahadur Lal is an untrustworthy witness, but it does not follow that he was speaking the truth in 1919 and swearing falsely in 1916. Where he has chosen to contradict himself, I am disposed to believe the evidence of his own papers against himself. According to those papers, the rent roll of the principal village in suit had arisen between 1318 (or 1320) Fasli from Rs. 1,324 to Rs. 1,646 in 1323 Fasli. On the whole and after arguments making due allowance for the arguments to the contrary set forth in the judgment under appeal, I think there had been a real increase in the annual income of the property in suit between the date of the agreement for sale and that of the conveyance executed on the 1st of November 1917. The precise extent of that increase is difficult to estimate and I do not think a precise estimate is necessary for the determination of this appeal. The price fixed according to the agreement of September the 3rd 1912 works out at a little over 22 years' purchase on the net annual profits. I should be prepared to hold on the evidence that the increase in the annual profits after the date of the agreement amounted to approximately that shown in the Patwari's papers, that is to say, to about Rs. 322 annually. This would mean an increase of something over Rs. 7,000 in the sale price, according to the terms of the agreement.

This consideration, however, does not seem to me to affect the result of the present appeal, except in so far as it has a bearing on the question of the binding effect upon the sons of Gopal Das, of a sale-deed executed by their father under compulsion in pursuance of an improvident agreement of which he had himself repented. The mere facts that he himself repented of it, and that his sons begged to be allowed to contest the suit brought with the object of enforcing it, serve in my opinion, to raise a considerable presumption that the agreement was an improvident one. The main object of the transaction was to pay off a mortgage-deed in favour of Manik Chand, a document the terms of which I shall have to consider further. For the present, it is sufficient to say that a sum of something less than Rs. 14, 00 would have been sufficient to pay off Manik Chand in the month of September 1912 and that the existence of the antecedent debt cannot of itself be regarded as justifying Gopal Das, the father and manager of joint undivided Hindu family, in parting with practically the whole of the immoveable property belonging to himself and his sons for a sum of Rs. 22,500 and odd. In the Court below, a great deal was said about other purposes for which the family may possibly have required money in the month of September 1912. One suggestion is that, according to the evidence of the plaintiff, Govind Das himself, the family was living beyond its means or, at any rate, was spending more than the income derivable from its immoveable property, so that presumably, money was required to meet the mere ordinary expenses of the family. I do not think this point is at all made out but, even if it were, an obvious rejoinder would be that, under the circumstances, the first duty of the family, and of the father as manager of the family, would be to see whether the difficulty could not be met by some curtailment of expenditure. It was suggested further that Gopal Das required money for the purposes of a joint family business. If he did, he certainly never got any. In the events which have occurred, the consideration which has actually passed to Gopal Das and his family has been the extinguishing of the mortgage in favour of Manik Chand, assuming, of course, that this mortgage has been extinguished, and that the transactions which have taken place have not merely operated to transfer the mortgagee right from Manik Chand to the defendants respondents. The only other payments made to Gopal Das have been a sum of Rs. 500 paid as earnest money and a small payment of Rs. 189-12-6 eventually made by the vendees in the course of their proceedings in execution of their decree. With regard to these small sums, there seems to me literally no evidence that the money was taken by Gopal Das for any purpose which would be binding on his sons, or that his sons have benefited by the money.

The question of legal necessity, therefore, resolves itself into a consideration of the terms of the mortgage in favour of Manik Chand, the consideration for that alienation of joint family property and the benefit derived by the sons, on the assumption that this mortgage will be finally extinguished as a result of the transactions culminating in and including the final decree to be passed in the present suit. Here the respondents are, up to a certain point, in a strong position. The mortgage in favour of Manik Chand was executed on the 10th of July 1919 not only by Gopal Das himself but by four of his sons, the plaintiffs, Govind Das, Bhagwan Das and Kishun Das and the defendant Debi Das. We have, therefore, an alienation of joint family property effected by the concerted action of all those members of the joint family who had attained majority at the time. There is a very considerable presumption in favour of such an alienation having been made for real family necessity. The terms of the document itself specially when read in connection with the evidence given by the plaintiff, Govind Das, in the present suit, tend strongly in the same direction. I think we are bound to hold that, as regards the principal money at any rate, amounting to Rs. 10,500 due to or obtained from Manik Chand under this mortgage, there was legal necessity sufficient to make the transaction binding, not only upon the executants, but upon those sons of Gopal Das who were minors at that time and have not yet attained majority. The only question which can be seriously argued is whether there was legal necessity for raising money at the rate of interest specified in the deed. That rate was $8\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. per annum, compoundable with six monthly rests; but there was a penalty clause under which the rate could be increased to 9 per cent. per annum, similarly compoundable in the event of default in the regular payment of interest. Manik Chand's security was excellent, for there can be no doubt that, at the time of the mortgage, the value of the property involved was at least double the sum secured by the mortgage. As regards the stipulated rates of interest, therefore, the transaction looks, upon the face of it, an improvident one. I very much doubt whether the penalty clause by which the rate of interest could be raised to 9 per cent. would, in any event, be enforced by the Courts. The concurrence of the adult sons of Gopal Das in the transaction is, no doubt, an important consideration, but, as regards this particular question of the rate of interest, it is a good deal discounted by the fact that their ages in the year 1909 varied from 25 to (sic) years. The transaction must, in the main, have been arranged by Gopal Das, and the concurrence of these youngmen being obtained in order to strengthen the position of the mortgagee. We have to consider the rights of the minor plaintiffs, and, looking at the matter from their point of view, it seems to me that it is clearly open to the Court to consider this question, whether, admitting that there was legal necessity for raising a loan of Rs. 10,500, it was really necessary for Gopal Das and his adult sons to have borrowed the money on such onerous terms as to interest. If this were a suit by which Manik Chand was seeking to enforce the terms of the mortgage as against Gopal Das and all his sons, I am confident that it would be the duty of the Court to re consider this question of interest. The proper finding in such a suit would, in my opinion, be that the minor sons were bound to the extent of the principal of the loan and the rate of interest of $8\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. per annum, which is not a particularly unreasonable rate under the circumstances if it be treated as simple interest. I am clearly of opinion that the minor sons shall not be bound by the penalty clause in the deed, and I do not think that they ought to be bound by the clause providing that the interest, even at its original rate, should be compoundable with six monthly rests. I do not see why the issue in the present suit should be dealt with on any different basis than would have been the case if this were a suit by Manik Chand to enforce his mortgage. My finding, therefore, is that legal necessity for the alienation in suit is proved to the extent of the principal sum of Rs. 10,500 with simple interest at the rate of $8\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. per annum.

The next question is how long should this interest continue to run and, in my opinion, this admits of a very clear and positive answer. On the 1st of November 1917 when the respondents obtained the formal conveyance of the property in suit under the orders of the Court, they became liable then and there to pay off Manik Chand. They had no right in equity to continue to allow Manik Chand's mortgage to run and to pile up compound interest, or any interest at all, against the property in suit. I hold, therefore, that this interest at $8\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. per annum, should run from the date of Manik Chand's mortgage, the 10th of July 1901, to the 1st of November 1917 and no further.

There remains only the question of the form of decree to be drawn up to give effect to these findings. If the respondents had never obtained possession of the mortgaged property, the position would be simple. A declaration would require to be drawn up to the effect that the plaintiffs are bound by the alienation sought to be impugned in this suit to the extent of a consideration of Rs. 10,500 plus interest at an ascertained rate and for the period specified. The question is complicated by the fact that the respondents are in possession of the mortgaged property and, by the further question whether this possession can be interferred with, either by any decree passed in the present suit, or by any orders passed on the petition of revision which is also before us. I am satisfied that, on the frame of the present suit, in which no relief for possession has ever been asked, a formal decree directing the plaintiffs to be restored to possession, whether conditional or otherwise, cannot and ought not to be passed. I am also of opinion that we ought not, under the circumstances, to interfere in revision with the proceedings taken by the Execution Court. What the equities of the case really demand is that the respondents, the vendee under the sale-deed of November the 1st 1919, should continue to enjoy the possession which they have obtained (no matter how), until they have been paid off the sum now ascertained to be equitably due to them from the plaintiffs, either out of the usufruct of the property, or by payment of the ascertained sum into Court, or by combination of the two methods. They are, undoubtedly, liable to account to the plaintiffs for the annual profits of the property in suit from the date on which they obtained possession in execution of their decree which date appears, from the record of the execution case, to be the 20th of January 1918 and, as there is no interest running in their favour, after the 1st of November 1917, the whole of the net profits enjoyed by them must be applied in reduction of the debt found to be equitably due in favour of the plaintiffs, I think it is clearly impossible for us, on the materials on the record, to ascertain what profits the respondents have been enjoying from the month of January 1918 onwards, still less what profits they may enjoy hereafter before the plaintiffs can make good the balance of the sum equitably due from them. It is even possible that the plaintiffs may elect to allow the respondents to continue in possession until the whole of the ascertained liability is paid out of the usufruct. The object in view would, in my opinion, be effected by granting the plaintiffs a declaratory decree in the following terms:—That the plaintiffs are not bound by the agreement entered into by Gopal Das on the 3rd of September 1912 or by the sale-deed of November, the 1st 1917, executed in pursuance of that agreement under the orders of the Court or by any of the proceedings in Suit No. 85 of 1915 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Jaunpur between Sital and Ram Charan plaintiffs and Gopal Das defendant, terminating in the decree of this Court in First Appeal No. 177 of 1917, except in so far that the plaintiffs are liable to make good to the respondent Ram Charan and the legal representatives of the deceased respondents Sital, a sum of Rs. 10,500 with simple interest at 8¼ per cent. per annum calculated from the 10th of July 1909 to the 1st of November 1917 but no further. That the said Ram Charan and the legal representatives of Sital are liable to account to the plaintiffs for the net profits of the property in suit from the 24th of January, 1918, or such other date as they obtained possession over that property in execution of the decree passed in Suit No. 85 of 1916, and that the plaintiffs appellants are entitled to recover possession of the said property on any date on which the sum declared to be due from them has been satisfied either out of the usufruct of the property, or by deposit in Court for the benefit of the above-mentioned respondents of the entire balance due to them after deducting the profits enjoyed by them up to the date. I think the plaintiffs should be regarded as having succeeded in this suit roughly to the extent of the difference between the sum of Rs. 22,500 for which specific performance of the contract of sale was ordered, and the sum of about Rs. 17,500 which will be due from them on account of principal and interest on Manik Chand's mortgage under the terms of the decree proposed. For purposes of calculating costs, it is not necessary to work out these figures with greater accuracy; the plaintiffs may be regarded as having succeeded in the proportion of Rs. 5,000 (success) to Rs. 17,500 (failure), and the parties should be directed to pay and receive costs in both Courts in proportion to failure and success, costs in this Court to include fees on the higher scale. I would, therefore, setting aside the decree of the Court below, grant the plaintiffs a decree for a declaration in the terms set forth above with the above order as to costs.

WALSH, J.—I agree. To the extent to which legal necessity can be established for the original mortgage of 1909, which was indeed disputed in so far as the principal is concerned, and for the debt arising therefrom, the plaintiffs who are entitled to have this agreement for sale set aside, ought to do equity by discharging the debt. I regard it as unfortunate that this Court, when the matter was open for decision in the suit for specific performance, did not insist upon the sons being made parties, instead of affirming a barren decree which it seemed to recognize would be worthless, and thereby postponing the real controversy to a later date with the inevitable result of producing the present litigation in which the suit has only just been instituted, with all the complications which have necessarily ensued from the lapse of time and supervening events. As regards the rate and the compound nature of the interest, it is clear that, having regard to the nature of the security, no legal necessity existed for these. The father did what many men in difficulties do, namely, entered into an improvident transaction to rid himself of his immediate embarrassment, without due regard to the necessities of the case and the interests of the minor members of the family, and the purchaser must be held, on principle, to have taken such risk as was involved in the transaction into which he entered. I adhere to the view expressed in Padam Singh v. Bam Rup (1) to which decision I was a party, as to the effect of an improvident rate of interest in such a case. I do not see why when an Appellate Court is seised of the whole matter, as in this case, it should hold itself prevented from making such orders as are necessary to terminate the controversy and to do justice between the parties, and why it is not competent to us now to decree that possession to the sons of which they have wrongfully been deprived, subject to their doing equity by discharging the antecedent debt which alone could support the transaction It seems to me that much of the delay, complication and superabundance of litigation in India is due to the timidity of the Courts in not making final orders which will have the effect of putting an end to the questions between the parties when they are seised of the whole matter, but I do not dissent from the order proposed.

Order accordingly.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 11, 13, 32 (2)—Documents containing recitals as to boundaries, admissibility of—Persons making them alive and testifying to them—Documents, admissibility of, whether affected.

Documents not inter partes containing recitals as to boundaries and throwing light on the question of the ownership of the property in suit, are not admissible under section 11 or section 13 of the Evidence Act, but are admissible under section 32 (2) of that Act. The mere fact that the persons concerned in the transactions are alive and actually testify to them, would not render such documents inadmissible. [p. 315, col 2.]

JUDGMENT.—This suit relates to a house situated at Risod. The first plaintiff and the first defendant are real brothers and it is the plaintiffs' contention that the house is their ancestral property. The father died in 1906 and the brothers then separated, fields being divided but the house remaining joint. The plaintiffs now sue for partition and possession of their half share in the house.

The case proceeded ex parte against the first defendant, but the second defendant contested the suit, claiming the house as his own, defendant No. 1 being his tenant. The Trial Court found in defendant No. 2's favour and dismissed the suit. On appeal the suit has been decreed.

Only the first and second grounds in the memorandum of appeal to this Court have been argued. There is no force in the first ground. The document referred to therein is Exhibit A-4, and evidence was taken on this Exhibit in the Trial Court. I do not think, therefore, that there is anything in this objection.

The second ground of the memorandum relates to Exhibit A-4 and Exhibit P-I, the first being a mortgage and the second a sale-deed executed by and in favour of persons who are not parties to this suit. The house in suit is shown as a boundary in these documents and as belonging to the father of the first plaintiff and of the defendant No. 1. It is contended that, recitals of boundaries of lands in documents between third parties are not admissible in evidence. The decisions on this point are somewhat conflicting. It was held in Dwarka Nath v. Mukundu Lal Chowdhury (1) that documents, though not inter partes, containing recitals that a particular site belonged to a particular person were admissible in evidence, though such entries may not be conclusive or binding evidence and may be very weak evidence, or even of no weight at all. They were held admissible either under section 11 (b) or section 13 of the Evidence Act. A different view is, however, taken in another decision of the same High Court, namely, in Abdullah v. Kunja Beh ri Lal (2) which distinctly holds that such documents are not relevant either under section 11 or section 13 of the Evidence Act. In Abdullah v. Kunja Behari Lal (2) by the same Court reported at page 253 of 16 Calcutta Weekly Notes it is decided that recitals of boundaries in deeds of sales and mortgages executed by owners of adjoining plots of land and describing the disputed land as the tenanted land of the defendants or their predecessors were relevant under section 32 (3) of the Evidence Act, though not under section 32 (2) or 11, or 13 of that Act. In Daddapaneni Narayanappa, In re (3) a Single Judge held that a recital in a document dealing with neighbouring land that the land in question belonged to the plaintiff was not legal evidence. Nor was it admissible under section 32 (2) of the Evidence Act. And two Judges of the same High Court differed in Soripalli Venkatarayagopala Rau v. Fota Narasayya (4). In Abdul Ali v. Syed Rejan Ali (5) it was held that such recitals were inadmissible in evidence against a party who was a stranger to them and that the ruling as to the admissibility of the documents in Dwarka Nath v. Mukundu Lal Chowdhury (1) was obiter. In a recent case of Soroi Kumar Achari v. Umed Ali Howladar (6) it is decided that recitals of boundaries of other lands in documents between third parties are not admissible in evidence. Against this view it was held in Natwar v. Alkhu (7) that such document is admissible in evidence under section 32 (b) of the Evidence Act, and the same view was adopted in Imrit Chamar v. Sridhar Panday (8) in Ningawa v. Bharmappa (9) and in Haji Bibi v. Aga Khan (10). The weight of authority, therefore, seems to be that such documents containing recitals as to boundaries are not admissible under section 11 or section 13 of the Evidence Act, but are admissible under section 32, clause (2), of that Act. It is, however, contended that the two documents objected to in the present case cannot fall within the provisions of section 32 (2), because the persons connected with the two transactions are still alive and have in fact been examined as witnesses. This is so, but it stands to reason that, if the documents containing such recitals would be relevant evidence, if those persons were dead, or could not be found, or had become incapable of giving evidence, or their attendance could not be procured without an amount of delay or expense which, under the circumstances of the case, appears unreasonable, they are relevant if testified to by persons concerned in the transactions. They have, therefore, been rightly admitted in the present case.

It is clear that, as the documents have been rightly admitted in evidence, the finding of the lower Appellate Court based on these documents and oral testimony cannot be challenged in this Court, for there is nothing to vitiate the finding that the house was the joint property of the two brothers and that the plaintiffs are, therefore, entitled to the decree they seek.

Court-fee matter in an appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge, Shahabad.

Mr A. K. Roy, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.

MULLICK, J.—The plaintiffs allege that they held under the proprietor, defendants Nos. 4 to 18, a holding of 11 bighas, 3 kathas, which, by private partition, has been split up into three sets of parcels, Survey Plots Nos. 253 and 72 being allotted to defendant Nos. 4 to 14, Survey Plots Nos. 253 1136 and 263 to defendants Nos. 15 to 17, and plot No. 177 to defendant No. 18. The rent of plot No. 253 is shown in the Record of Rights as Rs. 4 2-0, whereas the plaintiffs state that it is Rs. 1-13-6, and plot No. 72 is shown as kabil-lagan, whereas the plaintiffs state that it is part and parcel of plot No. 253.

The plaintiffs also allege that the defendants have conspired together and got the name of defendant No. 1 entered as a raiyat of the entire 11 bighas 3 kathas, although he has no interest in the same. The plaintiffs accordingly pray for a declaration that the Record of Rights is wrong. In regard to possession, they state that the defendants are resisting their possession and they, therefore, ask for confirmation of possession.

In the Court of the Munsif the land was valued at Rs. 100 evidently for the purpose of jurisdiction and a fee of Rs. 10 was paid upon the plaint upon the footing that the suit was for a declaration only. The Munsif dismissed the suit and the same amount of Court-fee was paid by the plaintiffs in their appeal to the Subordinate Judge.

The Subordinate Judge having decreed the suit, the defendants have preferred the present second appeal and have paid the same Court fee as the plaintiffs did in the Courts below.

The Stamp Reporter, however, found that the market-value of the land affected was Rs. 1,239-10-6 and that an ad valorem fee was payable thereon, and, as the appellants had paid Rs. 10, he claimed a deficit of Rs. 80. There being a difference of opinion between the Stamp Reporter and the appellants, the case was referred to the Taxing Officer who has affirmed the view of the Stamp Reporter and called upon the appellants to pay the deficit. As the appellants have refused to do so, the case has been sent up to this Bench in order that final orders may be passed on the appeal.

Now, the first question to be decided is, whether the Taxing Officer's decision as to the amount of the Court fee due on the memorandum of appeal is final. Section 5 of the Court Fees Act would seem to conclude the matter, but the learned Vakil for the appellants before us contends that, as the case comes under section 7 (iv) (c) of the Act, the appellants are entitled to value the relief at their own figure, that in declining to accept their valuation the Taxing Officer has exceeded his jurisdiction, and that his decision can, therefore, be revised by the Court.

Now, it seems to me that the wording of section 5 is so explicit and general that it leaves the Court no option. The Taxing Officer has jurisdiction to fix the amount of fee payable, and if he decides that the valuation put by the appellants upon the relief was incorrect he has the power to correct it. Even if he has done anything which the law does not allow him to do, the Court Fees Act gives the High Court no jurisdiction to interfere with his decision as to the amount of the fee.

This view is also completely covered by authority. In Balkaran Rai v. Gobind Nath Tewari (1) it was held that a decision under section 5 of the Court Fees Act is not open to appeal, revision or review and is final for all purposes and that no means have been provided or suggested by the Legislature for questioning it. In Koer Karan Singh v. Gopal Rai (2) it was held that the decision of a Taxing Officer as to the category within which a suit falls for the purpose of ascertaining the proper amount of Court-fees payable on a memorandum of appeal, as also his decision as to the amount of fee, is final and binding upon the Court under section 5 of the Court Fees Act and that the Court cannot go behind the order of the Taxing Officer to examine the method which he adopted to arrive at his decision. This Court also has uniformly adopted this view of section 5 and, I think, it is too late for the appellants to attack the Taxing Officer's decision on the ground that he has illegally assumed jurisdiction. See Lagan Burt Kuer v. Khakhan Singh (3) and Chanderbati Kuer v. Gorey Lal Singh (4).

Then it is contended that the Taxing Officer has jurisdiction only to deal with fees payable under Chapter II and that as the fee now demanded is one payable under Schedule I of the Act, it is not a fee in respect of which his decision is final. The reply to this is, that Schedule I is merely supplementary to section 7; it is a table provided for ready reckoning and indicates how the ad valorem fee prescribed by section 7 is to be calculated.

But, apart from this preliminary point, I think it is quite clear that the Taxing Officer's procedure was perfectly correct and that his decision must be affirmed.

The plaintiffs pray for a declaration and for confirmation of possession. It may be contended that the prayer for confirmation of possession is nothing more than a prayer that the fact of, and his right to, possession may be declared but the words "confirmation of possession" have now acquired a technical meaning and include a prayer for recovery of possession if the Court thinks the plaintiff is out of possession; and it is for this reason that for over half a century confirmation of possession has been held to be consequential relief within the meaning of section 7 (iv) (c) of the Court Fees Act. See Bohuroonissa Bibi v. Kureemoonissa Khatoon (5), Jhuman Kamti v. Debu Lal Singh (6), Dina Nath Das v. Rama Nath Das (7).

I have been unable to discover how and when this form of pleading originated but, at the present time, I think, it is indisputable that, though it may be often unnecessary to ask for it, a prayer for confirmation of possession is added as an useful precaution against failure to prove possession up to the date of the suit. In the present case the plaintiff states in paragraph 13 of his plaint that, owing to the resistance of the defendants, he is compelled to bring a regular suit. This is, therefore, in essence a suit for possession which is a form of consequential relief.

That being so, how is the consequential relief to be valued in this case? Are the plaintiffs entitled to put their own valuation or is the Court or, in a High Court, the Taxing Officer competent to correct such valuation?

The learned Vakil for the appellants relies upon various decisions in the High Courts of Bombay and and Madras and of the Chief Court of the Punjab which, though affirming the principle that the plaintiffs' valuation must be accepted, do not seem really to cover the case now before us. I proceed to refer to these briefly.

(1) Parathayi v. Sankumani (8). In this case the plaintiff sought to set aside a deed of sale of which the consideration was Rs. 60,500. He paid a Court-fee of Rs. 10 only as on a declaratory suit but the Court held that he must pay ad valorem fee on the value of his interest on the document.

(2) Samiya Mavali v. Minammal (9). In this case the plaintiff sued to set aside a sale-deed and valued his relief at Rs. 800. The Trial Court assessed the value at Rs. 2,000, the amount mentioned in the sale-deed. The High Court on second appeal held that the plaintiffs' valuation should be accepted. The report does not show whether in the opinion of the Court that was the proper valuation of the relief.

(3) Vachhani Keshabhai v. Vachhani Nanbhu Ravaji (10). The plaintiffs prayed for a declaration of title to certain lands, recovery of a sum of Rs. 637 being their share of the income for the years 1956-1960 Sambat and for an injunction. They valued the first relief at Rs. 130, the second at Rs. 637 8- and the third at Rs. 25. The High Court held that both for Court-fees and jurisdiction the plaintiffs' valuation must be accepted and that notwithstanding the defendants' objection that the property was worth Rs. 5,000 the suit was triable by a Second Class Subordinate Judge whose jurisdiction was confined to suits less than Rs. 5,000 in value.

Their Lordships, however, were of opinion that the valuation would be determinable by the Court if a claim for possession were made and on this ground they distinguished the previous ruling of their own Court in Dayaram Jagjivan v. Gordhandas Dayaram (11).

(4) Sunderbai v. Collector of Belgaum (12). This was a suit for a declaration and an injunction. Their Lordships of the Privy Council cited with approval the observation of the Bombay High Court that jurisdiction should be determined by the plaintiff's valuation.

(5) Barru v. Lachhman (13). In this case the plaintiffs sought a declaration and an injunction and valued the relief at Rs. 130 for purposes of Court fee and at Rs. 1,100 for purposes of jurisdiction though the value of the land was Rs. 73,192. A Full Bench of the Punjab Chief Court held that as the case fell within section 7 (iv) (c) of the Court Fees Act the valuation was proper.

(6) Hai Sanker Dutt v. Kali Kumar Patra (14). In this case the plaintiff sought a declaration of title to some jungle land, damages for the cutting of some trees and an injunction. He valued the declaration together with the injunction at Rs. 130, and the damages at Rs. 79. The High Court of Calcutta held that though the value of the whole jungle was Rs. 1,200, it was neither the duty nor within the power of the Court to ascertain the value of the property for purposes of jurisdiction.

It will be observed that none of the cases relate to possession. They would all seem to relate to claims in which the Court had no option but to accept the plaintiffs' valuation. No case has been shown to us where there was a claim for possession and where the plaintiff was allowed to put a valuation upon it which the Court knew to be false.

On the other hand, it was observed by Richards, C. J., in Jageshra v. Durga Prashad Singh (15), that section 7, clause (iv) (c) requires that the plaintiff shall truly state the value of his relief; to the same effect is Umatul Batul v. Musammat Nanji Koer (16), Krishna Das Laha v. Hari Oh ran Banerjee (17) and Raj Krishna Dey v. Bepin Behary Dey (18) and in the High Court at Patna the authorities are unanimous that it is not open to the plaintiff to give an arbitrary and incorrect valuation—see Sri Krishna Das v. Murli Rai (19), Shama Pershad Sahi v. Sheopersan Singh (20).

In this state of the authorities I think the Taxing Officer was clearly right in following the practice prevailing in this Court.

Apart from authority, it is also quite clear that the interpretation put by the appellants on section 7 (iv) (c) cannot be accepted; for if pushed to its logical conclusion it would lead to manifest absurdities. It is admitted that a suit for declaration of title and recovery of possession is a suit for declaration with consequential relief. If the section is to be literally construed, then, while a plaintiff suing simply for possession would, under section 7 (c) have to pay ad valorem fees on the value of the property, he would, by joining a prayer for declaration, pay an ad valorem fee on whatever smaller value he chose to put upon the consequential relief. Again, when a plaintiff had valued his prayer for consequential relief at a certain figure in his plaint and had failed in the Trial Court, it would be open to him in appeal to value the consequential relief at any lower figure he might choose. These inconsistencies and anomalies would not occur if the section were held to mean that the valuation for the purposes of Court-fee is to be made in the first instance by the party concerned but is finally determinable by the Court.

The next question is, what is the proper value of the consequential relief in this case. No rules have been made under sections 3 and 4 of the Suits Valuation Act in this Province for the valuation of an interest in land which is the subject-matter of a suit under section 7, clause (iv) of the Court Fees Act. Sections 3 and 4 of the former Act provide for the valuation of land for the purposes of jurisdiction and under section 8 the value as determinable for the computation of Court fees is to be the same as the value for the purposes of jurisdiction. No rules having been framed, we must look to the value of the subject matter of the relief, that is to say, the money value of the loss which the plaintiffs apprehend; and in this case we must follow the practice of this Court and assess the value of the relief at the value of the 11 bighas 3 kathas, in respect of which possession is claimed. The Taxing Officer finds that in 1910 the plaintiffs purchased the entire holding of 11 bighas 18 kathas at a Civil Court auction sale for Rs. 1,323 10 6 and that the proportionate value of the 11 bighas 3 kathas is Rs. 1,239-10-6. The ad valorem fee payable upon this sum is Rs. 90 and there is, therefore, a deficit of Rs. 80 in the present case. It may be that the value of the property at the time of the suit was less, though this is not probable, than its value 8 years earlier, but the appellants had an opportunity of proving its real value before the Taxing Officer, and as no proof was given we are not in a position to say that the Taxing Officer's decision is incorrect. I think, therefore, that his decision must be affirmed.

The learned Vakil for the appellants desires two days' time to pay the deficit Court-fee. If the amount is not paid by the 3rd instant the appeal will be dismissed without further reference to a Bench.

Appeal from a decree of the Additional District Judge, Akola, dated the 16th February 1921, in Civil Appeal No. 60 of 1920.

Mr. V. Bose, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This judgment disposes of Second Appeal No. 164 B of 1921, Deoba, plaintiff, and Ashruji, defendant, Second Appeal No. 165-B of 1921, Deoba, plaintiff, and Sakharam and Ashruji, defendants, and Second Appeal No. 166-B of 1921, Deoba plaintiff, and Sakharam, defendant. These three suits have been tried together and one judgment has governed their disposal in the Courts below. They were heard together in this Court and, therefore, this judgment disposes of all the three.

The property in suit is the various Pot Hissas of Survey No. 41 of Kankarwadi. The plaintiff sued for joint possession of his eight annas share in these Pot Hissas. His story is that the field originally belonged to one Girmaji, the grandfather of the plaintiff. Girmaji had two sons, Punjaji and Raghoji, and the plaintiff is the son of Raghoji. He owns a joint half share in the field, the other half belonging to his uncle Punjaji. The defendants refused to give him possession of his shares and hence the suit.

The defence was, that the field was bought from Punjaji on 22nd February 1906 by Ashruji and Raoji, father of Sakharam. As Punjaji's sons disputed the sale, Raoji and Ashruji paid Rs. 550 to the sons of Punjaji and obtained another sale deed on 19th June 1909. This sale deed is said to have been lost. It was further pleaded that Punjaji was in possession as ostensible owner, and that the defendants were bona fide purchasers for valuable consideration without notice of the plaintiff's title. Adverse possession was pleaded and it was contended that the suits for joint possession were not maintainable, and that plaintiff should have brought a suit for partition and separate possession of his alleged half share.

The plaintiff, in return, stated that the defendants were in possession for 4 or 5 years and that he knew nothing of the transfer. The case was tried on the following issues common to the three suits:—

(1) Whether it is obligatory on the plaintiff to bring a suit for partition? Is the suit for joint possession not maintainable?

(2) Whether the field Survey No. 41 was the ancestral property of the plaintiff and Punjaji and whether the plaintiff has got half share in the field? or

(3) Whether the field was the self-acquired property of Punjaji?

(4) Whether Punjaji and his sons sold the field in suit to Raoji and defendants? Had they right to sell the entire field?

(5) Was plaintiff in possession of the field at any time within 12 years next before this suit? or

(6) Is plaintiff's claim barred by defendants' adverse possession for over 12 years?

(7) Whether Punjaji was the ostensible owner of the field and are the defendants protected by section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act?

(8) To what relief are the parties entitled?

In Suits Nos. 350 and 351, that is, Second Appeals Nos. 164B and 165B, there was an additional issue. Whether it was necessary for the plaintiff to claim relief in this case in Civil Suit No. 349 of 1919 filed in this Court? Is this suit barred under O. II, r. 2, Civil Procedure Code?

The First Court's findings may be summarised as follows:—

The plaintiff's suits for joint possession are maintainable. It was established that the field originally belonged to Girmaji, the grandfather of plaintiff, and plaintiff is the son of Girmaji's son, Raghoji. It has not been shown that the field was the self-acquired property of Punjaji. Deoba had a half share in the field as his share as son of Punjaji's brother, Raghoji. The first sale by Punjaji was by razinama and kabuliyat in 1906. One Badulal had obtained a foreclosure decree in respect of this field on a mortgage executed by Punjaji. The actual possession remained with defendants as lessees of Badulal. The sons of Punjaji then sued Badulal for redemption obtaining a decree and redeeming the mortgage. It was after this that Raoji and Ashruji took a fresh sale-deed from Punjaji's sons on 19th June 1909. That has been lost and a copy of it is on record. Punjaji and his sons were owners of half and had no right to sell the other half share belonging to plaintiff. The plaintiff has admittedly never been in possession, but Punjaji's possession would not be adverse to plaintiff unless he actually ousted plaintiff or denied his title openly, and adverse possession would commence from the date of such denial or ouster. In the present case the sale to defendants of the whole field was given by Punjaji on 22nd February 1906 when the defendants entered into possession. Punja by selling the field on that date, openly denied the plaintiff's title to the field claiming the entire field himself, and as the present suit was filed on 11th December 1919, that is, more than 13 years after the field has been sold, under Art. 144 of the Limitation Schedule, 1908, plaintiff's claim was time barred. Dealing with Issue No. 7 the Judge finds that the defendants took no reasonable care to ascertain whether Punjaji had a right to make the transfer and, therefore, the case was not governed by section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act. It was held that the three suits were rightly brought, but the suits were dismissed on the ground that they were barred by limitation.

On appeal it was found that there was interruption of the defendant's adverse possession when they were dispossessed on 26th June 1907 when the mortgagees took possession of the field in pursuance of their decree, and the mortgagees were in possession till 13th May 1909 and as the suits were brought within 12 years from this date they were within time. The Judge held that the defendants were not entitled to tack to their possession the possession of their vendors from 13th May 1909 or the possession of the mortgagee Laduram Badulal from 23th April 1907 to 13th May 1909 and also their own prior possession from 22nd February 1906 to 26th April 1907. The defendants' possession for the period of the lease was not adverse possession. The three appeals were allowed.

It is here argued that the adverse possession of Punjaji's branch against Deoba and Raoji commenced on 18th September 1902, that is, from the date of the mortgage in favour of Laduram if not from 22nd February 1906 when Punjaji sold and gave possession to the present appellants. The point pressed here is, that Art. 142 applies. It is admitted by appellants that plaintiff came of age in 1907. It is also clear that plaintiff never held actual possession. So it is difficult to see how Art. 142 of the Limitation Schedule can possibly apply. Art. 144 applies, and the defendants will have to prove 12 years' adverse possession. The mortgage in Laduram's favour was executed when the plaintiff was a minor. By consenting to act as Laduram's lessees and then re-buying from Punjaji and his sons it seems to me that appellants admitted they were no owners by the razinama-kabuliyat transfer of 1906. I do not see how they can possibly tack on Punjeji's possession, as a joint owner he was holding for both himself and the plaintiff, nor yet the time they were in possession as lessees. Constructive possession always follows the true title and until Punjeji and his sons sold after appellants had been in possession as lessees adverse possession did not commence. In cases under Art. 144 it is not incumbent on the plaintiff to establish possession within 12 years of suit. He has to prove title and it then rests on the defendants to show that he and those under whom he claims have been in possession for over 12 years before suit. Even if time be taken from 1906 when the razinama and kabuliyat transaction took place as, owing to plaintiff's minority time would not commence to run until 1907, it is by no means certain that the suits are not within time, but I agree with the lower Appellate Court generally in its reasons for holding that the suits are within the limitation allowed. This disposes of the three appeals which are dismissed with costs. The appellants will pay the respondent's costs.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by five defendants—defendents Nos. 1, 3, 12, 13 and 18. The suit in respect of which the appeal arises is a suit by which the plaintiffs claim, as reversionary heirs of one Purna, a 4-annas share in 13 properties jointly with the defendants Nos. 1 to 11 who are said to be the owners of the other 12-annas share. The First Court decreed the suit with regard to all the 13 properties. The lower Appellate Court upheld the decision as regards properties Nos. 1 to 9 and reversed the decision of the First Court so far as regards properties Nos. 10 to 13. The appeal concerns properties Nos. 1 to 9; but the plaintiffs have filed a cross-objection with regard to properties Nos. 10 to 13.

Now, it will be convenient before dealing with the points raised in the appeal to refer to the genealogical table which will be found at page 29 of the paper book before us. One Krishna Chandra Sarkhel had 4 sons—Bhairab, Rajkallabh, Shib Chandra and Banga Chandra. Bhairab had a daughter and son Purna. Purna married Umatara. He died leaving only his widow Umatara him surviving and no other heirs. On the widow's death the descendants of Bhairab's daughter, who are the plaintiffs, became heirs to Bhairab's estate. Rajballabh had a son Kali Mohan; it is not necessary to refer to the other members of Rajballabh's family, nor is it necessary to refer to Shib Chandra's family. On the 16th April 1861 sometime after Bhairab's death a suit was commenced by one Prasanna on a bond said to have been executed by Purna. The parties to the suit were Purna's widow Umatara, Banga Chandra and Kali Mohan. Now, I think, there can be no doubt that if the debt was a genuine debt and the suit a bona fide one, Umatara, for the purposes of the suit, represented Purna's estate and Purna's estate would be bound by the decision thereof. The suit was decreed on the 11th May 1861 and in October 1869 there was a sale in execution of the decree—the properties sold being the shares of the judgment-debtors in properties Nos. 1 to 9 which are claimed in this appeal. The properties were bought or purported to be bought by one Chandra. After an interval of many years, namely, on the 2nd February 1910, Umatara commenced a suit for a possession of a 4 annas share in properties Nos. 1 to 9. Other properties, I understand, were included in the suit but we are not concerned with these. Her allegation was that she had been dispossessed and she alleged (inter alia) that the execution sale did not pass any property inasmuch as the bond was forged. The suit was brought in the Munsif's Court and was valued at Rs. 1,100. The Munsif dismissed the suit on the 26th April 1911 and the learned Vakil for the respondent has shown us a copy of judgment in the suit. It appears that so far as the merits were concerned, the findings were in favour of Umatara, but that she failed to obtain a decree because she did not ask to set aside the sale in execution. It seems, therefore, that although she succeeded on the merits she failed for technical reasons. On the 6th October 1915 Umatara died and the suit in respect of which this appeal arises was commenced on the 8th March 1916 in the Subordinate Judge's Court. The suit was valued at Rs 2,100. It was brought, as already stated, by the reversioners who became the owners of Purna's estate after the death of Umatara. The suit relates to the 9 properties said to have been sold in 1861 and to 4 other properties which are the subject-matter of the cross-objection. Now, as I have already stated, as regards properties Nos. 1 to 9, both the lower Courts held that Umatara did not represent the estate and that accordingly the reversioners were not affected by the previous litigation.

In the appeal before us 4 points have been urged. First, it is said that the decree of 1861 bound the estate as represented by Umatara as the decree was not fraudulent; secondly, it is said that the plaint in the present suit contains no prayer to set aside the execution sale and that the suit would not lie unless the execution sale is set aside; thirdly, it is said that the suit is barred by limitation; and lastly, it is said that the suit of 1910 operates as res judicata.

Now, the findings of the lower Appellate Court with regard to the bond and the suit of 1861 are on their face somewhat conflicting. At page 33 of the paper-book the learned Judge states that there is nothing to show whether the debt, on which the ex parte decree was obtained, was real or unreal and that it cannot be said that the decree was obtained by fraud. But at page 34 he states as follows: "All these facts show indication by conduct that the auction-sale was a sham transaction to keep the property in the family." And again, "If the debt were a real one such suspicious conduct inconsistent with bona fides were not probable. Under all these circumstances I believe and find that the debt was not a real debt, that the auction-purchaser was not a bona fide one and that possession continued with the Sarkhel family and not with the auction-purchaser or his heirs. I also find that the sale did not affect the interest of Umatara and much less of the reversioners." It has been argued on behalf of the appellants that as the bond was not found to be a forgery the estate of Purna was bound by reason of Umatara's presence as a party. I think, if there was a clear and unambiguous finding to this effect, then this contention must prevail. But I think, that reading the judgment as a whole the two findings amount to this that there was no debt, that the bond was a fictitious document and the suit accordingly a mere fiction with the result that the execution sale, founded on a fiction, is really of no value and not binding on any one. This being so, it cannot be said that the decree of 1861 was a decree that would bind Purna's estate or Purna's reversioners.

So far as the second ground is concerned, it seems to us to be concluded by the decision to which reference has been made, namely, the decision in Surendra Nath Ghose v. Kali Gopal, Mozoomdar (1), where it is clearly laid down that a decree which is fictitious does not require to be set aside; the statement being "a collusive and fraudulent proceeding in a Court is not a judicial proceeding and is to be treated as availing nothing to the party who sets it up." So much then for the second point urged before us.

So far as the 3rd point is concerned, this is based on the suit of 1910 and I think this presents a certain amount of difficulty. The point apparently was abandoned in the First Court, for the learned Munsif states that the Pleader for the defendant did not press the point of res judicata in the course of his argument, but it was apparently argued in the lower Appellate Court. Now I have already stated the nature of that suit, the findings of the Court and the ground of the decision and, on the whole, I think, that both the Courts were right in holding that, under the circumstances, the suit of 1910 was a personal suit by Umatara, not on behalf of the estate, and that it does not operate as res judicata. It is also noticeable that this is not a case in which Umatara is suing, after her husband's death, for possession of an estate of which she had never been in possession. Clearly on the evidence she was in possession from her husband's death from sometime before 1861 until the year 1903. So she is not suing to recover her husband's share but to recover present possession in her own right which she enjoyed for many years and from which she had been dispossessed. This disposes of all the questions raised in the appeal before us. The result is that, in our opinion, the decision of the lower Court is correct so far as regards the properties Nos. 1 to 9 and we must uphold the claim of the plaintiffs for possession of those properties.

We now come to the cross objection of the respondents. This refers to plots Nos. 10 to 13. Now these plots did not form a part of the original estate of Krishna Chandra Sarkhel nor had they been acquired during Purna's lifetime. It appears that sometime between Purna's death and the year 1903 these plots were acquired by the joint family of which Umatara was one. The Munsif who gave these four plots to the plaintiffs states in his judgment which will be found at page 26 of the paper-book: "These properties were acquired when the parties lived in commensality. The presumption, therefore, is that they were acquired by the joint fund." It seems to us that that is a correct statement of the law; where one finds people living as joint and properties are acquired during this time, the presumption is that they were acquired for the benefit of the joint family as a whole. Consequently, Umatara as a member of the joint family was presumably, until the presumption is rebutted, entitled to an interest in these properties. The lower Appellate Court has reversed the decision of the First Court as regards these plots on an error of law in that he has thrown the burden on the plaintiffs of showing the fund from which the acquisition was made and in not throwing on the side who denied the jointness the burden of adducing evidence to rebut the presumption that the properties were acquired for the joint family as a whole. This, in our opinion, vitiates the finding of the District Judge as regards Plots Nos. 10 to 13. But it is said that he has found that Umatara was never in possession of these properties and that in the suit of 1910 she did not claim any share in them. But, as I have already stated, that suit was brought to enforce a personal claim and that does not debar the plaintiffs as reversionary heirs of Purna from now asserting their claim to a share of those properties. The cross objection, therefore, we think, must succeed and we declare that the plaintiffs are entitled to a 4 annas share in the properties Nos 10 to 13.

The result, therefore, is that the decree of the Court below in so far as it relates to these 4 properties must be set aside and that of the First Court restored. In other respects the decree of the Court below will stand. The respondents will be entitled to their costs of the appeal and to the Court fees paid on the memo. of cross-objection.

JUDGMENT.—The following genealogical tree shows the relationship of the parties :—

SHEORAMSA = Radhabai (defendant)
died 2nd November 1918

Nathu = widow Jamna died 12th February 1918.	Tukaram = Bhagirathibai adopted son Govinda, minor, (plaintiff.)

The plaintiff's case was as follows. Sheoramsa and his two sons who predeceased him formed a joint Hindu family. Tukaram before his death instructed Bhagirathibai that she should adopt a son to him Out of respect for Tukaram's wishes Sheoramsa before his death directed Radhabai, not to adopt a son herself but to get Bhagirathibai to adopt one to Tukaram. Radhabai acting on this direction consented to the plaintiff's adoption by Bhagirathibai which took place on the 20th March 1919. On these facts the plaintiff sued Radhabai for a declaration that he was by virtue of the adoption grandson and heir of Sheoramsa, and for possession of Sheoramsa's property. In proof of the consent by Radhabai the plaintiff relied on a statement in writing called a kaifiyat dated the 11th December 1918 signed by Radhabai. In this statement mention is made of Sheoramsa's directions referred to above.

Radhabai denied that Tukaram and Sheoramsa had instructed Bhagirathibai and herself respectively as alleged and that she consented to the adoption. She alleged that the kaifiyat was taken from her under misrepresentation but that even if she is deemed to have consented to the adoption by that statement, her consent was withdrawn before the adoption took place. She further pleaded that Sheoramsa and the members of his family as well as his forefathers were residents of the Central Provinces and the parties were, therefore, governed by the Benares School of Hindu Law. Other minor pleas taken by the parties will be apparent from the issues which were as follows :—

"1. Did Bhagirathi adopt plaintiff ?

2. Was the adoption made on the instructions of Tukaram and Sheoramsa ?

3. (a) Was it made with the consent of defendant ?

(b) Was the consent withdrawn ?

4. What was the age of Tukaram when he died and what was the age of Bhagirathi at the time ?

5. Was the thumb impression on

(a) the document styled kaifiyat secured by the patwari by misrepresentation as alleged by the defendant ?

(b) Is the kaifiyat inadmissible in evidence for want of stamps and registration ?

6. By what School of Hindu Law are the parties governed ?

7. (a) What property not admitted by defendant to be in her possession, but claimed on the ground that it is in her possession is with her ?

(b) What is the value of the property in possession of defendant and claimed by plaintiff ?

GOVIND v. RADHABAI KALAR.

(c) What debts due by Sheoramsa were re paid by defendant?

8. What were the mesne profits of the field in the year 1919-20?

9. What relief can plaintiff claim?"

The Lower Court found :—

On Issue No. 1,

that the adoption was proved ;

On Issue No. 2,

that Tukaram did not authorise Bhagirathibai to adopt a son and that Sheoramsa did not instruct Radhabai to see that Bhagirathibai adopted a son ;

On Issue No. 3,

that Radhabai did not consent to the adoption ;

On Issue No. 4, that Bhagirathibai was born on the 14th June 1903 and that Tukaram being older than her by about a year was under 15 years when he died in April 1917 ;

On Issue No. 5,

(a) that even if Radhabai executed the kaifiyat she did not do so with knowledge of its contents and

(b) that it was not inadmissible in evidence to prove her consent or Sheorama's instructions ;

On Issue No. 6,

that the parties were governed by the Benares School of Hindu Law, as Sheoramsa's family had migrated from the United Provinces and resided in that part of the village Salbardi which is situated in the Central Provinces. No findings were given on Issues Nos. 7 and 8 as they were deemed unnecessary.

The plaintiff's suit being dismissed he has filed the present appeal.

In this memorandum of appeal the plaintiff challenged the findings on Issues Nos. 2, 3, 5 (a) and 6, and further complained that the lower Court had failed to examine the parties fully and properly and to elicit all the facts necessary to decide the sixth issue.

We take up first the question as to the School of Hindu Law which governs the parties. Sheoramsa was a Jaiswar Kalar : vide P. W. No. 8. The Jaiswar sub-division of the Kalar caste is said to have come from Oudh : vide Russell on Tribes and Castes of the Central Provinces, 1916, Volume III, page 306. Presumably, therefore, Sheoramsa was governed by the Benares School. Assuming, however, that Sheoramsa's family had not migrated to the place of their present residence, we have it from P. W. No. 8 that since the time of his forefathers Sheoramsa's family has been living in the Central Provinces. P.W No. 16 also states that Sheoramsa lived in Salbardi in the Central Provinces. Prima facie, therefore, he was governed by the Benares School which prevails in the Central Provinces. Salbardi is a village situated partly in the Central Provinces and partly in Berar. It is argued for the appellant that most of the property of Sheoramsa is situated in Berar and it should, therefore, have been presumed that his domicile was in Berar. Admittedly, Sheoramsa's residential house is situated in that part of Salbardi which is in the Central Provinces, and in view of the fact and the evidence of the witnesses referred to above the fact that his fields are situated in Berar is insufficient to lead us to hold that he was domiciled in Berar. The place where a person's property is situated is not, in our opinion, a decisive factor in the determination of his domicile. We do not think that the plaintiff's complaint about the lower Court's failure to examine the parties properly on this point is justified. In Balwant Rao v. Baji Rao (1) it was held that a Hindu residing in a particular Province of India is held to be subject to the particular doctrines of Hindu Law recognized in that Province. Having regard to this rule the defendant's plea was quite sufficient. The plaintiff's reply to that plea was that "Sheoramsa and his son resided in both the Salbardis, one of which is in the Central Provinces and the other in Berar. It is not admitted that they were governed by the Benares School of Hindu Law." If the plaintiff had any further statement to make it was open to him to have done so. We are not even now told what other facts exist which could have been elicited in examination by the Court.

The parties being governed by the Benares School, the next question that arises is : did Tukaram give authority to Bhagirathibai to adopt. Before this question is dealt with it will be convenient to deal with the question of Tukaram's age when he died. This question was tried as a preliminary issue and was dealt with by the lower Court at some length. No attempt has been made in this Court to challenge that finding and we agree with the lower Court that Tukaram was about 15 years old when he died. Exhibits D2, D3, D5 and D6, vernacular school registers, the evidence of Radhabai (D. W. No. 2) and the statement of Bhagirathibai admitted to have been made by her before the Naib-Tahsildar sufficiently prove that Tukaram was about 15 years old when he died. Exhibit D7 shows that Bhagirathibai was herself 1 $\frac{1}{3}$ years old on the 23rd March 1905. P. W. No. 1 who is financing this case states that Tukaram was 5 or 6 months older than Bhagirathibai. Bhagirathibai herself states that he was two years older. This also points to Tukaram being about 15 years old at the time of his death, Bhagirathibai as P. W. No. 9 states that a day before his death Tukaram expressed a wish that she should adopt a son. The fact that he was only about 15 years old then makes us doubtful about his having done so. It is, as the lower Court remarks, improbable that a boy of that age should think of spiritual matters and of continuing his line of descent and instructing his child wife to make an adoption. Bhagirathibai says that Jhapraji was present when Tukaram instructed her to adopt a son. Jhapraji as P. W. No. 10 states that Bhagirathibai herself was at Yelikeli with her father when Tukaram died and that he himself does not know if Tukaram said anything before his death with regard to the adoption. P. W. No. 11 also states that Bhagirathibai was not in the house when Tukaram died. We agree with the conclusion of the lower Court that Tukaram did not give authority to Bhagirathibai to adopt a son.

As regards the alleged desire of Sheoramsa that Radhabai should make Bhagirathibai adopt a son, we have the evidence of P. Ws. Nos. 8 to 12. According to Bhagirathibai, P. W. No. 9, Sheoramsa died on a Saturday. On the preceding Thursday in the afternoon he told Radhabai to get Bhagirathibai to adopt a son and made Hanumant (P. W. No. 12) write what would appear to be a Will directing Bhagirathibai to adopt a son and giving instructions as to the disposal of his property. She states that this document was attested by Nagosa (P. W No. 8), Jhapraji (P. W. No. 10) and three other persons. Nagosa states nothing about this. Jhapraji says that Hanumant was not present when Sheoramsa told Radhabai about the adoption, that Hanumant was asked on Friday to reduce the matter to writing and that neither did Sheoramsa sign the document nor did anybody attest it after it was written. Jairam (P. W. No. 11) states that it was on a Friday that Sheoramsa told Radhabai and Bhagirathibai that Bhagirathibai should adopt a son. The witness then volunteers that Sheoramsa got a letter written by Hanumant to the effect that Bhagirathibai should adopt a son and perpetuate his name. Nothing more was, according to this witness, written in the letter and it was neither signed nor attested. This witness is hostile to Radhabai and apparently was hostile to Sheoramsa also. P. W. No. 12, Hanumant, states that one day before his death Sheoramsa told Radhabai that she should make Bhagirathibai adopt a son. He says that he wrote a document which contained instructions to Radhabai as above and directions about the disposal of his property. The witness states that Sheoramsa signed the document but nobody attested it. The document is not produced in evidence and though P. W. No. 12 says that it was given to Radhabai it does not appear to have been called for by the plaintiff.

A circumstance in support of the story about the instructions given by Sheoramsa to which some of the witnesses refer is the bringing of a boy for approval by Radhabai. Nagosa (P. W No. 8) states that he brought a boy about 15 days after Sheoramsa's death, that the Gurubaba of the family took him to Radhabai but that she disapproved of him, Hanumant (P. W. No. 12) states that Nagosa brought the boy a month or a month and a half after Sheoramsa's death but that he was not approved by the Jamnagir Bowa. Jhapraji (P. W. No. 10) states that Nagosa took the boy during Sheoramsa's lifetime for his approval but that Sheoramsa did not like him. We are not at all impressed by this evidence.

We do not understand why Sheoramsa did not authorise Radhabai to adopt a son herself or why he gave preference to the widow of Tukaram who was a younger son over that of Nathu who was the elder one. The plaintiff's suggestion is that Sheoramsa advised an adoption by the widow of Tukaram because Tukaram had expressly desired it. If, however, as we have held, Tukaram did not express any such desire, the foundation for Sheoramsa's instructions goes.

In further support of the story about Sheoramsa's instructions, reliance is placed upon a kaifiyat dated the 11th December 1918 of which Exhibit P-29 is a copy. It is as follows:—

"Kaifiyat (statement) executed by Radhabai widow of Sheoramsa Kalar of Salbardi, Taluq Morsi, District Amraoti, to the following effect:—

My husband Sheoramsa is dead. Even if I am his true nearest heir he told me at the time of his death that I should get the whole property (moveable and immoveable) recorded in the name of the daughter-in-law, Bhagirathibai, and that I should make her adopt a boy with a view to continue his line. All this happened in the presence of the Panchas and so I have entered my husband's whole property in the name of my daughter-in-law Bhagirathibai. It may be recorded in her name. I have executed this kaifiyat of my free will and consent, in full possession of my senses and without taking any intoxication and hearing any one's advice.

Dated 11th December 1918. By the pen of Namdeo Yeshwantrao Kukde.

The lower Court has dealt with this matter in paragraph 16 of its judgment. Namdeo (P. W. No. 17) has written the document and Babu Khan (P W. No. 18) has attested it. Neither of them is able to say why Radhabai executed it. Namdeo states that he had gone to Salbardi for marketing and that he was called from the market by Radhabi and that he wrote the kaifiyat as instructed by her. Babu Khan who is a resident of Salbardi states that the document was written on a market day and that Saturday is the only market day in that village. Now the 11th December 1918, the date on the kaifiyat was a Wednesday. There is, therefore, cause to suspect the genuineness of this kaifiyat. Radhabai denies that she gave any document purporting to permit mutation in Bhagirathibai's name. She states that the Patwari took her thumb impression on a blank paper saying that he would have the fields mutated in her name and that if she gave her thumb impression she could have mutation made without having to go to Court. She denies that she knew Namdeo, the writer. The Patwari, as shown by the lower Court, is a very unsatisfactory and unreliable witness. We can see no reason why the document was written as it is, except to serve as evidence of an admission by Radhabai of the alleged instructions by Sheoramsa. We agree with the lower Court that even if the thumb-impression on the document is Radhabai's its contents were not written by her authority or with her knowledge.

We also agree with the lower Court in holding that the consent of Radhabai to the adoption is not proved. The circumstances under which the ceremony of adoption actually took place indicate that Radhabai was not a consenting party to it. The fact that the doors of the family house were closed against Bhagirathibai's party, that the ceremony had to be performed in a lane, that it was considered necessary to have a photographer in readiness to have a photograph of the party taken, that Radhabai does not appear in the photograph, that Radhabai had applied for mutation in her own name and that she would have nothing to do with Bhagirathibai or the adopted boy after the adoption, all negative her consent.

To sum up, we find, agreeing with the lower Court, that the parties are governed by the Benares School of Hindu Law, that Tukaram did not authorise Bhagirathibai to adopt, that Sheoramsa did not instruct Radhabai to get Bhagirathibai to adopt and that Radhabai did not consent to the adoption. On these findings the plaintiff's claim must fail. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Evidence, admissibility of - Recitals of boundaries in documents between third parties, if admissible—Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 11, 13, 32 (3).

Recitals of boundaries in documents between third parties where they throw light on the question of the ownership of the property in suit are not admissible in evidence under section 11 or 13 of the Evidence Act. But they may be admissible under clause (3) of section 32 of the Act when they are the statements made by persons of the character described in the opening sentence of that section, that is to say, persons who are dead or who cannot be found or for other reasons there stated cannot be examined as witnesses [p. 330, col 1.]

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, First Court, Faridpur, dated the 6th of March 1920, modifying that of the Munsif, Third Court at Madaripur, dated the 28th of June 1920.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Jogesh Chandra Roy (with him Babu Anita Ranjan Ghosh), for the Appellants.—The lower Appellate Court has referred to certain documents which are not admissible in evidence. Even if admissible there is nothing to show that the name in which the boundary plots stood was the predecessor-in-interest of the plaintiff. When the title deed fails the suit should have been dismissed unless adverse possession for 12 years was shown and proved. One cannot prove his title by reference to statements in other people's documents.

Refers to Abdul Ali v. Syed Rejan Ali (1), Soroj Kumar Acharji v. Umed Ali Howladar (2), Abdullah v. Kunja Behari Lal (3).

Statements in the conveyances of others as to boundaries are not evidence against me and they cannot create a title in the plaintiff. The document was objected to and the learned Judge relied a good deal on this document. The final Record of Rights is in my client's favour. They ought to have rebutted the presumption raised by that.

Refers to Soroj Kumar Acharji v. Umed Ali Howladar (2).

Mr. A. K. Fuzl-ul-Haq (with him Moulvi Syed Mohd. Sadulla), for the Respondents.—The plaintiff claimed as a successor in-interest of one Hadi. Not only kasmi right, but right by adverse possession is claimed. The finding is that the plaintiffs are in uninterrupted possession till the date of the suit. Findings as to tank and Adi, who is the same as Hadi, are in my favour. These documents may not be admissible as regards my title but certainly so as regards my possession. The ruling cited refers to question of title and not of possession. Documents are admissible under section 13 of the Evidence Act. I would rely on section 11 of the Evidence Act.

Section 32 read with section 13 (a) of the Evidence Act will make the documents admissible as the statements are from persons who are dead now. I rely on the finding on the question of possession.

Babu Jogesh Chandra Roy briefly replied.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs respondents brought the suit out of which this appeal arises for recovery of possession of three plots of land on declaration of their title thereto. As regards two of the plots Nos. 1115 and 211, both Courts have held that the plaintiffs' case failed, and though a cross-objection in respect of this finding was taken on behalf of the respondents it has not been pressed at the hearing of this appeal.

We are now only concerned with plot No. 1116 in respect of which the Munsif dismissed the plaintiffs' suit but the lower Appellate Court gave the plaintiffs a decree for a 14-annas share. As regards this plot the only question that really arises in this appeal is as to the admissibility of certain documents on which the lower Appellate Court has based this finding in favour of the plaintiffs. In proving their title to this plot the plaintiff relied on Exhibit 3 a document which had been rejected by both Courts and further on five documents, Exhibits 1, 4, 5, 6 and 7, which contain recitals that the land in dispute was the property of one Adi Sikdar. The lower Appellate Court, differing from the first Court, has held that it has been proved that this Adi Sikdar was the predecessor-in-interest of the plaintiffs. These documents are documents of transfer of different properties adjoining the land in dispute and in the boundaries given in these documents Adi Sikdar's tank is mentioned As regards the admissibility of these documents, for the appellants, reliance is placed on the case of Soroj Kumar Acharji v. Umed Ali Howladar (2). There it was held that the question whether recitals in the boundaries of other lands in documents between the third parties, such as there are in the present case, are admissible in evidence under section 11 or section 13 of the Evidence Act is not free from doubt. But having regerd to the recent decisions on the point it was held in that case that such documents were not admissible in evidence. That ruling certainly supports the contention raised on behalf of the appellants as regards admissibility under section 11 or 13 of the Evidence Act. On behalf of the respondents reliance is placed on the cases of Abdullah v. Kunja Behari Lal (3) and Imrit Chamar v. Sridhar Panday (4). In the former of these cases it was held that similar documents describing boundaries were not relevant under section 11 or section 13 of the Evidence Act, but they might be admissible under clause (3) of section 32 when they were the statements made by persons of the character described in the opening sentence of that section; that is to say, persons who are dead or who cannot be found or for other reasons there stated cannot be examined as witnesses. It is not shown in this case that the persons who appear in these documents to have made these statements come under the category described in that section. It is conceded on behalf of the appellants that there is some evidence apart from these documents to support the plaintiffs' case and that the case should go back for re hearing after excluding from consideration the inadmissible documents. When the case is heard the plaintiffs may be able to show that the facts are such as to make these statements admissible under section 32, clause (3) and if they are able to do so on the evidence on the record this documentary evidence may be considered by the lower Appellate Court. But should they not be able to do so they must be excluded from consideration.

(1) 21 Ind. Cas. 618; 19 C. W. N. 468.
(2) 63 Ind. Cas. 954; 25 C. W. N. 1022; 35 C. L. J. 19.
(3) 12 Ind. Cas. 149; 16 C. W. N. 252; 14 C. L. J. 467.

I accordingly decree this appeal and dismiss the cross-objection taken by the respondent. The appeal will be re-heard by the lower Appellate Court only on the point of the right of the plaintiffs to a decree in respect of plot No. 1116, the tank, and it will be decided on the evidence already on the record.

Costs will abide the result.

I make no order as to costs in the cross-objections.

versus

NAGUBAI M. JOSHI—DEFENDANT.

Bombay Rent (War Restrictions) Act (II of 1918), s. 9—Fraction of premises leased required by landlord—Tenant, eviction of.

A bona fide requirement of a landlord of a small fraction of the premises leased does not amount to a reasonable requirement of the whole of the premises within the meaning of section 9 of the Bombay Rent War Restrictions Act so as to entitle him to evict the tenant from them. [p. 331, col. 1.]

Mr. F. S. Talyarkhan, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Coltman, for the Defendant.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff, who is the owner of a building on Sandhurst Road, seeks to evict the defendant, a lady Doctor, who is in occupation of the ground floor as residence and first floor as a hospital and also of one motor garage in an out-house appertaining to the building.

The plaintiff himself lives on the New Charney Road, and has two motor cars and two carriages without horses. He says he does not require any part of the property in the occupation of the defendant, except the motor garage. He wants this motor garage for the accommodation of one of his cars. His cars are at present accommodated, one in a hired garage close to his residence, and the other, in a vacant shop on the ground floor of his sister's house. The carriages are, one, at his sister's bungalow on Malabar Hill, and the other, in one of the other garages in the same out-house.

The car, which is in the hired garage close by, is conveniently situated, and he is content to leave that car there. The car he wants to accommodate in the garage, which he seeks to acquire possession of, is the car which is in his sister's shop. He says the car is only temporarily accommodated there, but surely it is not likely that his sister would turn that car out of the shop. The only extra convenience he gets by removing the car from the sister's house to the garage in suit, is a gain of four or five minutes in time. The shop in his sister's house is ten minutes from his own residence, and the garage in suit is four or five minutes distant.

Again, I see no reason why the plaintiff should not remove the carriage which is in one of the same garages in the same out-house and accommodate his car there. The carriages are not in use and he ought to be able to find godown-accommodation for that carriage somewhere else.

On these facts, I am not satisfied of the bona fides of the plaintiff's requirement.

But even assuming that the plaintiff's requirement is bona fide it is not reasonable. Plaintiff must sue to eviet the defendant from the whole of her premises in occupation as his tenant, and I must, therefore, deal with the suit on that footing. It comes to this, therefore, that a bona fide requirement of a small fraction of the premises leased does not, in my opinion, amount to a reasonable requirement of the whole of the premises. For these reasons, therefore, I find on the issue framed, in the negative, and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs.

—The plaintiff is the petitioner. This Rule was granted against an order dismissing the suit on the ground of unauthorised alterations in the bond. I sued for Rs. 35 with interest The defendant denied receipt of consideration. The Judge held that there was a consideration for Rs. 25, but has dismissed my case on the ground of unauthorised alteration of Rs. 25 to Rs. 35. He has relied on Gour Chandra Das v. Prasanna Kumar Chandra (1) which I submit is quite distinguishable. The case in Achyutananda Bhattacharya v. Ram Nath Bhattacharya (2) is also distinguishable. There the point was raised by the subsequent purchaser from the mortgagor. LALSING v. PARSHRAM.

No one appeared for the Opposite Party to show cause.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule is unopposed. The petitioner brought a suit against the defendant on a bond for Rs. 35. The defendant denied payment of consideration and also pleaded that the bond which he admittedly executed was a bond for Rs. 25 only and had been altered so as to show the amount advanced to be Rs. 35. The lower Court has found that the consideration money of Rs. 25 was paid and the bond was altered. On these findings he has applied the principle of the leading case of Master v. Miller (5) to be found at page 803 of Smith's Leading Cases, 12th Edition, Volume 1, and dismissed the suit, That the plaintiff petitioner cannot recover his claim on the bond is not disputed but what is contended is that he can sue on the original debt of Rs. 25. This contention is supported by the authority of the case of Moti Lal Saha v. Monmohan Gossami (4), in which it was held that even if the promissory note sued upon were a forgery the plaintiff would succeed on proof of the loan by independent evidence. Following this decision we hold the plaintiff is entitled to recover the amount of Rs. 25 which he has been found to have advanced to the defendant.

We, accordingly, make the Rule absolute and set aside the decree of the Small Cause Court Judge. The plaintiff will get a decree for the sum of Rs. 25 only against the defendant. The parties will bear their costs in all the Courts.

Ostensible owner—Alienation—Suit by real owner to recover property—Notice of title—Burden of proof—Question of fact, decision on—Decision, when not final.

In order to allow the real owner of property to recover from an alienee the property taken from a person allowed by the real owner to hold himself out as the owner, he must prove either direct or constructive notice of the title or the existence of circumstances which ought to have put the purchaser on an enquiry which if prosecuted would have led to a discovery of the real title. [p. 333, col. 1.]

Ordinarily, a decision on a question of fact is final, but when it is shown that that decision was reached without assessing the evidence on the record at its proper value and that, while appraising that evidence, various important factors were not considered, the decision cannot be accepted as final. Mr. A. V. Khare, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. B. Niyogi, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This case was last before this Court as Second Appeal No. 8-B of 1918 when it was remanded for taking of some fresh evidence and for a fresh decision on the merits. The principal question at issue, namely, whether the house in suit is the property of the plaintiff, Parasram, or of his brother, Rajaram, is one of fact and the decision on a question of fact would, in most cases, be final but there are circumstances in the present case which lead me to believe that the evidence on record has not been assessed at its true value and various important factors to be taken into consideration while appraising that evidence have not been considered. It is, of course, true that the sale-deed of 1883 proves itself, but because Parasram was the owner of the house in that year it by no means follows that he was still owner when he brought the present suit. Some reliance has been placed on the rent note but that document was executed by Arjun during the pendency of the defendant's suit against Rajaram, and the evidence of the writer of the document, Yeshwant (P. W. No. 1), states that Parasram and Rajaram were both absent when he wrote the rent note. The evidence does not show that the present plaintiff, Parasram, was in fact a party to that rent-note. The second witness for the plaintiff states that he does not know who is the owner of the house; therefore, it seems that the plaintiff got a decree merely on his original sale deed and the Courts below have not given proper weight to the fact that the local authorities in their collection of taxes have shown Rajaram as the owner of the house and collected the taxes from him. P. W. No. 2 himself admits that Rajaram was living in the house until the last five or six years. It is significant that the plaint in this case is signed for Parasram by the son of Rajaram who also appears in the case as the plaintiff's agent. A matter worthy of consideration is the question whether if Parasram had been in truth the owner of the house, he would not have had his name entered as owner in the Municipal register and paid taxes of the house himself. It is here argued that the lower Courts do not seem to have given the consideration it deserves to the question whether Parasram is the owner of the house in suit and has allowed Rajaram to pose as the ostensible owner of it, for it is a rule of law that in order to allow the real owner of property to recover from an alienee the property taken from a person allowed by the real owner to hold himself out as the owner, he must prove either direct or constructive notice of the title or the existence of circumstances which ought to have put the purchaser on an inquiry which if prosecuted would have led to a discovery of the real title. This question must be considered and the lower Appellate Court must ascertain and record its opinion on the question whether Parasram has, as a fact, had anything to do with the property for many years past or whether he has allowed Rajaram to live in the house and to treat it as his own leading people to believe that Rajaram was in truth the real owner. I have said enough to show that all aspects of the case have not been duly considered by the lower Appellate Court. I am not, therefore, prepared to receive its findings on the main question of fact as final. I set aside the decree and remand the case for a decision de novo in the lower Appellate Court. Costs will abide the result.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 105—Agreement between co-sharers to take profits in turn, whether lease—Registration not necessary.

An agreement between the co-sharers of an estate whereby each is in turn to take the profits for a certain number of years, is not a lease within the meaning of section 105 of the Transfer of Property Act but is an arrangement as to the method of distribution of profits and does not require to be embodied in a registered instrument to render it valid.

Appeal against a decree of the First Additional District Judge, Lucknow, dated 21st June 1921 confirming that of the Honorary Assistant Collector of the First Class, Lucknow, dated 31st January 1921.

Mr. Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. P. Sen, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of a suit for profits. The plaintiff's father and the first two defendants each purchased a 5-annas share and the third defendant purchased the remaining 1-anna share in the village in July 1900. Both the Courts below have held that there was an agreement among the parties by which the defendant No. 3 was to realize his share of profits from certain tenants and the other two defendants and the plaintiff were each to realize the rent from all the other tenants of the village and take all the profits for a period of six years in turn. They held that this agreement was acted upon and that in accordance with this agreement the plaintiff had taken the profits for the whole 15-annas from 1309 to 1314 Fasli, that the defendant No. 2 had taken the profits from 1315 to 1320 Fasli, and that the defendant No. 1 had taken and was entitled to the profits from 1321 to 1326 Fasli. In accordance with this finding the plaintiff's claim being for the profits for 1325 and 1326 Fasli was dismissed.

The only point urged in second appeal is that, assuming that there was such an agreement, it was not valid in law or binding on the plaintiff-appellant, that it amounted to a lease for a period of more than one year and that, therefore, it could only be made by a registered instrument under section 107 of the Transfer of Property Act. It seems to me to be quite clear that the agreement in question does not amount to a lease as defined in section 105 of that Act. One of the essentials of a lease is that there should be a consideration to be rendered periodically or on specified occasions to the lessor, and that essential is entirely absent in this agreement. The agreement is nothing but an arrangement between co-sharers as to the method of distribution of profits. Instead of dividing the profits each year it was agreed that each party should take the profits for six years in turn. The agreement was a perfectly valid agreement and did not require to be embodied in a registered instrument. I may also note that the plaintiff has in pursuance of this agreement enjoyed the profits for six years and he cannot now be allowed to go behind it.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal against a decree of the Additional District Judge, Tipperah, dated the 21st of February 1920, affirming that of the Munsif, Second Court at Brahmanbaria, dated the 19th of September 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Kali Kinkar Chakravartti, for Babu Upendra Kumar Roy, for the Appellant.—The plaintiff is the appellant. The appeal arises out of a suit for declaration of plaintiff's Niskar title to one third share of the lands and for partition. The First Court dismissed the suit. On appeal that decision has been affirmed. My main contention is that the learned Judge ought to have admitted certain documents in evidence. Our case was that the plaintiff was unaware of their existence and so could not produce them before the First Court. The learned Judge has held that this evidence could only be admitted under O. XLI, r. 27, and that no substantial cause has been shown as to why they should be admitted and has relied on the case of Garden Reach Spinning and Manufacturing Co. v. Secretary of State for India (1). But even according to that decision the Judge ought to have found that there was lacuna in the evidence. Those documents would have proved my main contentions and disproved those of the defendants. The other findings are rather against me. But the learned Judge was wrong in holding that the plaintiff's whole case depends on showing that she was in possession of plot No. 8. I submit the Judge ought to have considered the case with regard to the other plots.

Babu Dwarkanath Chakerbutty, Senior Government Pleader (with him Babus Gobinda Chandra Dey Roy, Surendra Nath Guha and Monomohan Banerjee), for the Respondents, was not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against a decree dismissing a suit for declaration of the plaintiff's Niskar title to one-third share of the lands of the plaint and for partition. The dismissal by the Court of first instance was affirmed on appeal by the lower Appellate Court.

(1) 28 Ind. Cas. 865; 42 C. 675; 19 C. W. N. 4 1.

The main point urged in this appeal is that the lower Appellate Court was wrong in refusing to receive certain documents in evidence under O. XLI, r. 27, Code of Civil Procedure. The plaintiff-appellant's case was that she was unaware of the more important of these documents during the hearing of the case in the First Court. The lower Appellate Court has held that that is no sufficient ground for admission of the evidence under O. XLI, r. 27, Code of Civil Procedure, and the plaintiff's proper remedy is by an application for a review under O. XLVII, r. 1. In support of this view he cites the case of Garden Reach Spinning and Manufacturing Co. v. Secretary of State for India (1). He has wrongly referred to it as a Privy Council decision whereas it is a decision of a Bench of this Court. But it is nonetheless binding on the learned Additional District Judge and is also binding on me sitting singly. Though it is not itself a decision of the Judicial Committee it is based on their decision in the case of Kessowji Issur v. Great Indian Peninsula Railway Co. (2). These decisions fully support the view of the learned Additional District Judge. I hold that he was right in refusing to admit this evidence at the hearing of the appeal.

The only other point urged is that the Court of Appeal below is in error in thinking that the whole case of the plaintiff depended upon her possession of plot No. 6 and this has vitiated its judgment. From what I have seen of the judgments of the two lower Courts I am unable to hold that the learned Judge is wrong in holding that the plaintiff's case must fail if she fails to prove her possession of plot No. 6. The judgment which is one of affirmance has dealt sufficiently with other points in the case and has given good grounds for supporting the finding of the First Court on the facts. On these findings the plaintiff's suit necessarily fails.

I accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs to each set of respondents.

Khoti Khasgi lands, purchaser of—Faida, liability to pay.

A purchaser of Khoti Khasgi lands from one of the co-sharers Khots, is liable to pay Faida, unless he is able to show that by virtue of some custom or agreement amongst the Khots the Faida is not payable. [p 33t, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decision of the Assistant Judge, Thana, in Appeals Nos. 97 and 107 of 1920, confirming a decree passed by the Subordinate Judge at Mahad, in Civil Suit No. 272 of 1918.

Mr. N. V. Gokhale, for the Appellant.

Mr. V. B. Virkar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The plaintiff alleged that he was a co-sharer Khot of the suit village of Bhandivili, that he managed the suit village in the years 1914-15, 1915-16, 1916-17 and 1917-18; that a Khoti Khata stood in the defendant's name; and that the defendant did not pay Dhara and Faida for those lands. The defendant inter alia contended that for some lands in suit he was liable to pay only Dhara and local cess; and the main issue in the suit was whether for those lands he was liable to pay the Faida.

In the Trial Court the learned Judge points out that a Khot in respect of his Khasgi lands is a tenant to himself so far as his liability to the body of Khots in concerned. With regard of Khasgi lands, I understand, the position is that the holder is still liable to pay Faida to the general body of the Khots, and that this payment of Faida for various Khasgi lands held by various co-sharers in the ordinary course would be adjusted when the division of profits is made among the joint body of the Khots.

The defendant, as a purchaser of Khoti Khasgi lands from one of the co-sharer Khots, would be liable to pay Faida, unless he was able to show that by virtue of some custom or agreement amongst the Khots the Faida was not payable. That was a matter to be proved by evidence, and as the learned Judge points out no evidence whatever was adduced. The fact that the defendant produced four sale-deeds, under which the defendant bought Khoti Khasgi lands, which were alleged to be immune from the payment of Faide, would not be relevant, unless it could be shown that the general body of Khots had agreed to those terms. The plaintiff's claim was, therefore, decreed in the Trial Court, and this decision was confirmed in appeal.

The learned Appellate Judge relied upon the decision in Raghunathrao v. Vasdev (1) that a Khoti sharer, if he sold his Khoti Khasgi lands, lost his rights thereto as against the general body of the Khots, and if after the sale he remained in possession of such lands, he was a tenant-at-will and could be ejected; and the head-note also says that if a Khoti sharer parts with his Khoti Khasgi lands, then those lands, in the hands of an outside purchaser, become Khoti Nisbat, that is to say, the purchaser not being a member of the body of Khots cannot hold any lands as "Khoti Khasgi", as that expression refers only to lands in the occupation of a Khot and cultivated by him or by his hired labourers. It is clear, therefore, that these lands in the possession of the purchaser are liable to pay Faida under the arrangement which was made in Exhibit 29, whereby it was arranged that the tenants of Khoti Nisbat lands were to pay Rs. 1 assessment and annas 8 Faida. Therefore, the decision of the Court below is correct and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

COYAJEE, J.—I concur. The defendant's plea, so far as it appears on the evidence, seems to be that he is not liable to pay Faida in respect of the Khoti Khasgi lands now in his possession. This plea was disallowed by both the lower Courts, and, in my opinion, for sufficient reasons. The lands in question are not Dhara lands. They are Khoti Khasgi lands which are thus explained by Mr. Justice Ranade in Secretary of State for India v. Narayan Namshet Kamerkar (2):

"Khoti Khasgi lands have been thus defined in Mr. Justice Candy's book on Khoti Tenure. 'All land in a Khoti village, which is not Dhara, must be Khoti. The Khoti lands which are cultivated by the Khot himself, or by means of hired labourers are called Khoti Khasgi, and the rest is Khoti Nisbat, which may be sub-let to permanent tenants or to recant cultivators.'"

Now, all Khoti lands are liable to pay Faida, that is, the Khot's profits. It constitutes his remuneration for the trouble and risk of collecting the revenue of the village, and managing the village. Khoti Khasgi lands are not exempt from such imposition. When the Khoti Vatan is held by one single individual, he is, so to say, his own tenant as regards the Khoti Khasgi lands in his private occupation. The position as regards the payment of this Faida becomes clearer when such Khoti Vatan is held by a body of sharers. In that case each sharer holding Khoti Khasgi lands becomes a tenant of the co-parcenery and pays Faida to the whole body of Khots including himself, and when a Khoti village is taken under attachment by Government, the Khot is liable to be assessed for Khoti Faida in respect of lands in his private occupation. Ramchandra Narsinha Mahajan v. Collector of Ratnagiri (3) and Ramchandra Daji Joshi v. Visaji Bapuji Kanhere (4).

It was no doubt open to the defendant in this case to prove that this particular Khoti land had been the subject of a special agreement between his vendor Khot and his co-sharers. The burden of proving it lay on him. No such agreement, however, has been either alleged or proved in this case. The learned Trial Judge pointed this out when he said "defendant has not adduced any evidence to show that he is not liable to pay Faida to plaintiff in virtue of any custom or agreement."

In these circumstances, in my opinion, the decree of the lower Court is right.

JUDGMENT.

JAWALA PARSAD, J.—This appeal arises out of an order of the Subordinate Judge, dated the 19th July 1920, rejecting the petition of the judgment-debtor appellant with respect to the execution of the decree obtained by the respondent. The only question involved in this appeal is whether the execution of the decree is barred by limitation.

The decree was obtained on the 19th of April 1909 and was put into execution several time. The present execution was levied on the 11th of November 1919. This was within three years from the previous execution which was filed on the 10th of April 1917 and disposed of on the 13th of September 1917. Before this execution the decree-holder had levied execution of the decree on the 19th December 1913. That execution was dismissed on the 27th April 1914. The contention of the judgment-debtor is that the execution levied on the 10th April 1917 was barred by limitation and consequently the decree-holder lost all right to execute the decree on the 11th of November 1919. The determination of this question rests entirely upon the construction of an application made by the decree-holder on the 25th April 1914. It is conceded that if that application be in aid of execution, the execution of the decree holder which commenced on the 10th April 1917 was well within time. On the 6th of April 1914 the Court directed "Notice to issue under O. XXI, r 66, upon the judgment-debtors fixing 25th May 1914." The decree holders had put in process-fee and notices for the parties. The return of notice was received, but the notice was not served, at least upon some of the judgment-debtors, and consequently the decree holder filed the application of the 25th April 1914 praying that an order may be passed for issue of another notice for service upon the judgment-debtors in the suit and one week's time may be allowed for filing talbana and notice. The learned Vakil on behalf of the judgment-debtors contends that this was an application simply for time to file the talbana, and was not an application praying for issue of notices upon the judgment-debtors. The plain meaning of the application is that it was for both the purposes. The notice upon some of the judgment-debtors had been returned unserved. It was, therefore necessary for the decree holder to apply for the issue of fresh notice upon those judgment debtors. This interpretation is borne out by the order of the Court which runs in the following words:—"Decree-holders filed a petition for issuing fresh notice and prayed for time to file notice and process-fees. Put up on 27th April 1914 for orders." There is ample authority for the proposition that an application for the issue of notice upon judgment debtors is an application in aid of execution There can, therefore, be no manner of doubt that the application of the 25th of April 1914 was an application-in-aid of execution. Therefore, the application of the judgment-debtor for execution of the decree filed on the 10th of April 1917 was within three years from the application of the 25th April 1914 filed by the decree holder in aid of execution. In this view the present execution of the judgment-debtor is not at all barred by limitation. Supposing, however, that the application of the 25th April 1914 was not in aid of execution, the judgment-debtors did not object to the execution of the decree in 1917 in respect of notice having been served upon them. In the execution of 1917 (No. 234 of 1917) the Court directed notice to issue under O. XXI, r. 22, of the Code of Civil Procedure, fixing the 3rd May 1917. That notice was served upon the judgment-debtors on the 23rd April 1917. The decree-holder has examined the Court peon and the identifier to prove service of that notice. The learned Subordinate Judge has accepted that evidence. He has also considered the objection of the judgment-debtors as to why the evidence of service of the notice should not be believed. The same objection was urged before us, but on examination of the evidence in the case we are satisfied that the objections are unsubstantial and that the Court below was right in accepting the evidence of service of the notice upon the judgment-debtors.

Accepting, therefore, that the judgment-debtors had received notice of the execution, it was open to them to object to the execution of the decree upon the ground that it was already barred by limitation. This they did not do, and on the 3rd of May 1917 the Court accepted the affidavit filed on behalf of the decree-holder in proof of service of the notice and directed a writ of attachment to issue fixing the 22nd of May 1917. The Court accepted the evidence on the record that the writ of attachment was also served and directed on the 12th of June 1917 notice to issue for the sale proclamation under O. XXI, r. 66. Therefore, not only the notices were served upon the judgment-debtor under O. XXI, r. 22, but also the writ of attachment was served upon the spot. The Court, therefore, decided after due notice upon the judgment-debtors that the execution was in order that it should proceed. That order is binding upon the judgment-debtors. It is an order deciding as between the parties that the execution was not barred by limitation. Such an order has been held to operate as res judicata, and whether right or wrong, the order cannot be challenged in subsequent execution proceedings. The result is that it is not open to the judgment debtors now to challenge the execution of the decree filed in 1919 that the decree was barred long before the present execution.

The result is that we accept the view taken by the Court below and dismiss the appeal with costs.

The decree-holders' trouble does not cease with the disposal of this appeal, for we find that after the objection of the judgment-debtors was disposed of on the 19th of July 1920 and the execution was directed to proceed, the execution was dismissed as being infructuous on the 6th of May 1921. The decree-holder has, therefore, come to this Court aggrieved by the order of the Subordinate Judge, dated the 6th May 1921, passed by the Subordinate Judge both in appeal and in revision. The order of the Subordinate Judge is in the following words: "Decree-holder takes no step, though the case was fixed for yesterday when I was busy with sessions. The execution case is accordingly dismissed as infructuous." The order in question is not appealable. This kind of order is not included in the list of orders in O. XLIII, r. 1, and no order unless included in that list is appealable The order in question was passed in execution of the decree on account of the default of the decree-holder to take certain steps. The order was passed in execution proceedings by virtue of section 141 of the Code of Civil Procedure, in other words, the order is similar to what is passed in suits on account of default of plaintiffs. Here, the decree-holder failed to take necessary steps for the prosecution of his application in execution and it was accordingly dismissed for default. Whether this order is an order in the suit or in the execution it is not at all appeal able. Mr. Kulwant Sahay concedes that the preliminary objection of the respondents that the appeal is incompatent must prevail. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed.

Knowing of this difficulty Mr. Kulwant Sahay has also preferred an application in revision. The question then is whether the order of the 6th of May was without any jurisdiction or jurisdiction was exercised illegally or with material irregularity or whether the Subordinate Judge failed to exercise the jurisdiction vested in him by law. On the 28th of April 1921 the decree-holders filed process-fee and notice. The Court directed notice to issue under O. XXI, r. 67, fixing the 9th of May 192 for its return. In the meantime, notices were returned unserved, and on the 4th of May the Court passed the following order:—"Notices returned unserved. Judgment-debtor No. - refused to take notice as there is mistake in his name in the notice. The notices of other judgment-debtors not served, there was no different goshwara. Decree-holder to take necessary step by to-morrow." On the 6th of May the Court passed the order with which we are concerned. "Decree-holder takes no step-though the case was fixed for yesterday when I was busy with sessions. The execution case is accordingly dismissed as infructuous."

Now, the date fixed for the return of notice was the 9th of May 1921 and that obviously was done in the presence of the decree-holder, for upon his filing process fee that order was passed. The orders of the 4th and the 6th of May do not appear to have been passed with the notice and knowledge of the decree-holder. The order sheet does not show that any intimation was given to the decree holder or his Pleader. On the other hand, column 4 of the order-sheet does not contain signature of the decree holder's Pleader. The order of the 4th of May directed the decree-holder to take necessary steps by the next day. Such an important order requiring a party to do something must necessarily have been signed by the Pleader of that party. The rules of the Hight Court on the subject are explicit and column 4 is expressly designed for that purpose. The decision of this Court in the case of Ram Sukul Pathak v. Maharaja Kesho Prasad Singh (1) has concluded the matter. On behalf of the decree holder an affidavit has been filed stating that they had no knowledge or information of the orders of the 4th and the 6th of May. There is no counter-affidavit filed on behalf of the judgment-debtors and the record of the Court, namely, the order-sheet in question supports the statement of the decree-holder. Therefore, it must be held that the orders of the 4th and the 6th of May were passed behind the back of the decree holder and the case was taken up without notice having been given to the decree-holder. Such an order is without jurisdiction. No order can be passed to the prejudice of a party without having given him an opportunity to be heard. The order in question was also irregular, inasmuch as the return of notice was fixed to be taken up on the 9th of May. It was taken up and disposed of long before the said date. Considering all the circumstances we have no hesitation in holding that the order of the 6th of May 1921 must come within the purview of the revisional power of this Court and is one which, the justice of the case demands, must be set aside.

We, therefore, set aside the said order and direct execution to proceed in continuation of the order of the 28th of April 1921, allowing an opportunity to the decree-holder to have notice under O. XXI, r. 66 served upon the party and to take such legal steps as he may be entitled to in prosecution of the execution of his decree. In the circumstances of the case we make no order as to costs both in the decree-holders's Appeal No. 111 and Civil Revision No. 155, and direct that each party should bear its own costs.

It is necessary that in this case notice of every order must be given to the parties and their signatures or those of their Pleaders must be obtained on the orders, inasmuch as the decree is an old one of 1909 and is about to be barred altogether by 12 years limitation. If the parties or their Pleaders refuse to sign, the Court must make a notice to that effect.

BUCKNILL, J.—I agree.

D. was adjudicated an insolvent in 1914. His father died in 9 / leaving him separate property. In 191[illegible] P sued D and his mother on a bond executed by his father in 1915 and obtained a decree in execution of which he attached certain property which D had inherited from his father It was objected that the debt was one provable in the Insolvency Court, and that, consequently, the proceedings in execution in the ordinary Court were barred under section 28 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act:

Held, that according to the definition in section 34 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, a "provable debt" was one to which an insolvent became subject by reason of an obligation incurred before the date of his adjudication as an insolvent; that as the obligation in the present case was not incurred until after that date, the debt was not a "provable debt," and that, therefore, the bar of section 28 (2) of the Act did not apply to it.

Appeal against an order of the District Judge, Bhandara, dated the 27th July 192 , in Civil Appeal No. 32 of 1921.

Mr. M. R. Indurkar, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. C. Dutt Choudhry, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The learned Pleader for the appellant abandoned the second of his two grounds of appeal, which is based on the mistaken idea that the decree he is seeking to execute was passed before the respondent was declared an insolvent; it was actually passed nearly five years later. The facts then are these. The respondent was adjudicated an insolvent in 1914 and has not yet been discharged. His father, Baliram Bokhare, died in 1917 leaving him separate property which I am informed is more than sufficient to pay all his debts. In the following year the original appellant, who has died since the appeal was filed, sued him and his mother on a bond executed by his father on 14th October 1915, and on 4th January 1919 obtained a decree declaring them both liable for the payment of Rs. 1,320 3 0, but only as the legal representatives of the deceased Baliram. In execution of this decree the appellant attached certain property which the respondent had inherited from his father. The respondent objected that the debt was one provable in the Insolvency Court under section 34 of Act V of 1920 (Provincial Insolvency) and, therefore, the proceedings in execution in an ordinary Court were barred by section 28 (2) of the Act. This contention has found favour in the two lower Courts and the application for execution has been dismissed on the ground that it does not lie.

(2) Now it is clear that the respondent did not become subject to this debt till after his insolvency. To be a "provable debt", according to the definition in section 34 of the Act, it must, therefore, be a debt to which he has become subject by reason of an obligation incurred before the date of his adjudication as an insolvent. I am inclined to think the words "obligation incurred" in the section refer to an obligation incurred by the insolvent himself, but that does not affect the decision of the present case as the obligation was not incurred even by the original debtor, his father, till 1915. The debt is not, therefore, a "provable debt," as defined in section 34 of the Act, and the bar of section 28 (2) does not apply to it.

(3) The dismissal of the application for execution must, however, stand, though for a different reason. The application was for the attachment of immoveable property and under sub sections (2) and (4 of section 28 the insolvent owns none at all. The decree holder appears to be entitled to execute his decree, but there is no property on which to execut it, nor can he proceed against the person of the judgment-debtor. His learned Pleader, however, states that he asks for nothing but a decision that the debt is not provable in insolvency in which case he can keep the decree alive by means of the present application for execution and such further applications as may be necessary and eventually execute it after the discharge of the insolvent. I find that the debt is not provable in insolvency but that the application for execution must still stand dismissed as the property which the decree-holder sought to attach is not liable to attachment. The appeal is accordingly dismissed, but under the circumstances it is ordered that the respondent shall pay all the costs in all three Courts. The Pleader's fee in this Court will be Rs. 15.

Appeal against an order of Mr. Justice Rankin, dated the 8th June 1920.

Mr. L. F. Pugh, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, ACTG. C. J.—This appeal is directed against an order made by Mr. Justice Rankin under section 36 (5) of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, 1909. The subject-matter of the order is War Bonds to the value of Rs. 20,00 deposited by Jacob and Co., with the Registrar of this Court on its original side as security for the due performance of a decree obtained against them by the appellant Rash Behari Ghose, or of such decree as may ultimately be made in the litigation between them. The events which have led up to the order may be briefly narrated.

On the 3rd July 1913 Nitai Charan Ghose, father of the appellant, was adjudicated an insolvent on his own petition. On the 11th January 1916, the insolvent came up for his discharge and the order of the Court was that his discharge be suspended for 18 months, that is, till the 11th July 1917. This order was completed and filed on the 18th July 1917. Now it transpires that Nitai Charan Ghose was employed as Manager in the firm of W. A. Lee and Co., who were the first Managing Agents of the Nalbona Coal Co. Ltd. Nitai Charan Ghose had assisted in the formation of the Company, and it was arranged amongst the promoters that as remuneration he would receive three fourths of the shares which might be allotted to one Mayamal Dasi and also two-thirds of such shares as might be allotted to Kaladanoyi Dasi, who were vendors of lands to be transferred to the Company when formed. The shares, however, were issued neither in the names of these two ladies nor in the name of Nitai Charan Ghose. They were in fact issued in the name of Rash Behari Ghose and have always stood in his name in the books of the Company. On or about the 15th May 1917 Rash Behari Ghose dealt with these shares as his own property and sold them to Jacob and Co., for Rs. 15,920. On the 20th November 1917 Rash Behari Ghose instituted a suit against Jacob and Co., for recovery of the value of the shares which he alleged had been delivered to them pursuant to the agreement for sale. Jacob and Co., admitted possession of the shares, but denied that they had obtained them from Rash Behari Ghose, they set up in fact an entirely different story as to how they had acquired title to the disputed shares. The suit was heard by Mr. Justice Ghose and on the 27th August 1919 a decree was made in favour of Rash Behari Ghose against Jacob and Co. This decree was confirmed on appeal on or about the 20th April 1920 We have been informed that Jacob and Co., have carried the matter further and have preferred an appeal to His Majesty in Council. During the pendency of this litigation Jacob and Co., deposited with the Registrar War Bonds of the face value of Rs. 20,000 for the performance of such decree as might ultimately become binding on them. On the 8th June 1920 the Official Assignee commenced the present proceedings with an application (which had been drawn up apparantly on the 3rd May) in which he alleged that the War Bond, in so far as they covered the price of the shares, appertained to the estate of the insolvent. He accordingly prayed that the Registrar might be directed to sell the War Bonds and to pay him the sum of Rs 15,920, The application was opposed by Rash Benari Ghose who asserted that the shares were in no sense the after acquired property of the insolvent and that their price never formed part of his estate. Mr. Justice Rankin examined Rash Behari Ghose, overruled his objection, and declared that he was the trustee for the Official Assignee in respect of the decree obtained by him on the 27th August 1919 against Jacob and Co., and also in respect of the security deposited by the latter. On this basis, Mr. Justice Rankin has restrained Rash Behari Ghose (and the Official Assignee also) from taking out of Court or dealing with the security until further orders. Rash Behari Ghose has appealed against this order and Mr. Pugh has contended on his behalf that an order of this description should not have been made after summary enquiry in a proceeding under section 36 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, 1909. Mr. Avetoom has controverted this argument, and has further urged that if the contention of the appellant should prevail, the Court should direct the revival of the regular suit which had been instituted by the Official Assignee for determination of the title to the shares but was withdrawn or abandoned in view of the turn taken by the present proceedings. We are of opinion that the order under appeal should not have been made, in the circumstances of the present case, under section 36 (5) of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act.

Section 36 authorises the Court to summon before it any person, known or suspected to have in his possession any property belonging to the insolvent, and to examine the person so brought before it concerning the insolvent, his dealings or property. Sub sections 5 and 6 then provide as follows:—

"(5) If, on the examination of any such person, the Court is satisfied that he has in his possession any property belonging to the insolvent, the Court may, on the application of the Official Assignee, order him to deliver to the Official Assignee that property or any part thereof, at such time, in such manner and on such terms as to the Court may seem just.

"(6) Orders made under sub-sections (4) and (5) shall be executed in the same manner as decrees for the payment of money or for the delivery of property under the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, respectively."

These sub-sections read together make it plain that the property in respect of which the order is made must be in the "possession" of the person examined, and the order may be executed against him in the same manner as if it were a decree for the payment of money or delivery of property. Sub section (5) is apparently modelled on sub-section (5) of section 27 of the English Bankruptcy Act, 1883, and it is worthy of notice that the term "possession" as used in that section has been somewhat narrowly interpreted. To take one illustration: in Davis, In re, Goodman, Ex parte (1), Wright and Darling, JJ., ruled that the Court has no jurisdiction to make an order on an agent to give up goods in his possession as agent for his principal; and they declined to express an opinion on the question, whether such order could be made even if the principal were made a respondent to the application. In the case before us, it might have been a matter for argument whether the War Bonds deposited with the Registrar by Jacob and Co., as security for the due performance of such decrees as might ultimately become binding on them, could be said to be property in the "possession" of Rash Behari Ghose at the time of the order.

Apart from this question, it is plain that no order under section 36 (5) should have been made in this case. That section, like section 26 of the Indian Insolvent Act, 1848, which it replaced, is discretionary. This was well settled under the Statute of 1848, and was elaborately discussed by Sir Barnes Peacock, C. J., Barlow v. Cochrane (2). In that case, a summary order had been made by Mr. Justice Phear in favour of the Official Assignee under sections 24 and 26 of the Indian Insolvent Act, Robinson, In the matter of (3). A suit was thereupon instituted for declaration of title to the disputed fund. Mr. Justice Norman dismissed the suit. On appeal, the question was raised whether the suit was maintainable. Peacock, C. J., and Markby, J., who heard the appeal concurred in holding that the order under section 26 of the Indian Insolvent Act could not deprive the plaintiff of his right to sue in the High Court to establish his right to the goods, if he could prove that he had such an interest in the goods or the proceeds thereof as prevented them from passing to the assignee of the insolvent; the Official Assignee was no more protected than any other Assignee would have been; the Court acted upon his application and the order was obtained and acted upon by the Official Assignee at his own peril. The Judges, however, were not agreed as to the merits of the matters involved in the suit. Peacock, C. J., held that the suit should be decreed, while Markby, J., held that the view taken by Norman, J., in concurrence with the order made by Phear, J., should be upheld. The result was that under clause 36 of the Letters Patent, the judgment of the Chief Justice prevailed against the concurrent opinions expressed by Phear, J., Norman, J., and Markby, J. The matter was then taken on appeal to the Judicial Committee; Miller v. Thomas Barlow (4). The objection that the order of the Insolvent Court was conclusive and that the suit was not maintainable was reiterated by Sir Roundell Palmer, who appeared on behalf of the appellant and relied upon Garbett v. Veale (5). The Judicial Committee, however, were not impressed with the objection, heard the appeal on the merits and affirmed the judgment of Peacock, C. J. The view that the exercise of the power vested in the Insolvency Court under section 26 of the Insolvent Act is discretionary and that a regular suit lies for determination of the question of title was uniformly maintained so long as the Statute of 1848 was in force. Reference may be made to the decision in Dwarkanath Mitter v. A. B. Miller (6), where Peacock, C. J., pointed out that it was not compulsory on the Court in all cases to try whether the disputed property belonged to the insolvent or not, but it was discretionary with the Court to enter upon the trial of such a question and to make an order. Phear, J., added that the order, if made, could only be passed after a process of judicial enquiry and upon the hearing of evidence and that the procedure of the Insolvent Court and the mode prescribed for an application under section 26 were not very appropriate to an enquiry which mainly had regard to conflicting rights of property. Phear, J., added at the same time that though it had been the constant practice of the Insolvent Court to make such orders, it had always been the practice of the Court to abstain from making an order under section 26 to deliver over goods or to pay debts when it appeared that there was really a conflict of right or equity between the insolvent and the person in whose possession the goods were or from whom payment of the debt was sought to be obtained. There is really a conflict of two considerations when the Court is called upon to make a summary order of this description; on the one hand, unless the Insolvency Court exercises the power, the property may be made away with before an action can be brought and determined; on the other hand, in a case where there is a substantial conflict of right, the time taken up in enquiry by the Insolvent Court may be thrown away, if a regular suit is instituted for investigation of the rights of the parties. To the same effect is the decision in Ajodhia Pershad v. A. B. Miller (7). The point was emphasised by Sir Richard Garth, C. J., in Umbica Nundun Biswas, In the matter of (8) when he expressed his entire approval of the practice of the Court to abstain from deciding difficult questions of title under section 26 and to leave the parties to settle such questions by a regular suit. He added that the procedure under section 26 was not calculated to effect satisfactorily the trial of difficult questions of title, and as the judgment would not be conclusive, even if the Court thought it right to decide the matter, either party being free if they chose to raise the same question again in a regular suit, the Chief Justice proceeded to allow the appeal and to discharge the order made by Kennedy, J., in favour of the Official Assignee. A similar view was taken in Kursondas Ramjee, In re (9). We are not unmindful that there are instances in which cases of some complexity have been dealt with under section 26; see for instance Kalagurla Suryanarayana v. Yarlagadda Naidoo (10), where there was a marked conflict of testimony upon a simple issue, namely, whether certain payments had been in fact made. See also Rowlandson v. Champion (11), Official Assignee of Madras v. Mehta & Sons (12), Hirth, In re, Trustee, Ex parte (13), Slobodinsky, In re, Moore, Ex parte (14). Amongst cases decided under the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, 1909, our attention has been drawn to the judgment of Greaves, J., in Seehase, In re (15) where the opinion was expressed that a question as to whether a sale of property by an insolvent was fraudulent or void could, in the discretion of the Court, be enquired into under section 36, subject to the right of the party affected to bring a suit, if so advised. The point whether the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, 1909, has or has not altered the law in this respect, does not appear to have been argued and we express no opinion as to the maintainability of a suit for the determination of the question of title after the matter has been decided under section 36; Hajee Abdul Latef Sahib v. Official Assignee of Madras (16). This much is plain that the Court should not deal with the matter under section 36, if it really involves difficult questions of title, but should leave the parties to litigate such matter in a regular suit: See Official Assignees of Madras v. Vadda alli Ammal (17). We are of opinion that, in the case before us, the matters in issue should have been left to be decided in a regular suit. To enable the Official Assignee to succeed, an enquiry must be made as to the terms of the contract between Nitai Charan Ghose and the two ladies and it must be proved that the shares represented the fruits of that contract; that the ownership in the shares was vested in the father of the appellant, that he held them in trust for his father's benefit; that when he sold the shares to Jacob and Co., he acted as trustee for his father; that he obtained a decree against them in the same capacity; and that the security deposited by Jacob and Co., partook of the same character. These are questions which require full investigation and should be determined in a regular suit. Such a suit, it appears, was actually instituted by the Official Assignee, but has been either abandoned or withdrawn in favour of the more exped tions for a of enquiry contemplated by section 36. There can be little doubt that the suit was the more appropriate remedy.

The result is that the appeal is allowed, the order made by Mr. Justice Rankin discharged, and the application of the Official Assignee dismissed. The suit already mentioned will stand revived. The costs of the appellant both here and before Mr Justice Rankin will be costs in the suit. The Official Assignee will be at liberty to take the costs incurred by him out of the unclaimed dividend revenue account, in so far as the costs cannot be met from the assets in his hands. We make this order, because there is reason to believe that the provisions of the insolvency rules as amended in 1918 have been overlooked and amounts have been drawn from the unclaimed dividend account without the leave of the Court.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 7 (v) (c)—"Garden," what is—Garden assessed to revenue with house, suit in respect of—Court-fee.

Where a sale-deed describes the thing sold as a garden together with a house and out-houses and trees of all kinds, the property sold is a garden within the meaning of section 7 (v) (e) of the Court Fees Act and even though the same be assessed to land revenue a suit, in respect of it, must, for the purposes of the Court Fees Act, be assessed at its market value and not on ten times the amount of the revenue. [p, 346, col. 1.]

Miscellaneous first appeal from an order of the District Judge, Amritsar, dated the 7th February 1917, returning the appeal for presentation to the Chief Court.

Bakhshi Tek Chand and Lala Hukam Chand, for the Appellant.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. S., for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts in this case are briefly as follows:—On the 13th May 1914, Sant Ram and others sold certain property to Jiwan Mal. On the 9th May 1915 Behari Lal instituted a suit claiming to be entitled to pre-empt the property sold. He described this property as land assessed to revenue and paid the Court-fees on it at ten times the jama. The vendee Jiwan Mal contested the suit and claimed that he had purchased a garden. He further pleaded that the value of the suit had been wrongly assessed both for purposes of Court-fee and jurisdiction and that the suit fell within section 7, clause (v) (e) of the Court Fees Act, the duty payable being an ad valorem one on the market-value. After recording evidence the learned Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that the property sold was a garden, and that under section 7 (v) (e) of the Court Fees Act the fee payable should be an ad valorem one. The property had changed hands for Rs. 14,500 which figure was admitted as correct by Behari Lal who was directed on the 31st August 1915 to make good the Court-fees on that amount by the 18th October 1915 As Behari Lal failed to comply with this order, on the 18th October 1915 the plaint was rejected under O. VII, r. 11, Civil Procedure Code. Against this rejection Behari Lal preferred an appeal to the District Judge who, however, held that the appeal lay to the Chief Court, and by an order, dated the 7th February 1917, returned the appeal for presentation to the Chief Court. Behari Lal filed the appeal in this Court, and on his behalf we have heard Mr. Tek Chand, while Mr. Moti Sagar has addressed us on behalf of Jiwan Mal, vendee-respondent.

After hearing the Counsel and examining the authorities cited at the bar, we have no hesitation in holding that the property sold comes within the definition of a garden and that, therefore, the order appealed against was right. Mr. Tek Chand referred to Kullappa Goundan v. Abdul Rahim (1) and claimed that inasmuch as the property sold in this case was assessed to revenue, an ad valorem fee was not chargeable. The learned Judges, who decided the Madras case, came to the conclusion that the word 'garden' in section 7, clause (v) (e) of the Court Fees Act should be taken as referring primarily to a garden in the English sense, that is an ornamental, or pleasure or vegetable garden attached to a house. The case before them, however, related to a cocoa-nut tope, and it was held that the conversion of an assessed arable field into a cocoanut tope did not affect the application of clause (v) (b) of section 7. On the other hand, in a case reported as Siri Dhar v. Amar Nath (2) it was held that the term "garden" in section 7 (v) (e) of the Court Fees Act included a fruit garden, even though the land under it might have been assessed to land revenue, and that the value of a suit for possession of such a garden for the purposes of the Court Fees Act must be assessed at the market value of the garden. Bhag Bhari v. Jawahar Singh (3) is another decision of a Division Bench which took the same view. A reference to the deed of sale shows that what was sold was described as a garden together with a house and out-houses as well as trees of all kinds. In these circumstances it seems perfectly clear that the learned Subordinate Judge, came to the correct conclusion, and we hold accordingly.

Next Mr. Tek Chand urged that as the matter was not free from difficulty and as his client had filed an affidavit in the Court of the District Judge when the appeal was filed there to the effect that he had every intention of complying with the order of the Court by the 18th October 1915, but had been prevented from purchasing the necessary stamp owing to his having contracted fever, he should now be given further time within which to make good the deficiency in the Court fees. Mr. Moti Sagar strongly contended that no such concession should be given to the appellant. He pointed out that this pre-emption suit had been hanging over his client's head ever since 1915, and further that the prices of land and houses had considerably increased in the interval. It is true that on the 20th November 1915 Behari Lal appellant filed the affidavit referred to. We are, however, unable to understand why, if he was well enough to come to Court, he was not well enough to purchase the necessary stamp or to file the money in Court with an application explaining that he was ill and asking for further time. It seems to us that, as a matter of fact, the appellant had no intention whatever of complying with the order of the Court and making good the Court fee by the 18th October 1915 and that this affidavit was merely an after-thought intended to meet eventualities. We must, therefore, decline to give him any further opportunity, and dismiss his appeal with costs.

JUDGMENT.—The three plaintiffs, who are appellants here, constitute a joint Hindu family. The first plaintiff is the karta or manager of the family, and the other two, who are minors, sue through him as their next friend. The common fallacy of supposing that the relation of the manager of a joint Hindu family to a minor member of the family is the same as that of a guardian to his ward was exposed by Batten, A. J. C. in Asaram v. Ratansingh (1). The learned District Judge has nevertheless fallen into this error and has consequently arrived at a wrong decision. The prayer in the plaint was for specific performance of a contract executed by the first defendant, Mehtab Singh, to convey to the plaintiffs certain property which he subsequently sold to the other four defendants. These defendants pleaded an agreement in their favour prior to that held by the plaintiffs, and also claimed to be purchasers in good faith for value without notice of the plaintiffs' rights. In the First Court both defences failed and the suit was decreed. In appeal to the Court of the District Judge both these questions of fact were again decided in favour of the plaintiffs, and those decisions are now final. The learned Judge, however, accepted a plea, taken by the defendants for the first time in his Court, that "specific performance cannot be obtained of a contract on behalf of minors when such contract could not be enforced against the minors or their property," and ordered the dismissal of the suit on that ground. On the authority of the ruling of this Court in Suramal v. Pandhari (2) which is based entirely on that of the Privy Council in Mir Sarwarjan v. Fakhruddin Mahomed (3) the learned Judge held that "Mehtab could certainly not have enforced the contract as against the minors and similarly the minors cannot enforce it against him."

(2) The Privy Council case mentioned is certainly clear authority for the principle on which the defendants relied in the Court of the District Judge, which is that in certain circumstances a contract made on behalf of a minor cannot be enforced. The learned Judge, however, cites the ruling as authority for his finding of fact that the condition is satisfied in this case and that "Mehtab could certainly not have enforced the contract as against the minors." That it cannot be, and the finding or rather the unwarranted assumption is clearly wrong As was explained in the judgment of Batten, A. J. C, already mentioned and the rulings therein cited, the case of a contract made on behalf of a minor by his guardian is not the same as that of one made by the karta of a joint Hindu family on behalf of that family such as that with which we are dealing here. The fact that the other two members of the family happen to be minors makes no difference in the liability of the family as a whole to carry out the contract. If the acknowledged manager of a joint Hindu family executes a contract for himself and the other two members of it, his younger brother aged 30 and his son aged 3, his son is just as much bound by it as his brother, and no question of minority arises.

(3) The principle enunciated by their Lordships of the Privy Council is simple enough but is not infrequently misunderstood. It is not that specific performance of a contract cannot be obtained against a minor and, therefore, cannot be obtained by him, because there are cases in which it can be obtained against him. The Allahabad case of Babu Ram v. Saidunnissa (4), in which Mir Sarwarjan's case (3) was distinguished, is one. The principle is that no person can sue for specific performance if he could not be sued for it, whether because he is a minor or for any other reason. (See pages 219 and 499 of the Sixth Edition of Fry on "Specific Performance").

(4) The point that arises in this appeal was discussed at length by a Full Bench of the Patna High Court consisting of Chamier, C. J., and Mullick and Atkinson, JJ., in Hari Charan Kuar v. Kaula Rai (5), and I cannot do better than quote from the judgment in that case. The suit was against a joint Hindu family, of which some of the members were minors, for the enforcement of a contract made on behalf of the family by the managing members, and the learned Chief Justice said: "The contention that the contract with the plaintiffs should not be specifically enforced rests on the decisions of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Mohori Bibee v. Dharmodas Ghose (6) and Mir Sarwarjan v. Fakhruddin Mohamed (3). In the former case it was held that a contract made by an infant is not merely voidable but void. In the latter the manager of the estate of an infant Muhammadan had contracted to buy an estate and it was held that the infant suing by his next friend was not entitled to obtain a decree for specific performance of the contract inasmuch as the infant was not bound by the contract and, therefore, the contract lacked mutuality. Their Lordships held that it was not within the competence of a manager of a minor's estate or of a guardian of a minor to bind the minor or his estate by a contract for the purchase of immoveable property. It is sought to apply these decisions to a contract for the sale of property made by the managing members of a joint family consisting of themselves and their minor children. There are cases in which specific performance of such a contract has been decreed against the managing members who made the contract leaving open the question of the validity of the contract as regards the minor members [see Kosuri Ramaraju v Ivalury Ramalingam (7), Srinivasa Reddi v. Sivarama Reddi (8)] and there is at least one case in which the contract not being for the benefit of the minors specific performance was decreed against the members who made the contract [see Ponaka Subba Rani Reddy v. Vadamadi Seshachellam Chetty (9)]. The interest of a member of a joint Hindu family in the family property is not individual property at all [see Gharibullah v. Khalik Singh (10)]. The manager of such a family is not an agent of the other members nor is he a mere manager. He is much more like a trustee for the other members [see Annamalai Chetty v. Murugasa Chetty (11)]. It is settled law that a father or managing member of a joint Hindu family may under certain circumstances and subject to certain conditions enter into agreements which may be binding on the minor members of the family [Ganesha Row v. Tulja Ram Row (12)]. I apprehend that the decisions of their Lordships in the cases of Mohori Bibee v. Dharmodas Ghose (6) and Mir Sarwarjan v. Fakhruddin Mahomed (3) do not apply to contracts made by the managing member of a joint Hindu family for family necessities or for the benefit of the family, i. e., contracts made by the managing members which bind the minor members of the family. Such contracts can be enforced on behalf of the family by the persons who make them and I find nothing in the decisions of their Lordships which requires us to hold that such contracts cannot be enforced against the family. Contracts made not by minors but by persons who have power to make contracts on behalf of a joint family do not appear to come within those decisions. I am not prepared to dismiss this suit for specific performance on the ground that the contract lacks mutuality having been made by or on behalf of minors who are not competent to contract."

(5) I hold that there was no lack of mutuality in the contract executed by the first defendant to convey the property in suit to the plaintiffs as they were all bound by it equally with the other party to it. The plaintiffs are, therefore, entitled to have specific performance of that contract. The decree of the lower Appellate Court is accordingly set aside and that of the First Court is restored. The defendants must pay all the costs incurred by the plaintiffs in all three Courts and must bear their own costs.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—This appeal raises an interesting question of law which has not previously come before this High Court. A partition decree was passed in a suit, and in execution of the decree the plaintiff complained that he had been dispossessed of certain land by the Collector's subordinate officers which was his own property and not subject to partition. He seems to have originally filed a suit to recover possession of the property, but it was decided by the District Court that the plaint should be treated as an application under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code, and it was treated so accordingly. The Trial Judge held that Art. 165 of the Indian Limitation Act applied and the application was held barred as not having been filed within thirty days from the date of dispossession. The question seemed so clear to the applicant's adviser that, as the learned Judge points out, he seems to have admitted that there was no way of getting rid of the application of Art. 165.

In first appeal this decision was upheld. The learned Judge said:

"Partition was made by the Collector in pursuance of a partition decree, and in pursuance of that partition the present applicant was admittedly dispossessed of certain land which he now claims to be his own exclusive property and, therefore, not liable to partition. It is admitted that the suit now treated as an application was instituted several months after this dispossession. These facts, I think, are exactly covered by Art. 165. This is an application 'under the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, by a person dispossessed of immoveable property and disputing the right of the decree-holder to be put into possession.' It is argued by Mr. Majli, the learned Pleader for the appellant, that Art. 181 applies to all applications under section 47. No doubt there are applications under that section to which Art. 181 would apply. But, of course, it can have no application where a period of limitation is provided elsewhere, and, in my opinion, 'elsewhere', in the present case, is Art. 165."

A similar question came before the High Court of Allahabad in Abdul Karim v. Islamunnissa Bibi (1). The learned Judges said:

"On appeals being brought by both the decree holders and the judgment-debtors, the District Judge, holding himself, as we think quite properly, bound by certain authorities mentioned hereafter, decided that the judgment-debtor's application was time barred, on the ground that Art. 165 of the Limitation Act applied to it, and that the time of thirty days had run out. We are clearly of opinion that when the matter is closely examined this view is untenable. In a technical matter of this kind, when the language relied upon does not in express terms cover the case, it is of the highest importance to realize the position of the parties and the context in which the language is used. Where the interpretation sought to be put upon the words is arrived at by implication and by reference, the Court ought not to adopt a construction which has a restricting and penalizing operation unless it is driven to do so by the irresistible force of language. Now, in the ordinary course of things, a person who is wrongfully dispossessed of immoveable property has a remedy by a suit for possession only. In matters arising out of the execution of decrees, possibly because they are the indirect result of the active interference of the Court itself, the Legislature has provided two exceptions. The judgment-debtor must apply to the Court under section 47. If he is dispossessed of land which is outside the decree, and he does not so apply, he loses his land. He cannot bring a suit. He is worse off than the ordinary person wrongfully dispossessed. On the other hand, if a third person outside the suit is unfortunately the victim of some mistake in the decree itself, or by the decree-holder, he may apply to the Court in a summary manner, and if he is right he may be put back into possession. That is expressly provided by O. XXI, rr. 100 and 101. Such a person is better off than the ordinary person wrongfully dispossessed. He can bring a suit, of course, within twelve years; but he can, if he pleases, apply summarily for possession. That is a privilege of a peculiar and special character, from which the judgment-debtor is excluded in express terms. It is not surprising to find such a privilege accompanied by certain restrictions. By Art. 165 of the Limitation Act of 1908, (the Article now in question) such an application must be made within thirty days. The Article is in these terms:—'Description of application:—Under the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, by a person dispossessed of immoveable property and disputing the right of the decree holder, or purchaser at a sale in execution of a decree, to be put into possession. Period of limitation:—Thirty days from the date of dispossession.' Now that is a precise and compendious description of the right given, and the application allowed to 'a person other than the judgment debtor' by O. XXI, rr. 100 and 101. It certainly applies to such an application and there is no other provision in the Code which in the terms it employs at all corresponds to it. We think it quite certain that when the Legislature enacted Art. 165, it had the provisions now contained in O. XXI, rr. 100 and 101 in mind. That is to say, it intended Art. 165 to apply to such an application. The argument for the view adopted in the reported cases and followed by the District Judge in the case, is that the words are wide enough to include a judgment-debtor. Separated from their context this is true. A judgment-debtor is a 'person' in such a case as this. Moreover, the judgment-debtor in his application under section 47 is complaining of the same sort of act as an applicant under O. XXI, r. 100, would have to complain of. But the moment it is realized that what the Schedule to the Limitation Act consists of is an enumeration of suits, appeals, and applications of various kinds, and that the language of Art. 165 is merely a definition or description, all difficulty as to the use of the word 'person' disappears. In our opinion the word 'person' in that context, although wide enough to include a debtor, was never used in any other sense than that of a person who is authorized by O. XXI, r. 100, to make an application of that description. To hold otherwise would result in this, that if a judgment debtor applied to the Court under O. XXI, r. 100, and adopted the language of Art. 165, his application would have to be dismissed because he is precluded from making an application of that description, and yet if he postpones applying under section 47 for more than thirty days, the language of the Article is to be applied to him."

(1) 34 Ind. Cas. 231; 38 A. 339 at p. 343; 14 A. L. J. 401.

The learned Judges then referred to Ratnam Ayyar v. Krishna Doss Vital Doss (2) and Har Din Singh v. Lachman Singh (3) in which cases it was held that Art. 165 would apply, and eventually they differed from those decisions.

The case of Ratnam Ayyar v. Krishna Doss Vital Doss (2) was considered by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Thattantavita [Vachali Rohini] v. Puthalathu Kandi Kombi Aliassan (4) and in overruling the decision the Chief Justice traced the history of Arts. 165 and 168 of the Indian Limitation Act of 1903. The Chief Justice said :—

"The Legislature has, however, itself restricted the scope of Art. 165 by restricting in the Code of 1908 applications by third parties under O. XXI, r. 100, to applications with reference to property covered by the decree or sale in pursuance thereof, and the fact that this procedure is not now applicable to complaints by third parties of dispossession of property not covered by such decree or sale appears to me to afford additional reason for excluding from the scope of the Article similar complaints by defendants who, as I am statisfied, were never intended to be covered by it. I think, moreover, that the rights of defendants are sufficiently restricted by their being required to apply under section 47 within the period limited by Art. 181."

This question, therefore, having been considered recently by the High Courts of Allahabad and Madras, we should have to show very clear grounds for differing from those decisions. For myself, I see no reason why Art. 165 should apply to judgment-debtors so as to very seriously restrict their rights when dispossessed of property which they allege had not come within the terms of the decree which is being executed. Ordinarily they would apply under section 47, and would have a period of limitation for such an application of three years under Art. 181. As pointed out by the learned Judges in Abdul Karim v. Islamunnissa Bibi (1) a person other than the judgment debtor is not restricted to making an application under O. XXI, r. 100, which is merely a summary remedy, and that his rights to a suit remain the same. The judgment-debtor, on the other hand, has no remedy by suit. I agree that the wording of Art 165 makes it absolutely clear that it was intended to apply to an application provided for by O. XXI. r. 100 and no other, and that, therefore, where the applicant is a judgment debtor, the proper Article which applies to his application is Art. 181. I think, therefore, that the appeal should be allowed and the darkhast directed to proceed according to law. The appellant should get his costs of the appeal.

SHAH, J.—The point arising in this appeal is not free from difficulty; but on the whole I think that the view taken by the Allahabad High Court in Abdul Karim v. Ilamunnissa Bibi (1) and by the Madras High Court in Thattantavita [Vacholi Rohini] v. Puthalathu Kandi Kombi Aliassan (4) is to be preferred to the view taken by those Courts in the earlier decisions referred to in these cases. On the wording of the article no doubt it may appear as if it would apply also to the case of a judgment debtor dispossessed of immoveable property: and it is urged on behalf of the respondent before us that Art 166 which follows Art. 165 has been interpreted as governing the case of an application by a judgment debtor to set aside a sale in execution of a decree. It is clear that the considerations applicable to Art. 166 are different. And we are not concerned in this appeal with the scope of Art. 166. I do not desire to suggest for a moment that Art. 165 would not apply to the case of an application by a judgment debtor to set aside a sale in execution of a decree. But the wording of Art. 165 is somewhat different and is capable of being read in a restricted sense, in which it has been read by the Allahabad and Madras High Courts in the cases to which I have already referred. I think that that is the view which we should give effect to in this appeal.

A person is said to be in a position to exercise undue influence over another, when the former is in a position to dominate the latter's will If when in such a position of dominance he uses it to obtain an unfair advantage over the person dominated, the transaction brought about by such use is voidable by the latter [p. 355, cols. & 2.]

The expression 'undue influence' cannot be properly used unless either (1) confidence has been reposed on the person charged, as where the latter is a solicitor, trustee, guardian, etc, or (2) unless the influence of the man exercising it is such that the person influenced stands in some sort of respect, awe or fear of him. [p. 355, col. 2.]

Where a legacy bequeathed by a Will or a gift inter vivos is sought to be set aside on the ground of undue influence, it is not sufficient to prove that the legatee was in a position to exercise influence, but it must also be proved that the influence was unduly exercised, the burden of proving this latter circumstance being on the party attacking the legacy. Appeal against a decree of the Court of the Subordinate, Judge, at Madura dated the 25th of March 1920 in Original Suit No. 157 of 1913.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA IYER, J.—The plaintiff appellant is the present Rajah of Ramnad, the owner of an ancient Zamindary. He brought this suit to recover possession with mesne profits for 3 years before suit of the village of Nedumthulasi within the area of his Zamindari which village had been alienated in three ways in the years 1894, 1895 and 1902 respectively in favour of the 1st defendant (Kuppusami Iyer alias Naganatha Iyer). Unless all these three transactions are set aside or are nullities it seems prima facie difficult to see how the plaintiff's suit in ejectment and for possession could succeed, as each of the three transactions gives to the 1st defendant the right to hold possession of the village on the date of this suit (namely, 30th June 1913).

The first transaction was a lease granted by the plaintiff's father, the then Rajah, in September 1894 under Exhibit C. Under this deed, the 1st defendant was entitled to enjoy the village as lessee for 40 years till the 1st July 1934, that is, till more than 21 years from the date when the suit was brought and more than thirteen years from the date on which this judgment is pronounced by me.

The second transaction was again an alienation by the plaintiff's father in June 1895 under Exhibit I by which the village was gifted outright to the 1st defendant with full powers of gift, sale, etc.

The third transaction was an agreement between one Rao Bahadur Venkataranga Iyer (who was constituted the present plaintiff's trustee under a settlement-deed of July 1895 which I shall refer to again later on) on the one side and the 1st defendant on the other side and was made in April 1902. (Besides the Dewan trustee and the 1st defendant, two Nattukottai Chetties, who were the lessees of the whole Zemindary were also parties to the agreement, but it is unnecessary to refer to them further). That agreement is Exhibit II. The trustee had threatened the 1st defendant with a suit to set aside the gift-deed, (Exhibit I, June 1895). Thereupon, the dispute was settled by this agreement, Exhibit II, the 1st defendant agreeing to hold the village on perpetual lease at half the usual rent and thus altering the gift under Exhibit I (the gift-deed of 1895) with full ownership right in the village to the gift of a perpetual and heritable and transferable occupancy right on favourable rent.

Now, the plaint ignores altogether the first transaction, namely, the 40 years' lease of 1894, attacks the other two transactions as "not bona fide," as "fraudulently and dishonestly obtained," as due to "undue influence" and in several other ways.

The defendants (the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 being the sons of the 1st defendant) raised several pleas and the lower Court framed nineteen issues for disposal. It is curious that no specific issue was raised in respect of the defendants' right to hold the village under the 40 years' lease of 1894 and the liability of the plaintiff's suit filed in 1913 for possession to be dismissed on that short ground, even though the 1st defendant specifically mentioned the 40 years' lease and relied upon it also in the 7th and 8th paragraphs of his written statement.

A few more facts and dates may be here mentioned. The late Raja was born in 1868 and his father died when he was a boy of 4 or 5. Though he was only a titular Rajah and was for all practical purposes only the owner of an impartible Zamindary estate, the pomps and ceremonials and the retinue of a Royal Court were kept up in many ways in the Zemindar's residence and the unwholesome atmosphere of hangers-on, favourites, flatterers, idlers, the Zenana, etc., affected the Zamindar's residence (known, of course, as the palace) and his surroundings and the effects of such influence were too strong on the young man, (the plaintiff's father), notwithstanding that his estate was taken up by the Court of Wards during his minority and his education was conducted in Madras. His mother (the Dowager Rani) had naturally great influence over him. She arranged to have him married to two wives at the same time when he was only 18 or 19 years old and by intrigues and importunities persuaded the Court of Wards to consent to his marriage with one girl and had him married almost simultaneously to the two wives she had selected for him, it being considered a matter of dignity in these aristocratic families that the proprietor should have at least two wives living. He was a young man of extraordinary intelligence. He passed his Matriculation in the first class.

The lower Court in dismissing the suit arrived at the following findings (among others) and I shall note them (as far as possible) in the words of the lower Court.

(1). "The first defendant was not in a position to exercise undue influence over the late Raja" and "the deed of gift in favour of the 1st defendant was not brought about by the undue influence" and "the gift is valid." (This finding relates to the gift-deed of June 1895, Exhibit I).

(2). "The agreement of 1902 between the Dewan Trustee and the lessees on the one hand and the 1st defendant on the other confirming the deed of gift with stipulation to pay half the Poruppu" was "beyond his" (the Dewan Trustee's) "powers" and "not valid." "But in view of the fact that the plaintiff could not succeed unless the gift" (of 1895) "was invalid, the plaintiff is not entitled to any relief by declaring that the agreement" (of 1902) "is invalid."

3. "The suit is practically to set aside the deed of gift and agreement and Art. 91 of the Limitation Act is applicable." Vide Raja Rajeswara Dorai v. Arunachellam Chettiar (1).

4. "There is no evidence on the plaintiff's side that the late Rajah continued to be under the influence of the 1st defendant after the deed of gift (June 1895) till the date of the deed of settlement (July 1895) under which he appointed Venkataranga Iyer as Dewan Trustee for his son (the present plaintiff). "The limitation, therefore, began to run before the execution of the trust deed" (July 1895) "and no subsequent circumstance can interrupt the running of the limitation"

Besides the above four findings, several other findings on mixed questions of law and fact were recorded by the lower Court, but in the arguments before us on appeal, neither side advanced any arguments on those questions or contested the lower Court's findings thereon. I need only say that I agree with the lower Court in its conclusions on these questions for the reasons given in its judgment.

I shall now take up the four findings dealt with before us one by one. The first question relates to the allegation of undue influence. The late Rajah was a person who by temperament was immoderately extravagant. His education and bringing up only tended to increase his natural foibles. D. W. No. 1 says "the late Rajah was a very emotional person." Under the Roman Law, he would be considered as a person permanently affected with incapacity to manage his own affairs, solely on the ground of his immoderate extravagance, not because he did not know the consequences of his actions or was at all weak of intellect. He was in perpetual need of the excitement of being praised for his reckless generosity and continuous liberality. Shrewd Nattukottai Chetties took advantage of this perpetual need of money even before he attained majority (which was on 3rd November 1893) and lent him large sums depending upon his generous disposition to re-pay them several times over after he took possession of the estate and they were not at all disappointed. The late Rajah was much attached to the 1st defendant, Kuppuswami Iyer, because the latter was a trusted servant of his mother for several years and he made the 1st defendant his own vernacular Secretary, (Javabnavis). But the 1st defendant was in no better position to dominate the will of the Rajah than any other person who appealed to his generous instincts and love of pomp, show, display and fame. I do not think it will be going too far to say that the late Rajah's temperament was such that he courted opportunities for the display of his reckless generosity. I agree with the learned Subordinate Judge that the story of P. W. No. 8 that the 1st defendant related to the late Rajah that the late Rajah's mother appeared to the 1st defendant in a dream and told him "Ask my son and he will grant you all benefit" and that on telling this story the Rajah agreed to make the gift is a false story. On the contrary, I believe the evidence of D. Ws. Nos. 1 and 2 who say that on the 2nd monthly ceremony after the Dowager Ranee's death, there was a religious gift of the village by the Rajah accompanied by the pouring of water through the right palm and that the gift deed was written a few days afterwards in consonance with the religious gift, and this is corroborated by the recital in the gift-deed.

Where a legacy bequeathed by a Will is sought to be set aside on the ground of undue influence, it is not sufficient to prove that the legatee was in a position to exercise influence and it must also be proved that the influence was unduly exercised, the burden of proving this latter circumstance being on the party attacking the legacy. Again, as a legacy given by a Will takes effect only after the death of the testator, the testator does not deprive himself of the bequeathed property but deprives only his natural heirs. Hence also Courts do not look with favour on attempts to attack bequests on the allegation of undue influence.

I admit that the case of a gift inter vivos stands on a less favourable footing. But it must be remembered in this case that the gift attacked was made on the 2nd June 1895 after the late Rajah had carried on his course of extravagance for more than $5\frac{1}{2}$ years after he attained majority; after he had been advised before the end of 1894 by the Government to settle his estate upon his eldest son, the present plaintiff (see paragraph 4 of the plaint) and just on the eve of the settlement-deed, Exhibit IV, which was executed one month and six days after the gift deed. The gift now in question, therefore, stands almost in the position of a bequest. Now, if A is said to be in a position to exercise undue influence over B, according to Indian Law (see section 16 of the Contract Act) A must be in a position to dominate the will of B. If when in such a position of dominance, he uses it to obtain an unfair advantage over B, the transaction brought about by such use is voidable by B. Though the expression "dominate the will of another" is an expression of wide import and though I am aware that Courts do not like to give exact and exhaustive definitions of undue influence any more than they like to give exact and exhaustive definition of fraud, I think the expression "undue influence" cannot be properly used unless either, (1) confidence has been reposed on the person charged (A in our illustration), as where the latter is a solicitor, trustee, guardian, etc., or (2) unless the influence of the man A is such that B stands in some sort of respect, awe or fear of him such as a child towards its parent or a pupil towards a spiritual preceptor and so on, so that the idea of displeasing A by a refusal to submit to his wishes puts B in fear of prospective injury to his secular or spiritual welfare and happiness. An ordinary servant and dependent like the 1st defendant could not have had and is not proved to have had any such influence over the late Rajah and it is impossible to hold that the Rajah stood in awe or fear of the 1st defendant's displeasure. On the other hand, the letters, Exhibits E to H, L and N, show that the 1st defendant was a mere servile flatterer and dependant of the Rajah and not a person in a position of authority to dominate the will of the Rajah. He was not in a position of trust and confidence such as a solicitor holds over his client. The numerous cases quoted where a father obtains a gift from his son who had just attained majority or a gosha lady makes a gift to the manager who manages all her affairs and persuades her to believe that the gift made to him is only nominal or a solicitor obtains a gift from his client or a spiritual preceptor from his pupil or a person who is nominally a servant but has really made himself so indispensable to his master for the latter's comforts that the master has really become the servant's servant, have all no relevancy in arriving at a conclusion on the facts of this case. From the evidence, I am clear that the 1st defendant's position towards the late Rajah was not such that the Rajah's volition could be overborne by or could be subjected to the domination of the 1st defendant's will. Undue influence and coercion were not clearly distinguished in the old English Law, and though there is a well defined distinction now, the two are similar in this respect that their legal effect in making transactions voidable depends on the will of the person subjected to either being influenced to such a degree as to lose its freedom. I do not intend to quote many cases. The only Indian case which I need quote is Ismail Mussaiee Mookerdum v. Hafiz Boo (2), a passage from which is applied to the facts of this case by my learned brother in the judgment to be pronounced by him. There is an English case Taylor v. Johnston (3) which was a case not of a bequest but of a gift inter vivos like the present. It was a case where a young woman of twenty made a gift to a relative with whom she had been residing from her father's death for a period of five months until her own death, and to whom she became greatly attached. It was held that the gift was not invalid. It cannot, in my opinion, be stated in this case that the 1st defendant stood in a fiduciary relation to the late Rajah on the date of the gift-deed. When the late Rajah was 27 years of age and the Rajah's benefactions ranged over wide areas from the Sringeri Mattam in the Mysore Province to wealthy Nattukottai Chetties such a contention seems to me to be extravagant. In Howes v. Bishop (4) it was held that the doctrine of undue influence could not be invoked in favour of a wife who was influenced by the fact that her husband wanted money and who, therefore, joined in executing a promissory-note, though the Jury found that her signature was procured by the influence of her husband. The case of Nedby v. Nedby (5) is also instructive. There a deed was prepared by the husband's solicitor and was executed by the wife in the presence of two of the clerks of the solicitor and it was not read over to her. The wife was agitated and distressed and she signed and agreed to sign in a reluctant manner and yet the Vice-Chancellor refused to set aside the deed in the suit brought by her. There is no evidence at all in this case that the late Rajah executed the gift unwillingly or through fear of any unpleasant consequence if he refused to execute it, or even that the 1st defendant made the late Rajah uncomfortable by excessive importunities. I, therefore, agree with the lower Court that the gift-deed of June 1895 is not vitiated by undue influence. This is sufficient for the disposal of the appeal. I may even go further and say that the plaintiff did not even allege that the older lease deed of 1894, Exhibit C, for 40 years' term was invalid and the term of 40 years mentioned therein not having expired, the present suit for possession ought to have been summarily dismissed on that sole ground.

I shall now take up the second finding relating to the agreement of 1902. Section 36 of the Trusts Act says that the trustee may do all acts which are reasonable and proper for the protection or benefit of the trust property (subject, of course, to the restrictions contained in the instrument of trust). Section 43 of the Trusts Act says that a sole acting trustee authorised to execute the trusts and powers of the instrument of trust may compromise, compound, abandon, submit to arbitration, or otherwise settle any claim whatever relating to the trust. The Dewan Trustee as the sole acting trustee was, therefore, empowered to compromise and compound the claim made by the 1st defendant under the gift-deed which had been in force for nearly 7 years on the date of Exhibit II. The late Rajah had not set it aside before the date of the settlement deed. The late Rajah died in December 1903. The suit to set it aside was prima facie clearly barred on the date of Exhibit B and the Dewan Trustee acted, in my opinion, very prudently in getting the 1st defendant to sign Exhibit B agreeing to pay half the Poruppu. I, therefore, disagree with the lower Court in its conclusion (for which it gives no reason in its judgment) that the compromise was beyond the powers of the trustee and was invalid. See as to powers of executors and trustees to compromise, Houghton, In re, Hawley v. Blake (6)].

Lastly, dealing with the question of limitation and assuming for the sake of argument that the gift-deed, Exhibit I, was brought about by undue influence, Article 91 of the Limitation Act clearly applies to this suit, as the plaintiff cannot obtain possession without setting aside the gift-deed which is not a void transaction but only voidable. [See Janki Kunwar v. Ajit Singh (7)]. The limitation period is three years from when the facts entitling the person to have the instrument cancelled or set aside become known to him. Now the late Rajah who executed the instrument knew the facts perfectly from the very date of execution and hence the cause of action arose at once in June 1895. I need not say that when once time begins to run it does not cease to run, except under very peculiar circumstances which do not exist in this case. In June 1898, the gift-deed became unavoidable thereafter through the expiry of three years' limitation period. I do not deny that undue influence might be set up as a defence by a donor to the suit brought by the donee for possession even after the period of limitation, but that is not the case here.

It was argued by Mr. S. Srinivasa Iyengar that the cause of action arises only when the undue influence ceases. I considered this question in a case brought by the plaintiff himself, Raja Rajeswara Dorai v. Arunachellam Chettiar (1), and expressed the opinion that the cessation of undue influence has no relevancy on the question of limitation unless, of course it, could be brought under the heading of fraud so as to attract the operation of section 18 of the Limitation Act. It was, however, argued that in Sri Kishan Lal v. Kashmiro (8) their Lordships of the Privy Council expressed such an opinion. I do not think there is anything in that case which supports the contention of Mr. Srinivasa Iyengar. The facts there were very peculiar. A single sentence in the judgment at page 374* is relied on, namely, that time would not under the circumstances of that particular case begin to run against a widow (defendant) even if she had to bring a suit to set aside the disputed transaction till her husband's brother's influence ceased at his death. She had executed an arbitration agreement under the undue influence of her husband's brother and she set up the undue influence as a defence and succeeded. But as a mere obiter dictum their Lordships of the Privy Council said that even if she had sued as plaintiff, she would not be barred. The facts were very peculiar and their Lordships found there was fraud practised upon her, and that she did not have full knowledge of the facts and the rights arising out of these facts till her husband's brother died. Thus, even that obiter dictum was based, not on the ground that the death of the husband's brother and the cessation of his influence was the date for the terminus a quo of the cause of action under the law, but that it was on the ceasing of the undue influence that the real state of facts entitling the widow to have the instrument cancelled became known to her. (Though the third column of the Article 91 uses the word "plaintiff," the "plaintiff" includes his predecessor. See definition given in section 2 of the Limition Act). Therefore, time began to run in this case as soon as the facts were known to the late Rajah. The suit is again hopelessly barred even if we take the date of the knowledge of the Dewan Trustee or any of his successors as the date of the cause of action. In this connection I wish to express with great respect my dissent from the decision in Tanto v. Girjadhar (9) which has been relied on by Rustomji and Mitra (the former at page 327 of his book and the latter at page 1003 of his book) in their valuable treatises on Limitation that the onus of proof is on the defendant to prove that the plaintiff's knowledge arose more than 3 years before suit. The analogy of a defendant relying on Article 127 of the Limitation Act against the claim of an undivided co-parcener for partition, which analogy was relied on by Mr. Sreenivasa Iyengar is, in my opinion, entirely irrelevant and misleading. There is not a tittle of evidence that either the Dewan Trustee, Mr. Venkataranga Iyer, a very capable retired Judicial Officer who was the trustee for 11 years till September 1903, or Mr. Varadaraja Sarma (Deputy Collector) who was the Dewan Trustee after him till May 1908 or Mr. Kista Rao who was the Dewan Trustee till April 1910 was ever subjected to any undue influence. In the result, I agree with the lower Court that the suit is barred.

A very ingenious argument was finally put forward, namely, that the 40 years lease-deed, Exhibit C of 1894, was superseded by the registered gift-deed of June 1895, that this gift deed in its turn was superseded by the compromise agreement of 1902, and that if the plaintiff is able to set aside this compromise-deed of 1902 he is entitled to possession as the earlier two deeds had been superseded once for all, each earlier deed having been superseded by its successor beyond resurrection. I have already found that the compromise-deed of 1902 is a valid deed. But even assuming that it is invalid, I cannot accept the argument that the defendant, who is trying to protect his possessory rights, cannot fall back upon his earlier title-deed if the later title-deed which was intended to supersede the earlier title-deed was found to be invalid or was invalidated.

I am clear that if the compromise deed is set aside, the parties are clearly remitted to their original rights as they stood before the compromise. The effect of setting aside a compromise brought about by fraud and collusion was considered by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Khojooroonissa v. Rowshan Jehan (10), and differing from the Calcutta High Court, their Lordships say that all rights which were attempted to be settled by the compromise were revived on both sides when the compromise was set aside. A similar question was considered by Mookerjee, J. in Surjiram Marwari v. Barhamdeo Persad (11) where he holds that if a mortgage right was intended to be merged in a conveyance and the conveyance proved ineffectual, the right under the mortgage revived. In Har Chandi Lal v. Sheoraj Singh (12) a mortgagee sued to enforce his mortgage of 1876, though he had accepted two later deeds of 1887 in satisfaction of his mortgage and even though he had handed over the document of 1876 to the mortgagor. It was argued in defence that the mortgage of 1876 was destroyed by the two deeds of 1887 and could not be revived. Their Lordships, however, say: "But the original intention of the mortgagee was entirely frustrated by the fact that the two deeds were held not to be binding on Musammat Nandan, and it does not appear to their Lordships to be consistent with equity or good conscience that the first three defendants, having successfully maintained that the transaction embodied in the two deeds of 1887 was not binding on Musammat Nandan, and consequently did not bind them as heirs of Jai Chand, should now claim the benefit of such transaction as a release of the mortgage of the 13th November 1876." Thus their Lordships hold in the above case that even defendants could not plead against the revival of a former deed when the later deeds intended to supersede it were invalidated at their instance. A fortiori it is clear that a plaintiff could not invalidate a compromise-deed and yet contend that the rights under the gift-deed which were intended to be superseded by the compromise-deed could not be revived even as a shield by the defendants. In fact, the matter seems to me to be unarguable.

In the result I would dismiss the appeal with costs. We certify for two Vakils for each side.

SPENCER, J.—This suit was instituted by the Rajah of Ramnad to recover possession of the village of Nedunthulasi which was gifted away by his father, the late Rajah, by a permanent rent-free gift-deed dated June 2nd, 1895, to the 1st defendant. It is alleged in the plaint that the 1st defendant in his capacity of Javab Navis (private secretary) to the Rajah exercised undue influence over his master, a man of weak will, to obtain this and other benefits for himself. About a month after this gift the late Rajah entered into an arrangement on July 12th, 1895 (Exhibit IV) by which he handed over his estate upon trust to be managed by a pensioned Subordinate Judge named Rao Bahadur Venkataranga Iyer (styled a Dewan Trustee) with one co adjutor, Mr. Chentsal Rao, C. I. E., and with a Committee of three, consisting of himself and two distinguished legal practioners who had power to remove the trustee or the co-adjutor and to fill their places when they became vacant. The estate was to be thus managed till the present Rajah attained the age of 21, which happened on June 3rd 1910, within 3 years before the filing of the plaint in this suit.

On April 24th 1902, the said Dewan Trustee together with the two lessees of the Ramnad Estate entered into an amicable arrangement of compromise (Exhibit II) with the 1st defendant whereby he was to continue to enjoy the village of Nedunthulasi hereditarily and in perpetuity, but instead of its being rent free he was to pay a Poruppu or quit rent of Rs. 402-1-10 annually which amounted to a moiety of the sarasari or average rent of Rs. 804-3-7. The present suit, whether its object be to set aside the gift-deed of 1895 or the settlement of 1902, is hopelessly time barred under Art. 91 of the Limitation Act.

Mr. S. Srinivasa Iyengar argued that the later transaction having superseded the earlier gift, the plaintiff need not sue to set aside the gift but he could within 3 years of attaining majority repudiate the acts of his trustee if they were improvident and injurious to his interests.

When this case came before a Bench of this High Court on a previous occasion, the learned Chief Justice and Seshagiri Iyer, J. sent it back for fresh consideration and for further evidence on the questions whether the undue influence to which the Rajah was alleged to have been subjected, continued to affect the succeeding trustee as was alleged in paragraph 22 of the plaint, and whether the transfer (Exhibit II) was inconsistent with the duties of the trustee.

The Subordinate Judge has now found that "there is no evidence, much less any allegation that the succeeding trustees were subject to any undue influence"; he also observed that it was "difficult to hold that the suit was in time in view of the fact that there was no evidence or even any allegation that the late Rajah continued to be under the undue influence of the 1st defendant for 8 years after the gift till he died in 1903."

Accordingly, it is not now contended in appeal that the trustee, Venkataranga Iyer, was under undue influence. It is only argued that his act in confirming the Rajah's grant, though with the modification that quit rent was to be paid, was an improvident act and in excess of his powers, as he should have sued to have the gift set aside if he had realised his responsibilities and if he had been aware of the facts which would have enabled him to succeed in such a suit.

Now, Rao Bahadur Venkataranga Iyer had been given facility for obtaining the advice of that distinguished Hindu gentleman of unquestioned probity, Mr. Chentsal Rao, C. I. E., on all important matters connected with his trust. I am of opinion that he may have realised the difficulty of establishing in a Court of law that the Rajah was actuated by undue influence when he made the gift of this village, and the further difficulty of proving that that influence prevailed so long as to excuse the failure of those in whom the management of the estate vested for 3 years after 1895 to make any attempt to revoke the gift. In 1902 he may have bona fide considered that half a loaf was better than no bread and that, therefore, in the best interests of the minor he was well advised to save at least Rs. 402 a year out of the village in view of the improbability of a suit to recover the whole village intact being successful. It was thus a compromise of a doubtful claim. He was acting within his powers under section 43 of the Trusts Act, read with the proviso to the section which relates to sole trustee and with clause 22 of the deed of trust. The meaning of the words "sole acting trustee" occurring in section 43 of the Indian Trusts Act becomes clear from a reference to section 21 of the English Trustees Act of 1893. If the instrument creating the trust authorises a sole trustee to execute the trusts and powers thereof he is termed a sole acting trustee when he enters into an agreement of composition or other arrangement.

But it is argued that the deed of gift of 1895 bears on its face traces of undue influence because it contains false statements, (1) that the village was only worth Rs. 7,000, whereas it is, on the statement of D. W. No. 1 now worth about Rs. 30,000, and must have then been worth about Rs. 20,000, (2) that the Rajah was acting in deference to his mother's wishes though she had died 2 months before, and (3) that the donee had been working for 12 years without any salary. It is further argued that under section 16 (3) of the Indian Contract Act the burden of proving that the gift to 1st defendant was not induced by undue influence lay on the defendant.

The case of Bridgemen v. Green (13) is cited as an instance of undue influence exercised by a servant over his master. The circumstances of that case were exceptional. Conveyances which purported to have been made for valuable consideration were held to be not supportable even as gifts when their execution was obtained by fraud and undue influence. There is no presumption that all servants wield such influence as Green wielded over their masters, or that all masters are so weak-willed as Bridgemen. The evidence in the present case tends to show that the late Rajah was emotional and "generous to a fault" but not of weak intellect or irresponsible for his actions. It has not been proved that the 1st defendant was in a position to dominate the will of the Rajah or that the transaction was an unconscionable one. The 1st defendant already had a lease of this village for which he had to pay a Poruppu of Rs. 600 and odd. The statement in the gift-deed that the Rajah's mother wished to confer some benefit on the 1st defendant for his services is not shown to be false, and the fact that the occasion was that of the mother's second marigam makes it probable that the Rajah was actuated by pious feelings evoked by his mother's memory when he made the gift. To adopt the words of Sir Arthur Wilson when delivering the judgment of the Privy Council in Ismail Mussajee Mookerdum v. Hafiz Boo (2) but substituting the words 'servant' for 'daughter' and 'master' for 'mother', the circumstances of this gift may well be summed up in these words :—

"The mere relation of servant to master, of course, in itself suggests nothing in the way of special influence or control. The evidence seems.....quite insufficient to establish any general case of domination on the part of the servant and subjection of the master, such as to lead to a presumption against any transaction between the two. With regard to the actual transactions in question, there is no evidence whatever of undue influence brought to bear upon them" Now looking at the facts of this transaction in the same light as they have been presented at the trial of this suit, the Dewan Trustee with his co-adjutor having the resigned Rajah with his Committee of lawyers behind them may well have doubted the practicability of getting a Court of Justice to undo what had been done and so they may have allowed the claim to become barred by time and finally to have made the best terms possible out of a bad case. The result of that settlement is Exhibit II in which it is recited that the trustee and the lessees in consideration of the costs, trouble, and inconvenience that both parties might be put to if proceedings were instituted in Court in respect of the deed of June 2nd, 1895, as well as of the uncertainty of the result of litigation and other facts, had decided to have the dispute settled amicably and have entered into the arrangement detailed therein.

That arrangement, in my opinion, cannot now be legally set aside. Even if the plaintiff could now succeed in setting it aside his position would be worse, as he would then be confronted with the more formidable obstacle of the absolute gift by his father to 1st defendant. His suit to set aside the gift is long out of time. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Calcutta Rent Act (III B. C. of 1920), s. 11—"Tenant," meaning of—Monthly tenant—Tenancy determined before, but ejectment suit pending at, passing of Act—Tenant, whether within the meaning of "tenant" in section.

The word "tenant" in section 11 of the Calcutta Rent Act as shown by the language of section 12 includes the case of a monthly tenant whose tenancy is determined by regular notice before, but against whom an ejectment suit is pending at, the date of the coming into operation of the said Act. [p. 362, col. 2.]

Mr. S. N. Banerjee, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. M. N. Kanjilal, for the Defendants.

JUDGMENT.—In this case there must be a decree for ejectment. The suit was brought for ejectment on the 3rd February 1920, and it appears, and, indeed, it is admitted, that the plaintiff on the 12th August 1919 took an assignment from Luchminarain Sadani for a term granted by an Indenture bearing date the 20th September 19 8 and made between the Archbishop of Calcutta and Luchminarain Sadani. The defendant firm Messrs. Lalbehari Dutt and Sons had been in occupation of two rooms in the premises for sometime before. Luchminarain Sadani was granted his lease. Luchminarain Sadani raised the rent to Rs. 175 per month. After the plaintiff took an assignment of the term the defendants paid that rent to the plaintiff and took two receipts for the month of August and the month of September 1919. They began to fall into arrears from the month of October 1919 and, in point of fact, they paid no rent at all until the time when, in June of this year, 1921, they paid into the hands of the Rent Controller under the Rent Act a sum of over Rs. 3,000, being the rent from October 1919 until May of this year. In the meantime, on the 3rd February, this suit was instituted. On the 26th April 1920 the written statement was filed. On or about the 5th May the Rent Act came into force in Calcutta What has happened is, that, notwithstanding the Rent Act, no amendment of pleadings has taken place and the suit in some way, which I do not quite understand, comes on now in June 1921 before me as a short cause. Prior to the Rent Act the position was shortly this. The defendants, as they quite admit, were monthly tenants. In November they got more than a month's notice determining their tenancy at the end of December, and at the end of December, therefore, the landlord, in this case, the plaintiff, was entitled to re-entry. That position is the position pleaded in the plaint with this exception that the plaint contains some irrelevant matters purporting to explain why the plaintiff desired to have his premises back again. Before the Rent Act came into force it was, so far as I know, entirely irrelevant for the landlord, whose tenancy had been properly determined by a notice of quit, to explain why he wanted to have his rights. The written statement, however, deals with certain matters by way of showing that the purpose of repairs which the landlord had alleged was not one which made it necessary for the landlord to be allowed to re-enter. When the Rent Act came into force the matter took a different complexion. Nothing was done to put the pleadings into order, and before me at the opening of the case the landlord desired to maintain that he came within the proviso to section 11 of the Rent Act, as being a landlord who required the premises for the purpose of building or re-building. That matter has not been enquired into by me for the reason that it did not appear to me probable that this course would be necessary. If it had been necessary, I should certainly have, on some terms, allowed the defendants an opportunity of investigating into that question. However, Mr. Kanjilal, who has very ably conducted the case for the defendants, has offered me on the question of the Rent Act the issue as to whether the defendants have fulfilled the conditions of section 11. Undoubtedly, as I am giving him leave to raise the Rent Act, he has to show that he has fulfilled those conditions So far as they are concerned, the first question is, whether the defendants here are within the meaning of the words "so long as the tenant pays rent to the full extent allowable by this Act." Mr. Banerji for the plaintiff takes the point that in this case the tenancy had been determined at the end of 1919, so that in May 1920, he says, the defendants, were mere trespassers. When one comes to consider the meaning to be attached to the word "tenant," one has the definition under section 2 to guide one. That states "any person by whom or on whose account rent is payable for any premises." In answer to that Mr. Banerji naturally says that mesne profits are not rents. What a trespasser has to pay for his trespass, is not rent. Therefore, he puts the problem before me whether the defendant company are within the meaning of section 11 at all. I think the defendant company are within the meaning of "tenant" in section 11 and are tenants in the special sense in which that word is used. It seems to me that this is shown by section 12 which contemplates the case of a person who has had an order made against him for recovery of possession of property before the operation of the Rent Act, and it goes on to say that if the Court is of opinion that the order or decree would not have been made if this act had been in operation, the Court can even yet give relief. In strictness of language, decree for the recovery of possession of property is never made against a tenant. If there has been a tenancy and the decree is upon a forfeiture, it is on the footing that the term was forfeited either before suit or at the latest by the issue of the writ. In the same way against a tenant at will or a tenant-on-sufferance, the issue of the writ would determine the tenancy. So far as I know, it is never correct that a decree for recovery of possession should go against a person who is in strict sense a tenant. Mr. Kanjilal has drawn my attention to the fact that in the English Rent Act the word "tenant" has been given a very special and specially wide meaning. I should say that persons in the position of the defendants are not outside the scope of section 11 on the ground that they are not tenants.

I now come to the question whether the defendants here have not been shown to be hit by sub-section 5 of section 11. The position was that, when the Rent Act came into force, they were in arrear with their rent since October 1919, and until June of 1921, when they paid money to the Rent Controller, they did nothing in the way of paying rent at all.

Sub-section 5 is intended, as I think, to give persons who are tenants three months within which they may pay up and put themselves in the position of being entitled to claim the benefits of the Rent Act. If a person is in arrear in May 1920 with his rent, he still has three months in which he can pay up those arrears under the first part of that sub-section. Three months in this case would take us to August 1920, as a matter of fact the 5th or 4th. By that time this defendant had done nothing to pay up any of the arrears that were standing over since October 1919. He says with regard to that two things. First of all, he says, it was for the plaintiff by the custom to send and collect rent, that the durwan never came, that the plaintiff never came although the defendants were asking him to come and collect their own rent. The plaintiff's story is that he went for the rent on some three occasions and could not get the rent. Of these two stories I have no hesitation at all in believing the plaintiff and rejecting the story of the defendant.

Then it is said that in June 1920 a letter was received from a Firm of Hastamull-Chunilal claiming that the plaintiff was not the proper person to be paid the rent. As a matter of fact, Luchminarain, the previous landlord, had told the defendants himself that he was assigning to the plaintiff. The defendants had paid rent in respect of two months at least to the plaintiff and accepted his receipt. Further, it appears now that some body had a quarrel with Luchminarain, namely, Luchmichand, a partner in the Firm of Hastamull Chunilal. Because this gentleman in June sent from Bikaneer this letter to the defendant the defendant says that he did not pay his rent at all to any body until June of 1921. No proof has been adduced before me of any letter written by or on behalf of the defendants in June of 1920 to the plaintiff asking about this matter or seeking to pay the money into Court or into the hands of any neutral party.

I regret to say that, as the Legislature has seen fit to forbid all the benefits of the Rent Act to any tenant who has not within three months from 6th May 1920 paid all arrears of rent due by him in respect of the said premises, it is not possible for me to hold that the defendants are entitled to them. It may be said that on the plaintiff's view after the beginning of 1920 what was due was not strictly rent but more strictly mesne profits; but, as I have pointed out, the defendant cannot claim the benefits of this section at all except by saying that he is in the position of a tenant within the meaning of the section. and, of course, he cannot have it both ways. He cannot claim, as he does claim and has all along claimed, to be in possession not as trespasser but as a tenant, and also claim to be under the words "so long as the tenant pays rent in section 11," and also for the purpose of sub-section 5 say that it is not rent at all. The second half of sub-section 5 is this "and also unless he pays the rent due by him to the full extent allowable by this Act within the time fixed in the contract with his landlord, or, in the absence of any such contract, by the 15th day of the month next following that for which the rent is payable." In the same way also the defendants here can make no pretence that they has done anything of the sort.

Under sub-section 4 where a landlord refuses to accept the rent, the tenant may deposit it with the Controller within a fortnight of its becoming due. It is said that he is not bound to deposit it with the Controller. That is perfectly true. He is not bound to bring himself within sub-section 5 at all; but if he wants to come under sub-section 5, so as not to lose the benefits of the Rent Act, then, where the landlord refuses to accept it as rent, he may pay to the Controller and thus preserve his rights.

In these circumstances, it seems to me that it is entirely unnecessary to go into the question of whether these premises are bona fide required for the purpose of building or re-building.

Mr. Kanjilal has argued that the question under sub section 5 is a mere question of non-payment of rent and that equity can relieve against any forfeiture for non payment of rent. I must say at once that that contention is entirely unfounded, If the defendant, apart from the Rent Act, had had a term, say 2, 3 or 5 years, and the landlord was proposing to forfeit that term by reason of non-payment of rent, equity could relieve against that forfeiture. But, apart from the Rent Act, if he had not a term but was only a monthly tenant and had his month's notice, there would have been no equity on the part of the defendant to insist upon the Court giving him any larger interest in the property than he had agreed to with his landlord.

That being the position apart from the Rent Act, the defendants would have no defence here at all. The Rent Act puts the tenant who complies with its conditions into much the same position as a tenant who is entitled to a term. At all events it gives him some fixity of tenure so long as the Rent Act is in force; but that privilege is given to a tenant who pays his rent and performs his conditions and to no once else.

The result is that, not being within section 11 by reason of the non-payment of rent, the defendant has got no equity at all to ask the Court to give him the special relief provided by the Rent Act in the plain teeth of the section which says that such relief should go only to the tenant who has paid.

As regards the question of ejectment this is now towards the end of June, and I do not propose that the defendants should be ejected until the end of July. This is reasonable, The defendants must pay the rent for July as a condition. They will, in any case, have till the 15th July. If by that time they pay Rs. 175 for July rent they will get till the end of July.

As regards the amount of mesne profits, there does not seem to be dispute.

As regards the money that has been paid to the Rent Controller, there must be some sensible arrangement for withdrawing that.

The plaintiff will get costs on scale No. 2.

Under section 51 of the Civil Procedure Code which relates to procedure in execution, the general powers of a Court executing decrees enable it to order execution by attachment and sale or by sale without attachment of any property. Therefore, the Court has power to sell property not ordered to be sold by the decree without first causing an attachment of the same. [p 367, col. 2.]

A sale of the property, ordered to be sold by public auction in execution of a decree, within 30 days of the proclamation, although clearly an irregularity, has not the effect of making the sale a nullity without proof of substantial injury thereby to the judgment-debtor. [p. 367, col. 2.]

Letters Patent Appeal from the following judgment of Mr. Justice Das in Miscellaneous Appeal No. 131 of 1921, analagous to Civil Revision No. 302 of 1921, dated the 6th March 1922:

DAS, J.—It is unfortunate that the point which is now argued before me, and on which, in my opinion, the appellant is entitled to succeed, was not placed before me on the last occasion; and the result is that I am compelled to set aside the judgment of the learned Judicial Commissioner of Ranchi, though I do not differ from the view which has been taken by him on the point which was argued before him. It is now argued that the judicial sale was a nullity inasmuch as the procedure laid down in the Code of Civil Procedure was not adopted. Now I find that Mr. Reid, in his appellate judgment, which was set aside by this Court, says that one of the points which was argued before him was that the decree-holder ignored the provision of sub-section (2) of section 210 in so far as he failed to get a written permission from the Deputy Commissioner to sell this property. He then discussed the point and came to the conclusion that the sale was bad inasmuch as the proper procedure as laid down in section 210 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act was not followed. I think it is quite clear from the judgment of Mr. Reid that what was sold by the decree-holder in execution of his rent-decree was not the property in respect of which the rent-decree had been obtained but some other property. Now, if that be so, then section 210 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act applies and not section 208. Section 210, sub section (2) provides as follows:—"Notwithstanding anything contained in sub-section (1), a decree-holder may, with the permission of the Deputy Commissioner, granted for reasons to be recorded in writing, proceed against any other property, moveable or immoveable, of the judgment-debtor, without first making application for the sale of the tenure or holding in respect of which the arrear has accrued." Sub-section (3) then provides that property referred to in sub-sections (1) and (2) may be brought to sale if immoveable, in the manner provided in sections 237, 23[illegible], 274 to 27[illegible], 278 to 284, 286, 287, 289 to 29[illegible], 305 to 310, 312 to 316, 318, 319, 334 and 335 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In other words, if the decree-holder chooses to proceed against any property, moveable or immoveable, of the judgment-debtor other than the tenure in respect of which the rent-decree is obtained, he must first obtain the permission of the Deputy Commissioner and in the next place proceed under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. Now if the decree-holder chooses to proceed against property other than the tenure in respect of which the rent decree is obtained he chooses to execute the decree not as a rent decree but as a money decree and if that be so attachment of the property is essential before the sale can take place. Section 274, which now corresponds with O. XXI, r. 54, is expressly mentioned in section 210 and there are numerous decisions to the effect that there is no jurisdiction to sell a property in execution of a money-decree which has not in fact been attached. A mortgage-decree stands on a different footing, for that which has been mortgaged or is charged with the payment of a sum of money need not again be attached. Now it was in fact found by Mr. Reid in his appellate judgment that the decree-holder did not attach the property before proceeding to sell the property. If that be so, then the sale is a nullity.

I must accordingly set aside the judgment of the learned Judicial Commissioner and declare that the sale which has taken place is wholly inoperative so as to affect the interest of the appellant. As the point was not argued before me on the last occasion, I think that the appellant must pay the costs of this appeal and the costs of the hearing before the Judicial Commissioner to the respondent.

No order need be passed on the revision petition.

Messrs. J. Prasad and A. Upadhya, for the Appellant.

Messrs. N. C. Sinha and B. Prasad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—This is an appeal under clause 10 of the Letters Patent from a decision of Mr. Justice Das. It arises out of an application made by the respondents under section 213 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act to set aside a sale of their tenure in execution of a rent-decree obtained by the appellants, their landlords.

The decree was obtained in the year 1915. After one unsuccessful application to obtain execution the decree-holders made a fresh application in July 1918 asking for realisation of the decretal amount by attachment and sale of the judgment-debtor's moveable property and in case the decree still remained unsatisfied by attachment and sale of their immoveable property, namely, an 8-annas interest in village Mohanpore. This was not the tenure or holding in respect of which the rent decree was obtained. It appears that an application was made under section 210 (2) to the Deputy Collector who had the powers of a Deputy Commissioner for permission to sell the property in question in this appeal without first making an application for the sale of the tenure or holding in respect of which the arrears of rent had accrued. Permission was granted but it does not appear that the Deputy Collector's reasons were recorded. Section 210 (3) of the Act provides that property referred to in clause (2) may be brought to sale, if immoveable in the manner provided in the sections therein named of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882 including section 234, which corresponds to O. XXI, r. 64 of the present Code, which gives the Executing Court power to order that any property attached by it and liable to sale, or such portion thereof as may seem necessary to satisfy the decree, shall be sold and the proceeds or a sufficient portion thereof paid to the party entitled under the decree to receive the same. No preliminary attachment of the property was in fact made but the judgment-debtors were served with notice of the sale and were aware of the date thereof. The sale having been advertised took place on the 9th May 1919. Two of the judgment-debtors, the respondents in the present appeal, filed an objection under section 213. Their grounds of objection were (1) that the property sold belonged to them only and not to the other judgment-debtors and (2) that there had been a material irregularity in publishing the sale. The first ground of objection was given up and we are no longer concerned with it. In support of the second ground they contended that there had been no preliminary attachment as required by the Civil Procedure Code and further that the sale was held within less than 30 days from the date of notification. The Sub-Divisional Officer held that these irregularities were not material and further that the judgment-debtors had sustained no substantial injury by reason of the irregularities.

On appeal by the judgment-debtors to the Judicial Commissioner it was held that the failure of the Deputy Collector to record his reasons for permitting the sale and the failure to attach the property under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code as well as the fact of holding the sale within 30 days of the sale proclamation under O. XXI, r. 68 of the Civil Procedure Code were material irregularities and rendered the sale void. The learned Judicial Commissioner further found that there was substantial injury to the appellants, adding: "Although, in the view I take, such a finding is unnecessary. This injury resulted from the prejudice to their rights which to my mind must of necessity follow from the adoption of the shortened procedure."

A second appeal was preferred by the decree-holders to the High Court and was heard before Mr. Justice Das who held that mere non compliance with the provisions of O. XXI, r. 68 of the Civil Procedure Code does not ipso facto make the sale a nullity and that the sale should not be set aside without proof of substantial injury to the judgment-debtors. He further considered that the finding of the learned Judicial Commissioner as to substantial injury was not a proper finding in law as it was based upon the view that non-compliance with the rule mentioned necessarily prejudiced the right of the judgment-debtors. He accordingly set aside the order of the learned Judicial Commissioner and remanded the case to him for a decision according to law with directions to come to a definite finding as to whether the judgment-debtors sustained substantial injury and, if so, whether such injury was sustained by reason of the admitted irregularity. It would appear from this judgment that no point was taken before the learned Judge on behalf of the judgment-debtors that the sale was void either by reason of the non-attachment of the property or by failure of the Deputy Collector to record his reasons for permitting the sale under section 210 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act and it is not suggested before us now that these points were argued before him.

When the case went back on remand Mr. Foster had succeeded Mr. Reid as Judicial Commissioner of Chota Nagpur. Mr. Foster found that the irregularities complained of were material, as the sale was held 28 days instead of 30 days after the notice published in Court. The price fetched at the sale was considerably below the value set upon the property by the judgment debtors but there is no finding as to what the value of the property was. No evidence was produced to show that the low price was directly due to the irregularity, the judgment-debtors were present at the time of the sale and the learned Judicial Commissioner considered that if the property were worth Rs. 6,000 as they stated it was very unlikely that they could not have raised a loan of under Rs. 500 to save the property by depositing the decretal amount. He also considered that the absence of attachment and the fact that the sale was held within 30 days of the notice did not cause any substantial injury to the judgment-debtors. He accordingly dismissed the appeal. Again it should be pointed out that it was nowhere argued before Mr. Foster that the sale was void by reason of any irregularity which had taken place.

From this order the judgment debtors preferred a second appeal to the High Court which again came before Mr. Justice Das. The learned Judge did not differ from the conclusions of fact arrived at by the learned Judicial Commissioner but it was argued before him that the failure to attach the property before sale rendered the sale a nullity. The learned Judge acceded to this view and set aside the judgment of the learned Judicial Commissioner and declared that the sale was inoperative and ought to be set aside but as the point had not been argued before him on the previous occasion when he made the order of remand he ordered the judgment-debtors, the appellants before him, to pay the costs of that appeal and of the hearing before the Judicial Commissioner on remand.

From this decision the present appeal is brought by the decree-holders. Two points have been argued before us in support of the appeal (1) that the learned Judge, whose decision is now under appeal, ought not to have allowed the point, upon which his decision was based, to be taken as it had not been argued before him on the previous occasion, and (2) that the failure to attach the property although irregular does not render the sale void. In support of the first point it is argued that the order of remand which set aside the decree of the Judicial Commissioner was a final order from which an appeal would lie to a Division Bench and that, no appeal having been preferred from that decision on behalf of the judgment debtors, the learned Judge ought to have considered the point raised before him as precluded by his previous judgment, under the provisions of section 105 of the Civil Procedure Code. Assuming that an appeal lay from Mr. Justice Das I think that there is much force in the argument that where a point which goes to the root of the suit is not argued before an Appellate Court it must be taken to have been abandoned and if an appeal is permissible and no appeal is preferred the party who abandoned the point should not be allowed to re-open it subsequently in the same case. See Hansraj v. Bijai Ram Singh (1). It is unnecessary, however, to decide this question, as in the view I take of the second point the appellants must succeed.

In my opinion, the failure to attach the property before sale, although an irregularity under the Civil Procedure Code, does not render the sale null and void In Kishory Mohun Roy v. Mahomed Mujoffar Hosein (2) it was held that a sale is not to be considered a nullity merely by reason of the absence of any attachment. In that case the sale had been confirmed and a sale certificate granted before the question arose. In my opinion, this fact does not distinguish that decision from the present case, because if the sale was in fact a nullity by reason of the absence of attachment its subsequent confirmation could not make it valid. That case followed the earlier decision of Jackson, J. in Sharoda Moyee Burmonee v. Wooma Moyee Burmonee (3) which also held that an attachment was not an essential preliminary to an execution sale. The case of Kishory Mohun Roy v. Mahomed Mujoffar Hossein (2) was referred to with approval and followed by Woodroffe, J. in Hari Charan Singh v. Chandra Kumar Dey (4). The High Court at Allahabad has also held in Sheodhyan v. Bholanath (5) that the absence of an attachment prior to the sale of immoveable property in execution of a decree amounts to no more than a material irregularity and is not sufficient, unless substantial injury is caused thereby, to vitiate the sale. The object of the attachment is, as stated in that case, to bring the property under the control of the Court with a view to preventing the judgment debtor from alienating it, and the requirement that the order of attachment should be publicly proclaimed is merely one of the requirements of law for perfecting the attachment. The main object of the proclamation of the order is to give publicity to the fact that the sale of the particular property attached is in contemplation and to warn all persons against taking a transfer of it from the judgment-debtor to the prejudice of the rights of the decree-holder. It is difficult to see why the absence of attachment which is primarily in the interests of the decree-holder can prejudice the rights of the judgment debtor who has due notice of the sale.

It was contended, however, that the Court has no power to sell property not ordered to be sold by the decree unless such property has first been attached, and O. XXI r. 64 was relied upon in support of this argument. That rule no doubt gives the Court executing the decree power to order that any property attached by it and liable to sale shall be sold or only such portion thereof as may seem necessary to satisfy the decree. The object of this rule would appear to be to give the Court a discretion to sell the whole or a part of the attached property as it thinks fit, but under section 51 of the Code, which relates to procedure in execution, the general powers of a Court executing decrees enable it to order execution by attachment and sale or by sale without attachment of any property. It seems clear, therefore, that the jurisdiction of the Court to sell without attachment exists. Again the irregularity arising by reason of the sale within 30 days of the proclamation, although clearly an irregularity, has not the effect of making the sale a nullity without proof of substantial injury thereby to the judgment-debtor. It was so decided by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Tasadduk Rasul Khan v. Ahmad Husain (6).

The case of Raja Thakur Barmha v. Jiban Ram Marwari (7) was relied on by the respondents for the proposition that nothing could be sold at a Court sale except the property attached. The effect of that decision, however, as I read it, merely is that where property is in fact attached and sold under the description mentioned in the Schedule what is in fact sold is the property comprised within the description and not some other property which was not in fact attached and sold. In that case a six-annas share in a certain mahal, described as subject to a mortgage in the Schedule to which the attachment referred, was attached in execution and advertised for sale and eventually sold. Some months later the purchasers applied for a certificate of sale alleging that there had been a mistake in the Schedule which ought to have described the property as a six-annas unencumbered share Ten-annas were subject to the mortgage and six-annas were free and no doubt a mistake had been made. A sale certificate was granted by the Subordinate Judge with the altered description of property and a notification was issued in the Calcutta Gazette describing the property as unencumbered. This procedure was approved by the High Court, but on appeal to His Majesty in Council their Lordships held that that which is sold in a judicial sale of this kind can be nothing but the property attached and that property is conclusively described in and by the Schedule to which the attachment refers and that the effect of the certificate was to make the sale that of a property not attached which could not be sold in such proceedings. It was held that it was not a matter of mere misdescription which could be treated as an irregularity but one of identity and that an existing property accurately described in the Schedule had been sold, whereas the order of the Subordinate Judge granted a sale certificate which stated that another and different property had been purchased at the sale, and that what was done could not validate a sale of property which had not in fact taken place. The certificate was accordingly set aside. The decision is no authority for the proposition that if no attachment is in fact made the Court has no power to sell property at all.

It is true that in spite of the decisions already referred to of the Calcutta High Court that Court in the more recent case of Panchanan Das Majumdar v. Kunja Behari Mulo (8), decided in 1917, held that the Court has no jurisdiction to sell property in execution which has not been duly attached. In that case the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Rajа Thakur Barmha v. Jiban Ram Marwari (7) was relied upon in support of the decision but, as already stated, in my opinion, the decision of the Judicial Committee does not support the proposition there laid down. The High Court of Bombay in the case of Sorabji Coovarji v. Kala Raghunath (9) has also expressed the view that no sale can take place without attachment. In that case before the sale actually took place an appeal against the order for sale made by the Executing Court was preferred to the District Judge. Pending that appeal the property was sold. The District Judge dismissed the appeal but on second appeal to the High Court that Court set aside the sale considering that property could only be brought to sale after it had been duly attached and whilst it remained under attachment. That case, however, was complicated by the fact that before sale the decretal amount of the attaching decreeholders had been paid into Court and the property released from attachment but it was ordered nevertheless to be sold at the instance of other judgment-creditors who applied for rateable distribution of the money paid into Court and a further sale of the property which had been released but not re attached. In so far as that case and the later decision of the Calcutta High Court in Panchanan Das Majumdar v. Kunja Behari Malo (8) differ from the earlier decisions of the Calcutta High Court and the decisions of the Allahabad High Court already referred to, I prefer to follow the latter, which, in my view, express the correct principle. In my opinion this appeal should be allowed with costs here and in each of the Courts below and the order of the Sub-Divisional Officer rejecting the judgment-debtors' objection and affirming the sale should be restored.

NAURATAN LAL v. MRS. STEPHEN.

PATNA HIGH COURT.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL ORDER No. 103 OF 1921.

July 25, 1922.

Present:—Mr Justice Coutts and Mr. Justice Das.

NAURATAN LAL—DECREE-HOLDER—APPELLANT

versus

MRS. MARGARET ANNE STEPHEN AND OTHERS—JUDGMENT DEBTORS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47, O. XXI, rr. 58, 60—S. 47, scope of—Execution proceedings—Representative of party to suit—Attachment, objection to—Objection based on personal claim to property—Court, order of—Appeal.

Where qua the execution proceedings a person happens to be the representative of the judgment-debtor, any question raised by him can only be decided under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code. The distinction between a proceeding under section 47 and a proceeding under O. XXI, r. 8 is that all objections to attachment raised by a party to the suit in which the decree was passed, or his representative, come under section 47, but objections to attachment raised by a third party come under O. XXI, r. 58, Civil Procedure Code. [p. 370, cols. 1 & 2.]

Therefore, an order passed on objection raised by the representative of a party to the suit, although the claim to the property is set up by him in his own personal capacity and not as representing the judgment-debtor, must be deemed to be an order passed under section 47 and not under O. XXI, r. 60 of the Civil Procedure Code and as such is open to appeal. [p. 369, col. 2; p. 370, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

DAS, J.—This appeal arises out of an order passed by the learned Subordinate Judge, First Court, Muzaffarpur, dated the 14th March 1921 and the first question which we have to consider is whether the order passed by the learned Subordinate Judge was one under section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure or one under O. XXI, r. 60 of the Code.

On the 30th June 1909 the appellant recovered a decree against one Stephen for recovery of possession of certain properties and for ascertainment of mesne profits. In July 1909 Mr. Stephen executed a deed of trust, by which he transferred all the immoveable properties of which he was then possessed, to his wife, Mrs Margaret Anne Stephen, as trustee on her own behalf and on behalf of her minor children. The deed recited that the settlor was desirous of making a settlement of his share in the properties conveyed for the benefit of his wife and children. It is admitted that the deed of settlement of the 23rd July 1909 covered all the properties to which Mr. Stephen was entitled or of which he was in possession. Mr. Stephen died on the 15th January 1915, and the applicants respondents were substituted in the record of the suit as legal representatives of Mr. Stephen on the 26th June 1916. The Court which passed the decree proceeded to ascertain the amount of mesne profits payable to the decree-holder and on the 3rd March 1917 it found that about Rs. 15,000 was due to the decree-holder in respect of such mesne profits. It is to recover the sum awarded to him for and by way of mesne profits that the present execution proceedings were commenced by the decree-holder. On the 5th July 1920 Mrs. Stephen for herself and on behalf of her minor children presented a petition which purported to be a petition under section 47 and O. XXI, r. 58 of the Code by which they insisted that the properties attached in execution of the decree for mesne profits were their properties and not the properties of the judgment debtor and prayed that those properties be released from attachment. At the time when the petition of Mrs Stephen and her minor children was presented to the Court they were in the record of the proceedings as the legal representatives of Mr. Stephen.

The learned Subordinate Judge has come to the conclusion that the transaction which resulted in the deed of settlement was a bona fide transaction and has directed the properties to be released from attachment. If the order passed by the learned Subordinate Judge was an order under O. XXI, r. 60 of the Code, then no appeal lies from that order, but if, on the other hand, the order was one under section 47 of the Code, the order is appealable as a decree.

Section 47 of the Code provides that all questions arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, or their representatives, and relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree, shall be determined by the Court executing the decree and not by a separate suit. It has been held in cases far too numerous to mention that this section should receive the widest interpretation. It is not open to doubt that at the time when the execution proceedings were taken the respondents had been substituted in the record of the suit as the representatives of the judgment-debtor. The question raised in this application is a question that arises between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed or their representatives, and it undoubtedly relates to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree. It is no doubt claimed on behalf of the respondents that they have raised the question not as parties to the suit or as representatives of one of the parties to the suit, but as claiming in their own right and by a title paramount to that of the judgment-debtor. It has, however, been held that an objection taken by a person who has become the representative of the judgment-debtor in the course of the execution of a decree to the effect that the property attached in satisfaction thereof is his own property, and not held by him as such representative, is a matter cognizable only under section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure and not the proper subject matter of a separate suit by a party against whom an adverse order may have been passed. See Panchanun Bandopadhya v. Rabia Bibi (1). This view of the law has been affirmed by the Calcutta High Court in the later case of Ajo Koer v Gorak Nath (2). It appears to me that where qua the execution proceedings a person happens to be the representative of the judgment-debtor, any question raised by him can only be decided under section 47 of the Code. The distinction between a proceeding under section 47 and a proceeding under O. XXI, r. 58 is this: that all objections to attachment raised by a party to the suit in which the decree was passed or his representative come under section 47; but objections to attachment raised by a third party come under O. XXI, r. 58. In this case the objection was raised not by a third party but by the representatives of a party to the suit. In my opinion, then the order passed by the learned Subordinate Judge was an order under section 47 and is, therefore, appealable as a decree.

I now come to the merits. Section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act provides as follows:—"Every transfer of immoveable property, made with intent to defraud prior or subsequent transferees thereof for consideration, or co-owners or other persons having an interest in such property, or to defeat or delay the creditors of the transferor, is voidable at the option of any person so defrauded, defeated or delayed." Where the effect of any transfer of immoveable property is to defraud, defeat or delay any such person, and such transfer is made gratuitously, or for a grossly inadequate consideration, the transfer may be presumed to have been made with such intent as aforesaid. Nothing contained in this section shall impair the rights of any transferee in good faith and for consideration." Now in order to determine the question which has been raised in this appeal it is necessary to remember first that the trust deed was executed within one month of the decree passed against Mr. Stephen for the ascertainment of mesne profits payable by him to the decree-holder; and secondly, the deed of settlement has in fact put out of the reach of the decree holder every item of immoveable property to which the judgment-debtor was entitled or of which he was in possession. The learned Subordinate Judge has, however, come to the conclusion that the judgment debtor was at the time of the decree in a solvent position and that he was able to pay off any debts that he might have contracted. I regard this finding as a finding that the effect of the transfer was not to defraud, defeat or delay any creditor. It is, therefore, necessary to see whether his finding can be supported by the evidence in the record.

The learned Subordinate Judge has relied upon the evidence of Mrs. Stephen and on the following circumstances; first, upon the letter, Exhibit 2, dated the 29th January

(1) 17 C. 711; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 1016 (F. B.).

(2) 27 Ind. Cas. 321; 19 C. W. N. 517; 20 C. L. J. 481.

1910 which constitutes an admission by one Knowles to Mr. Stephen to the effect that he owed Mr. Stephen Rs. 26,109-11-3; secondly, upon the pass-book of Allahabad Bank which shows that in June 1912 two separate sums consisting of Rs. 1,040 and Rs. 17,450 were transferred to the account of Mrs. Stephen from the account of Mr. Stephen; thirdly, upon the fact that Mr. Stephen had several accounts with several Banks. I shall come to the evidence of Mrs. Stephen presently; but so far as the other circumstances relied upon by the learned Subordinate Judge are concerned, they do not, in my opinion, establish that on the 23rd July 1909 he was in insolvent circumstance. The letter of Mr. Knowles, Exhibit 2, is dated the 29th January 1910 and it appears to me that for the purpose of disposing of the point which has been raised in the case, it is not material to consider what the circumstances of Mr. Stephen were in 1910. Apart from this, all that the letter establishes is that there was a sum of money due to Mr. Stephen from Mr. Knowles. Mrs. Stephen's evidence establishes that this sum of money was due to Mr. Stephen on account of a share which he had in the business which was being managed by Mr. Knowles. Although Mrs. Stephen does not admit that the business has failed, she admits that the business never at any time paid anything substantial to Mr. Stephen I regard the letter of the 29th January 1910 as entirely irrelevant.

The extract from the pass book of the Allahabad Bank, Exhibit 3, upon which the learned Subordinate Judge relies, shows that a certain sum of money was transferred to the account of Mrs. Stephen from 4½ per cent. fixed deposit account. The learned Subordinate Judge has assumed without any evidence whatever that this sum of money was transferred to her account from the account of her husband. Mrs. Stephen did indeed make an attempt to establish that these sums of monies were transferred to her account from the account of Mr. Stephen; but she had to admit in cross-examination that the fixed deposit accounts were her own accounts and that there was no transfer to her account from the account of her husband. This was, therefore, not a circumstance on which the learned Subordinate Judge should have relied for coming to the conclusion that Mr. Stephen had funds out of which the demands of his creditors could have been met. The learned Subordinate Judge then says that Mr. Stephen had accounts with several Banks which presumably means that he had a large sum of money standing to his credit in several Banks. There is, however, no evidence on this point. All that Mrs. Stephen does say in her evidence is that she thinks that Mr. Stephen had a banking account in 1909, but that she does not know in what Bank he had an account. The learned Subordinate Judge has completely misunderstood the evidence on the point. Mrs. Stephen's evidence shows that she had several accounts in several Banks. She admits that she had no money of her own and that she started these accounts with monies given to her by her husband. Her evidence also shows that her husband was speculating in stocks and shares. Her husband's pass-books have not been produced in the case. It was possible for Mrs. Stephen to produce the pass-books of her husband if it be her case that he had several banking accounts. The evidence of Mrs. Stephen leaves no doubt in my mind that Mr. Stephen put all his money in the name of his wife and that at no time did Mr. Stephen have a banking account of his own. In my opinion, the learned Subordinate Judge was not justified in coming to the conclusion that Mr. Stephen was in a solvent condition in 1909. The trust-deed effectively put out of the reach of the decree-holder all the immoveable properties that Mr. Stephen had. So far as actual money is concerned, he put it all in the name of his wife while he was gambling in stocks and shares. Mrs Stephen has not shown that there was any fund against which the decree-holder could have proceeded for the realization of the money found due to him by the decree for mesne profits. The effect of the transfer of the 23rd July 1909 has undoubtedly been to defraud, defeat or delay the decree-holder. We must accordingly presume that the transfer was made with the intent to defraud, defeat or delay the creditors. The transfer was, as I have said before, made within one month of the decree and I have no doubt whatever in my mind that it was made with intent to defeat the decree-holder. Mrs. Stephen herself says in her evidence that when they heard that her husband had lost the suit which the decree-holder has instituted against him she and other people advised her husband to execute a deed to safeguard the interest of herself and her children. There is no apparent reason why he should have executed the trust-deed. Mrs. Stephen in her evidence says that her husband anticipated trouble with his step-mother and step-sister; but why he should have anticipated the trouble has not been made clear in the evidence. Mrs. Stephen does say that after the execution of the trust-deed she was in possession of the properties; but she admits that she has lost all the accounts dealing with the trust estate and that she has no counter-foils of the receipts granted by her to the tenants. She admits that she executed a power-of-attorney in favour of her husband to enter into all business transactions on her behalf. I have no doubt whatever that possession remained with Mr. Stephen notwithstanding the execution of the trust-deed. I hold that the trust deed of the 23rd July 1909 was a fraudulent device to defeat the appellant and that he is entitled to proceed with his execution proceedings notwithstanding that document. The transaction resulting in the execution of the trust-deed is, therefore, voidable at his option and the fact that he has instituted execution proceedings in respect of those properties establishes that he has exercised the option to avoid the transaction.

I would allow this appeal, set aside the order passed by the learned Subordinate Judge and direct that execution proceedings do proceed. The appellant is entitled to his costs throughout.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 11, 12—Unsoundness of mind—Presumption in favour of sanity—Temporary aberrations of intellect—Burden of proving insanity—Undue influence, what constitutes.

In all transactions there is a presumption in favour of sanity of the contracting parties, and the test of soundness of mind is, that a person entering into a transaction, is capable of understanding the business, and of forming a rational judgment as to its effect upon his interests. Where, therefore, in a suit challenging the validity of certain deeds, the plaintiff relies on unsoundness of mind, he must establish it sufficiently to satisfy this test Mere weakness of mind is not sufficient, nor is it necessary to prove utter mental darkness or congenital idiocy. Mistaking one person for another, dusting the wall, drinking tea from tea pot and mistaking grapes for pieces of stone indicate only temporary "aberrations of intellect" or temporary "insane delusions" and when occurring in isolated cases, few and far between, would not necessarily indicate that the person subject to them was incapable of managing his affairs. Where a deed of gift is impugned on the ground of undue influence, the mere circumstance that the donee always lived with the donor would not be sufficient to raise any presumption of the donee having dominated the will of the donor, in the execution of the deed in his favour, especially when it is shown that though the donor was very old and was losing the strength of his mind and body, he was able to exercise an independent and intelligent mind over what he was doing. JUDGMENT.

JWALA PRASAD, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of properties, moveable and immoveable, mentioned in Schedules 1, 2, 3 and 4 of the plaint, with the exception of the shares in Mouza Madarpur, Pargana Goa, Touzi No. 2559, and Chandpura, Touzi No. 2370, with respect to which the plaintiffs prayed for confirmation of their possession upon an adjudication of their right thereto and on invalidating the deeds mentioned in paragraphs 10 and 15 of the plaint.

The facts of the case have been fully and clearly given in the judgment of the Court below, which may safely be adopted for the purpose of this appeal. The following geneology will show the relationship of the parties :—

died on 26th January 1915.

Moulvi Ali Hasan.	Moulvi Muhammad Yakub, plaintiff No. 1.	Hafiz Muhammad Yusuf, defendant No. 6.	Moulvi Ishfaq.	Moulvi Abdul Razzak, plaintiff No. 2.	Moulvi Abdul Wahab, defendant No. 7.	Moulvi Abdul Aziz, died on 15th January 1912 = Musammat Bibi Azmat, defendant No. 5

Abdul Quddus, defendant No. 1.	Abdul Waddud, defendant No. 2.	Fakhruddin, defendant No. 3.	Bibi Zohra, defendant No. 4.	Mohiuddin.

The two plaintiffs are the sons of one Imdad Hossain. Defendants Nos. 1 to 3 are the sons, defendant No. 4 is the daughter, and defendant No. 5 is the widow, of Moulvi Abdul Aziz, the youngest son of Imdad Hossain. Defendants Nos. 6 and 7 are two other sons of Imdad Hossain. Imdad Hossain had two more sons with whom we are not concerned in this litigation. In all he had seven sons. He died on the 26th of January 1915, at the age of about 97 years. His wife had predeceased him in 1891. He had during his lifetime acquired considerable property by his own exertion. On the 17th of February 1877 he divided by a deed of partition, (Exhibit 14), the bulk of the properties acquired by him up to that time amongst all his seven sons keeping some of the properties for himself. Moulvi Abdul Aziz, however, lived with his father, while all the other sons lived separately from him.

The plaintiffs' case is that Abdul Aziz managed his own properties as well as the properties and business of his father from 1888 up to September 1911, and as his father advanced in age he became weak mentally and physically, and in the last two decades of his life lost his senses and became of unsound mind and incapable of managing his affairs. Moulvi Abdul Aziz, taking advantage of the unsoundness of his mind and exercising undue influence over him, caused several deeds to be executed by his old father in his favour, which deeds are invalid and without consideration. Moulvi Abdul Aziz died on the 15th of January 1912. The properties left by him and detailed in Schedule 4 of the plaint were inherited by defendants Nos. 1 to 5 and his son, Mohiuddin, since deceased, and his father, Moulvi Imdad Hossain, as his legal heirs. A few days after the death of Abdul Aziz, his son Mohiuddin also died. Imdad Hossain, as grandfather of Mohiud-din, received 2/3rd of the share inherited by Mohiuddin in the properties of his father Abdul Aziz. At that time defendants Nos. 1 to 5, along with Sheikh Mohammad, brother in-law of Abdul Aziz, used to live with Moulvi Imdad Hossain. Sheikh Mohammad also took advantage of the insanity of Maulvi Imdad Hossain and, by procuring recommendation of the local authorities of Chapra for the time being, got a hibanamah, dated the 10th March 1912 (Exhibit 16), executed in favour of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and defendant No. 4, step-children of defendant No. 5, in respect of the share which Imdad Hossain had received by inheritance from Moulvi Abdul Aziz. After the death of Abdul Aziz, defendant No. 1, his son, and defendants Nos. 6 and 7 gained influence for some time over Moulvi Imdad Hossain. Defendant No. 6 got a hibanamah (Exhibit 9), dated the 26th April 1912, executed in respect of the properties situate in Patna. Defendant No. 7 got a mukarrari dated the 4th July 1912, executed in respect of Mouza Hakam, at a low jama. Both the defendants Nos. 6 and 7 got a taksimnamah having the force of a wasiatnamah, Exhibit 2, dated the 18th January 1913, executed in respect of the entire property which was in the name of Abdul Aziz with the exception of the properties allotted to him by the deed of partition (Exhibit 14), dated the 17th of February 1877. Afterwards, defendant No. 7 got a mortgage-bond (Exhibit 15), dated the 15th June 1913, executed in his favour by Moulvi Imdad Hossain and, finally, they got a hibanamah, dated the 11th April 1914, executed in their own favour, but the said deed was not registered as Moulvi Imdad Hossain was not in his senses. The plaintiffs impugn all the aforesaid deeds in favour of Abdul Aziz, or in favour of the defendants, in the case, as having been executed when Imdad Hossain was "insane" and as being "invalid and null and void" in consequence, and assert that by these deeds neither the right nor the possession of Moulvi Imdad Hossain was transferred in the properties mentioned in Schedules 1, 2 and 3 which belonged to him, or in the property of Abdul Aziz mentioned in Schedule 4 to the extent of the share inherited by him therein after the death of Abdul Aziz in 1912. The plaintiffs, therefore, state that after the death of Imdad Hossain, they, being the sons of Imdad Hossain, became entitled to possession of their legal shares in the properties mentioned in the aforesaid Schedules by right of inheritance, but that the defendants were wrongfully in possession of the plaintiffs' share. Hence the plaintiffs seek to recover possession of their share in the said properties by declaring their right and title therein and by invalidating the aforesaid deeds detailed in paragraphs 10 and 15 of the plaint. With respect to their shares in Mouza Madarpur, Pargana Goa, Touzi No. 2569, and Chandpara, Pargana Goa, Touzi No. 2310, they allege that they are in possession and hence they want their possession to be confirmed. They also pray for mesne profits from the date of the institution of the suit up to the date of realisation. They claim that, as Imdad Hossain was insane from 1892 up to his death on the 28th of January 1915, the said period should not be taken into account while considering limitation.

The plaintiffs' claim is resisted mainly by defendants Nos. 1 to 5, the heirs of Abdul Aziz. They plead that the suit was barred by limitation and the rule of estoppel, and that it was bad for misjoinder of parties and causes of action. On the facts, they deny that Moulvi Imdad Hossain was insane or of unsound mind and incapable of managing his affairs. They assert that he was a shrewd man of business, was managing his own properties as well as the properties of his son Abdul Aziz, and that he executed all the deeds in question of his own free will and accord while in full possession of his senses and received good consideration for each and every one of them, and that no fraud or undue influence was ever exercised upon him, and that the deeds were always acted upon and are valid and binding upon the plaintiffs. In short, they say that the plaintiffs are not entitled to any relief.

Defendants Nos. 6 and 7 also put in separate written statements. They support the deeds that were executed by Imdad Hossain in their own favour, but dispute the validity of the deeds in favour of the ancestor of defendants Nos. 1 to 5. In the Court below the following issues were raised by the parties:—

"1. Whether the suit is maintainable ?"

"2. Whether the plaintiffs have got any cause of action for this suit ?"

"3. Whether the suit is barred by limitation ?"

"4. Whether the suit is barred by the prinsiple of estoppel ?"

"5. Whether the suit is bad for misjoinder of parties and of causes of action ?"

"6. Was Moulvi Imdad Hossain a person of unsound mind as alleged in the plaint and was he not competent to execute the deeds in question ?"

"7. Were the deeds sought to be set aside executed under undue influence and were they brought about by fraud ?"

"8. Were the said deeds executed for consideration and were they acted upon. If not, are they valid and binding ?"

Issues Nos. 1, 2, 4 and 5 are pleas in bar of the plaintiffs' suit. They were decided in their favour and we are no longer concerned with them.

Issues Nos. 6, 7 and 8 were decided by the Court below against the plaintiffs and in favour of the defendants. As a result of his finding on those as well as on Issue No. 3, the learned Subordinate Judge dismissed the plaintiffs' suit. Hence this appeal by the plaintiffs.

With reference to Issue No. 6, the learned Subordinate Judge has recorded the finding that "Imdad Hossain was not of unsound mind and incompetent to execute the deeds sought to be set aside in the suit." He has arrived at this finding upon a thorough review of the evidence and the facts and circumstances of the case. The question of insanity of Imdad Hossain was first raised at the time when he executed a deed of gift in favour of defendants Nos. 6 and 7 in April 1914. The Sub Registrar refused to register the deeds and his order was upheld by the District Registrar (Exhibits 20 and 21). This led to an application being made by Mohammad Ayub, son of plaintiff No. 1, before the District Judge of Saran, under Act IV of 1912, for his appointment as guardian of Moulvi Imdad Hossain on the ground of the latter's insanity. The District Judge refused the application by his order (Exhibit A) dated the 29th June 1914.

The retired Assistant Surgeon, Babu Upendra Narain Rai, who has been examined in this case as P. W. No. 3, and Major F. P. Commer, I.M.S., were examined as witnesses in that case. Their certificates and deposition in that case are Exhibits N, 27, R and 34 respectively. In the opinion of the Assistant Surgeon Imdad Hossain was suffering from "softening of the brain" and was not capable of managing his own estate. This was, according to him, due to senility or old age: (vide his certificate, Exhibit 27, and his deposition in the Lunacy Case, Exhibit R, and his deposition as witness No. 3 in this case). On the other hand, the Civil Surgeon and Dr. K. C. Das, after testing his mental powers in several ways, stated in their certificates—"His mental powers are good for a man of his age and his power of reasoning clear and logical." The Civil Surgeon confirmed this opinion by his evidence (Exhibit 34, dated the 23rd of June 1914) in the Lunacy Case. I would quote some passages from his deposition. Says the Civil Surgeon—"He answered questions intelligently and logically without exception. I asked him how he lived, what he ate, the time of year, the time of day. I asked if he had any case. He said a case was pending regarding his property. He wished to leave property to two sons whom he named (Wahab and Yusaf) because his other sons had already had property left them; that he bore them no ill will. I asked other questions too. I should think he would transact business with great difficulty and very badly owing to his infirmity, by which I mean the weakness of his mind and body, due to old age. He is extremely infirm in body and is also infirm in mind, I should call it senile mental infirmity. He would be much more easily influenced by those round him than a man in the prime of life and in good health." In spite of his mental and physical infirmity, the Civil Surgeon in the cross-examination stated that he would consider him "quite insane."

Witnesses on both sides have been examined regarding the state of the mind of Imdad Hossain in the last two decades of his life. The witnesses on behalf of the plaintiffs cite some specific acts of insanity, such as mistaking one person for another, dusting the wall, drinking Ghee from Khibhdi and drinking tea from teapot and mistaking grapes for pieces of stone. The learned Subordinate Judge very rightly holds that these instances only prove temporary "aberrations of intellect" or temporary "insane delusions." They are isolated cases, few and far between, and would not necessarily indicate that he was incapable of managing his affairs, and do not constitute such acts on the part of Moulvi Imdad Hossain as an insane person only would have done. They may have been due to loss of memory, absent-mindedness and other circumstances and are not inconsistent with the acts of a sane man. The view taken by the learned Subordinate Judge is supported by standard works on Medical Jurisprudence, such as of Lyon and Gribble. Heaps of documents have been filed in the case which the learned Subordinate Judge has relied upon for showing that Moulvi Imdad Hossain's intelligence was of a high order and that he could transact business rationally. He would add up large sums, make pertinent and careful corrections in draft deeds, keep accounts and could understand intricate questions of fact. He was a Mutwali of a mosque and waqf properties appertaining thereto and had civil and criminal cases regarding a drain near the mosque as evidenced by Exhibits U-1 and U-2. He was plaintiff in that litigation. The suit terminated with the judgment and the decree, dated the 18th June 1907. Two of the plaintiffs' witnesses, namely, the 2nd and the 8th witnesses, who cite some instances of the acts of insanity such as those referred to above, entered into transactions with him which transactions are still in force. These witnesses would not have entered into such transactions if in fact they knew or believed Imdad Hussain to be a man of unsound mind. Muhammad Ayub, son of plaintiff No. 1, who had applied to the District Judge in 1914 to have Imdad Hussain declared a lunatic, had brought a suit claiming Mouza Hukum on the basis of a verbal gift from Moulvi Imdad Hussain. Moulvi Imdad Hussain denied this gift and the dispute was referred to the arbitration of two Vakils and a Deputy Magistrate. Moulvi Imdad Hossain was examined as a witness in that case. His deposition (Exhibit Q) clearly shows that he was able to give intelligent replies to the questions addressed to him; that he understood the business and that he was fully alive to his own interest. This happened on the 27th of October 1912. Similarly, the Succession Certificate (Exhibit W), dated the 29th April 1912, shows that he took interest in his affairs and applied for Succession Certificate to recover debts due to his deceased son, Abdul Aziz. The learned Subordinate Judge has referred to a number of transactions entered into by Imdad Hossain within two years of his death as showing that "far from being incapable of managing his affairs and protecting his interest.....he was extremely mindful of his own interest." The plaintiffs alleged in paragraph 13 of the plaint that Moulvi Imdad Hossain had become "fatir-ul aql" since 1893 and died while in this state of mind in 1915. The word "fatir ul aql literally means 'unsoundness of mind or at least imbecility of mind.' This the plaintiffs have failed to establish He was a Pleader and had retired from the profession in the year 1872. He was a shrewd man of business and acquired considerable property by his own self-exertions He himself divided all his properties amongst his sons in 1877 keeping only Mahal Shiva Diara and Mahal Mahaji Barhara in which he had two-annas share, for himself. Even after partition, he seems to have acquired considerable properties by his own exertions. No doubt, as he was growing older he was graudually losing his physical and mental strength, and when the Doctors examined him in 1914, at the age of 97, which is an extreme age for a hot climate like that of India, he suffered from senility and, as the Civil Surgeon states, he must have been managing his business with difficulty and have been liable to be easily influenced by those around him. His infirmity must have been hastened by the death of his youngest son, Abdul Aziz, in 1912, who, after the partition of 1877, always lived with him and to whom he was much attached, but his faculties were not so impaired as would amount to insanity or unsoundness of mind. This is clear from the evidence of the second witness examined by the plaintiffs. The learned Subordinate Judge is, therefore, right in his finding that the plaintiffs have failed to establish that the transactions in question were void on account of Imdad Hossain being incompetent to enter upon them by reason of his not being a man of sound mind under sections 11 and 12 of the Indian Contract Act. Section 12 says that a person is said to be of a sound mind for the purpose of making a contract if at the time he makes it he is capable of understanding it and forming a rational judgment as to its effect upon his interests; in other words, the test of soundness of mind is that he is capable of understanding the business and of forming a rational judgment as to its effect upon his interest. There being a presumption in favour of sanity, the person who relies on the unsoundness of mind must prove it sufficiently to satisfy this test: Ball v. Warren (1). Mere weakness of mind is not sufficient as is laid down in the case of Durga Lakhsh Singh v. Muhammad Ali Beg 2). Although it is not necessary to prove utter mental darkness or congenital idiocy, Tirumamagal Ammal v. Ramasvami Ayyangar (3), Ram Sahye v. Laljee Sahye (4), Drew v. Nunn (5), the plaintiffs must establish that Imdad Hossain was incapable of understanding business and forming rational judgment as to its effect. This the plaintiffs have failed to do.

Assuming that Imdad Hossain was suffering from occasional aberrations of mind, as has been sought to be proved by the plaintiffs, the plaintiffs must further show that the particular transactions in question were entered into when he was subject to those occasional fits. There is no evidence that the documents in question were executed at a time when Imdad Hossain was suffering from any hallucination of his brain. Therefore, the documents in question were not executed when he was 'insane' and that they are consequently not invalid and null and void as is stated in paragraph 17 of the plaint. Issue No. 6 was, therefore, rightly decided by the learned Subordinate Judge against the plaintiffs.

The learned Vakil on behalf of the plaintiffs then contended that, although the documents in question were not null and void on the ground of Imdad Hossain being of unsound mind, yet they are liable to be set aside inasmuch as they were executed on account of undue influence and pressure having been brought to bear upon him by the donees under the gift—firstly, by his youngest son, Abdul Aziz, who always used to live with him, and, after the death of Abdul Aziz in 1912, by Sheikh Mohammad, brother-in-law of Abdul Aziz, and, lastly, by defendants Nos. 6 and 7. It is necessary in this connection to place here the history of the general transactions. Imdad Hossain, as already stated, had divided the bulk of his properties among all his seven sons in 1877 under a Taksimnamah (Exhibit 14). Under the Taksimnamah he gave 4 annas 1 karant 5-masant share in village Madarpur Goa (Touzi No. 2564) and 1 anna 4-pies share in Chandpura (Touzi No. 2370) to each of his sons Mohammad Yakub and Moulvi Abdul Aziz. Mohammad Yakub dealt in cloth and his business failed. Accordingly he sold his 4-annas 1-karant 5-masant share in Mouza Madarpur Goa to his father, Moulvi Imdad Hossain, in 1889. This was given in conditional mortgage by Imdad Hussain to his son Abdul Aziz on the 14th of March 1893 per Exhibit 35, to secure a loan of Rs. 7,000. On the 16th of January 1894, the plaintiff, Mohammad Yakub, executed a sale-deed (Exhibit 1) in favour of Abdul Aziz with respect to his 1-anna 4 pies share in another Mouza called Chandpura (Touzi No. 2370), for Rs. 3,500. Previous to this, Moulvi Imdad Hossain had under date the 28th of January 1891 taken out Baibarsana of 6 annas 6 pies share of Shankerpur Harbans for Rs. 7,000 from one Moulvi Abdul Gafar. On the 18th of August 1903, he assigned half of the Baibarsana share in Shankerpur Harbans to Moulvi Abdul Aziz for Rs. 3,500 (Exhibit P-1 or P 2). Subsequently Imdad Hossain acquired 14 annas of Shankerpur Harbans, 14 annas of Shankerpur Aiyaama, about 3 annas 7-pies 5-karants in Shankerpur Lila, Pergana Barai, and some other shares in the said villages and also one anna of Hukam, from 2nd October 1905 to 19th October 1907, partly in his own name and partly in the farzi name of his sons Abdul Wahab and Abdul Aziz. This was by means of four sale-deeds and a deed of exchange executed by the owners of the shares referred to above : vide Exhibits H, H 1 and 32). The other two deeds do not appear to have been filed in this suit

On the 11th of December 1907, he sold 4 annas 1-karant 5-masant share of Madarpur, Pergana Goa, which he had acquired from the present plaintiff Mohammad Yakub in the year 1889, and 3-annas 3 pies share in Shankerpur Harbans and Shankerpur Aiyaama, 4 pies 10 karant share in Shankerpur Lila, for Rs. 7,500 (per Exhibit 3). He set off the sum of Rs. 7,000 which was due to Abdul Aziz under Baiharsana (Exhibit 35), dated the 14th March 1893, with respect to Madarpur, Pargana Goa. On the 7th December 1907, he executed a deed of exchange in favour of Abdul Aziz, whereby he exchanged 8 annas 2 karants 10-masant of Madarpur Pargana Goa, belonging to Abdul Aziz, for 7-annas 6 pies share in Shankerpur Harbans and Shankerpur Aiyaama, and 10 pies share in Lila belonging to himself. On the 23rd of December 1907 he exchanged (by deed Exhibit 4) his 3 annas 3 pies share of Shankerpur Harbans and Shankerpur Aiyaama and $1\frac{1}{2}$-pies of Shankerpur Lila for 2-annas 8 pies share of Obardpura belonging to Abdul Aziz (1-anna 4-pies share which Abdul Aziz had purchased per Exhibit 1, in 1894, from the plaintiff No 1, and his 1 anna 4 pies share under the Taksimnama Exhibit 14 of 1877). Thus under the aforesaid deeds, Abdul Aziz got the entire share acquired by Imdad Hussain in Shankerpur Harbans, Shankerpur Aiyaama and Shankerpur Lila, called Shakri, and Imdad Hossain got 8 annas odd of Madarpur Goa and 2-annas 8 pies of Chandpur.

Besides the aforesaid documents, Imdad Hossain executed a deed of gift (Exhibit 6, or P 5), dated the 28th April 1910, with respect to 4 annas 6 pies share of Madarpur, Pargana Barai, in favour of Abdul Aziz. On the 7th March 1911, he executed a mokarrari deed (Exhibit 7 or P-5) in favour of Abdul Aziz with respect to 3 annas 6-pies in Madarpur Barai. Under this deed a sum of Rs. 400 per mensem was payable to Moulvi Imdad Hossain as landlord's rent and Rs. 300 to Moulvi Wahab (defendant No. 7), one of the sons of Imdad Hossain. On the 14th of August 1911, he made a waqf of the Haq Airi or rent reserved of Rs. 400 in favour of Sahebgunj Mosque of which he appointed Moulvi Abdul Aziz as Mutwali. Abdul Aziz died in January 1912, and on his death Imdad Hossain conveyed by a deed of gift, dated the 10th March 1912, (Exhibit 5), the one-sixth share of the properties which he had inherited from Abdul Aziz to some of the children of the latter.

On the 25th April 1912, Imdad Hussain, executed a deed of gift (Exhibit 9), with respect to villages Darweshpur Diara and Darweshpur Rasnia in favour of defendant No. 6. On the 8th January 1913 he executed a Tansikhnamah (deed of revocation) in which he declared some of the aforesaid transactions to have been farzi and that his properties should be inherited by his heirs according to law.

On the 4th of July 1913, he executed a mokarrari istamrari in favour of his son Abdul Wahab. On the 15th June 1913, he executed a mortgage-bond in favour of Abdul Wahab. On the 11th April 1914 he executed a Hibanamah, in favour of defendants Nos. 6 and 7, but this deed was not registered and we are not concerned with it in this litigation.

The deeds in favour of Abdul Aziz are impugned as having been executed without any consideration and on account of the undue influence of Abdul Aziz and as being merely farzi. The earliest document is the conditional sale, Exhibit 35, in favour of Abdul Aziz with respect to Madarpur Goa which Imdad Hossain had acquired by purchase from his son in 1891, for Rs. 7,000. Now, Abdul Aziz was living with his father and the learned Subordinate Judge has held that the properties which he had got under the Taksimnamah (Exhibit 14) were managed by the latter. The expenses of Abdul Aziz were borne by Imdad Hossain. Abdul Aziz was the youngest son and was loved by Imdad Hossain more than his other sons. After allotting to them properties by deed of partition of 1877, he helped his other sons also sometimes by giving them money and sometimes purchasing their properties for adequate prices when they were in need of money. He also paid them monthly allowances, and helped them in various other ways: vide the deposition of plaintiff No. 1 himself. There is, therefore, no wonder that he bore all the expenses of Abdul Aziz who was obedient to him and lived with him and also purchased the properties in question sometimes with the income of the properties belonging to Abdul Aziz and which he held in his hands, and sometimes from his own posket. The recitals in the documents clearly prove this. In this view the question whether the consideration of the deeds in question was satisfied out of the money belonging to Abdul Aziz or to his father Imdad Hossain seems to be immaterial. Imdad Hossain has not been shown to be otherwise than a conscientious person and when he states in the documents, such as Exhibits 35, 1, 2 and 3 that the consideration money of those documents was met out of the income of the properties of Abdul Aziz, there is no reason to suspect that these statements are false and fictitious. He has recited the history of the transactions in all the subsequent documents: in other words, he has repeatedly confirmed the transactions in favour of Abdul Aziz.

Now, Exhibit 3 is a sale deed, dated the 11th December 1907, executed in favour of Abdul Aziz with respect to the properties set forth therein. The details of how the consideration passed have been recited in the documents. The consideration of the exchange deeds (Exhibits 4 and 5) are the properties belonging to Abdul Aziz. The stamps of all these documents were purchased through Mohammad Ayub, son of plaintiff No. 1, who also attested Exhibits 4 and 5 and who, as the learned Subordinate Judge says, was looking after the suit on behalf of the plaintiffs in the Court below. The sale deed (Exhibit 3) was attested by Yakub, plaintiff No. 1, and Yusuf, defendant No. 6, and Ishfaq, since deceased. The scribe of Exhibit 4 is Moulvi Yusuf, defendant No. 6. It is, therefore, idle on the part of the plaintiffs to impugn these documents on the ground of want of consideration or undue influence brought to bear upon Imdad Hussain by Abdul Aziz.

It is said that the consideration of the sale deed Exhibit 1 of 1894, with respect to Chandpur, in favour of Abdul Aziz must have been borne out of the money belonging to Imdad Hossain and not that of Abdul Aziz, inasmuch as all the income of Abdul Aziz, which Imdad Hussain had in his hands, was accounted for in the earlier document, the Baiharwara, Exhibit 35, dated the 14th March 1893. We do not attach much importance to this argument. Even if there be any substance in this contention, the document will be valid as a deed of gift on the principle laid down by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Ismail Mussajee v Hafiz Boo (5), Gostho Behary Ghosh v. Rohini Gowalini (7) inasmuch as the intention of Imdad Hossain was obviously to convey the property to his son Abdul Aziz and this intention is supported by the subsequent conduct of Imdad Hussain in taking the property in exchange for certain shares of his in other properties which he had acquired (vide Exhibt 5). The relationship between the parties leads also to the same conclusion. The documents Exhibts 6, 7 and 8, convey to Abdul Aziz the interest held by Imdad Hossain in 4-annas 6 pies by way of gift and mokarrari and waqfnamah. These transactions, therefore, require no other consideration than that of love and affection entertained by Imdad Hussain towards his son for his obedience and dutifulness towards him. The aforesaid documents are then impugned on the ground that they were brought into existence on account of undue influence exercised by Abdul Aziz over his father. Now, the circumstances urged in support of this plea are that Abdul Aziz was always living with Imdad Hossain and that he took advantage of the weakness of his body and mind and his extreme old age. These in themselves are not sufficient to raise any presumption of Abdul Aziz having really dominated the will of his father in the execution of the document in his favour, as was held in the case of Ismail Mussajee v. Hafiz Boo (6). There is nothing to show that Abdul Aziz took advantage of the old age of his father. It has been already shown that old though he was, and though he was losing the strength of his mind and body, he was able to exercise an independent and intelligent mind over what he was doing. On the other hand, he seems to have taken great interest in his affairs, and whatever weakness he might have shown in other directions he showed strength of mind in dealing with his properties and business: vide Exhibit Q, deposition of Moulvi Imdad Hossain, dated the 27th October 1912: Exhibit W, Succession Certificate, dated the 29th April 1912: and heaps of documents, such as notes, memoranda, accounts, etc, kept by Imdad Hussain himself and relied upon by the learned Subordinate Judge. There is no evidence of undue influence having been exercised over him by Abdul Aziz. The events subsequent to the death of Abdul Aziz show that he was transacting his business not on account of any undue influence exercised over him by Abdul Aziz, for although that influence ceased, he executed on the 10th of March 1912 a deed of gift with respect to the share inherited by him in the properties of Abdul Aziz in favour of the latter's children. This document was executed after consultation with the District Magistrate, a Deputy Magistrate and a Vakil of Chapra. The document has been attested by them. The object of the document obviously was to make provision for the children of his beloved son, Abdul Aziz. He was not unmindful of the interest of his other sons, for he executed documents in favour of defendants Nos. 6 and 7, such as the deed of gift (Exhibit 9), dated the 26th April 1912, mokarrari istamrari dated the 4th July 1912 and mortgage-bond, dated the 15th June 1913. To the Civil Surgeon in June 1914 he said: "He wished to leave property to two sons" whom he named (Wahab and Yusuf) because his other sons had already had property "left them", vide Exhibit 34. This was his intention which he seems to have fulfilled by giving properties to Wahab and Yusuf, defendants Nos. 6 and 7, by means of the documents referred to above. In the face of the evidence of the Civil Surgeon it is impossible to contend that he executed these documents on account of any undue influence brought to bear upon him or without his understanding the pros and cons of the transactions. The declaration of Imdad Hussain to the Civil Surgeon was made without any prompting from anybody. Therefore, it must be held that none of the documents in question was executed on account of undue influence.

Now, the learned Subordinate Judge says that the plea of undue influence is inconsistent with the plea of unsoundness of mind and he relies upon the decision quoted above in Ismail Mustajee v. Hafiz Boo (6) and in Durga Bakhsh Singh v. Muhammad Ali Beg (2). In the former case their Lordships say—"the question of undue influence was never properly before the Court at all. No such case was set up in the pleadings..... There was a clear issue as to Khaja Boo having been of unsound mind in 1889, but none with regard to undue influence.' After dealing with the evidence, their Lordships observed —"assuming, however, that undue influence might properly be made a ground of decision ...the evidence is insufficient to establish anything of the kind." In the latter case, the mortgages in question were sought to be set aside on the ground that the mortgagor was of unsound mind at the time of the execution of the deeds and the evidence given sought to establish insanity of a violent type in its crudest and most palpable form. The evidence was disbelieved. Their Lordships held that it was not allowable for the Court to substitute for the case of insanity advanced by the plaintiff a case of weakness of mind and consequent helplessness. Similar was the view taken in the case of Sayad Muhammad v. Fatteh Muhammad (8). In the present case as to the plea of undue influence, the learned Subordinate Judge observes: "it is not alleged by the plaintiffs that Moulvi Imdad Hussain was stark mad or a lunatic. The plaintiff No. 1 in his cross-examination by the guardian of defendant No. 2 says that Imdad Hossain was neither insane nor mad. The case of the plaintiffs in the plaint is also similar. The sixth paragraph of the plaint, as well as the other paragraphs show that what the plaintiffs complained of is that Moulvi Imdad Hossain was in the last two decades of his life so mentally imbecile and so physically infirm that he was incapable of managing his own affairs or protecting his own interest. In fact, the terms of the plaint are such that it is rather a case of undue influence which the plaintiffs alleged than of insanity."

From the afore-said observation, as well as from the fact that the plea of undue influence and fraud was distinctly raised in Issue

(8) 22 C. 324; 22 I. A. 4; 6 Sar. P. C. J. 515; 11 Ind. Dec. (N. s.) 218.

No. 3, it is contended that it is open to the plaintiffs to show that the documents in question were affected by undue influence and fraud, although they had raised the plea of insanity in the plaint. The question as to whether the plea could or could not properly be taken, however, becomes immaterial inasmuch as upon the facts found the plea has not been substantiated.

The plaintiffs then attacked the transactions as being benami and as not having been acted upon. There is nothing to show that the transactions were farzi and fictitious in any way. No motive has been suggested for Imdad Hussain to execute these farzi documents. It is not said that he was involved in debts and that he executed these documents in order to protect his properties from being seized by his creditor as is usually the case in farzi transactions. It has also not been shown that he was ill-disposed towards his other sons and that the documents in question were executed in order to deprive them of their legal shares. No motive has, therefore, been shown for his executing the documents in question farzi in the name of Abdul Aziz or the defendants in the case. No doubt, he acquired some properties between the 2nd of October 1905 and the 19th of November 1907 in the farzi name of his sons, Abdul Aziz and Abdul Wahab, (vide Exhibits F and 11). But this is different from transferring his own properties as farzi transactions. Reliance has been placed upon Exhibit 17, dated the 25th of May 1908, an application made by Abdul Aziz for registration and mutation of his name with respect to 10-pies share in Shankerpur Lila based upon Exhibits 3, 5 and 7. The statement relied upon relates only to Exhibit F, dated the 25th September 1907, whereby Imdad Hussain had acquired 1-anna in Shankerpur Harbans and Shankerpur Aiyaama and 1-pie in Shankerpur Lila in the farzi name of Abdul Aziz. The other documents (Exhibits 3 and 5) although referred to in the application have not been declared to be farzi. Therefore, instead of helping the plaintiffs the documents in question are against them, for when Abdul Aziz stated that Exhibit F was farzi, the fact that he does not mention that Exhibits 3, 4 and 5 are also farzi goes to show that the latter were not farzi.

The next document relied upon is Exhibit 24, the Tansikhnamah, or the deed of revocation, dated the 18th January 19.3. This document does not declare Exhibits 3, 4 and 5 as farzi but seeks to set aside the exchange of the properties by Exhibits 4 and 5 on the ground that there was breach of covenant, inasmuch as Abdul Aziz had stated that the properties given by him in exchange to Imdad Hossain were free from encumbrance, whereas it was discovered that there was a mortgage on those properties of Rs. 2,000. In this Tansikhnamah, no doubt, the documents Exhibits 6, 7, 8 and 16 were declared to be farzi. The plaintiffs, however, attack this Tansikhnamah also as being farzi and executed on account of the undue influence exercised by defendants Nos. 6 and 7 over Imdad Hossain and as being null and void on account of Imdad Hossain being insane: vide paragraphs 16 and 17 of the plaint. In the face of the pleadings in the case it is impossible to hold that the documents executed by Imdad Hossain previous to the Tansikhnamah were farzi.

It appears that the documents in question were acted upon, inasmuch as the Chalans filed by the defendants show that Mohammad Yakub paid revenue of the three Shankerpurs briefly called Shakri on behalf of Abdul Aziz. The Shakri properties admittedly belonged to Imdad Hossain. Unless these properties came to be held by means of Exhibits 3, 4 and 5, there is no reason why the Government revenue should have been paid by Abdul Aziz. Madarpur Goa, the property which Abdul Aziz gave to Imdad Hossain in exchange under Exhibit 4 in 1907 was in lease with Marhaura Factory per patta executed by Moulvi Abdul Aziz, at an annual rental of Rs. ,000 or Rs. 1,100. Witness No. 6 for the plaintiff states that Abdul Aziz received the rent of it up to 1911 and after Moulvi Imdad Hossain received the rent till his death in 1915, and after the death of Imdad Hossain his four sons, namely, the two plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 6 and 7 received the rent and that the plaintiffs had mortgaged their share to the Marhaura Estate. This evidence clearly shows that Imdad Hossain came to be in possession of these properties and after his death his four sons received their shares therein by inheritance. The properties belonged to Abdul Aziz and unless the exchange per Exhibit 4 was given effect to, the plaintiffs would not have received any share in those properties. The plaintiffs admit in their plaint (paragraph 20) that they have got their names registered in respect of Madarpur Goa and Chandpura in accordance with the shares that Imdad Hossain got by exchange and which after him they received by inheritance. There is, therefore, nothing to show that the documents were benami. On the other hand, the learned Subordinate Judge upon the evidence in the case has held that they were acted upon. The deeds of gift in favour of Abdul Aziz and his sons seem to have been acted upon. Therefore, Issues Nos. 7 and 8 were properly decided by the Court below against the plaintiffs.

The learned Subordinate Judge also held that the suit was barred by limitation. The plaintiffs' case is that the documents were null and void inasmuch as Imdad Hossain was of unsound mind. They claim their right in the property by inheritance as heirs of Imdad Hossain who is said to have died on the 26th of January 1915. The suit is said to have been instituted on the 15th of July 1915. So, if the documents were null and void on account of insanity of Imdad Hossain, they could not stand in the way of the plaintiff's succeeding to the properties as heirs of their father. The same result would have happened if the documents were held to be benami or fictitious. The plaintiffs need not in that case have the documents set aside, and the suit would not be barred by limitation, in accordance with the principle enunciated in the case of Bijoy Gopal Mukerji v. Krishna Mahishi Debi (9).

It is, however, urged that the suit of the plaintiffs is barred by the rule of three years' limitation under Art. 91 of the Limitation Act in so far as the deeds are impugned on the ground of undue influence or fraud. The question becomes only of an academic interest in view of our findings on the merits of the case and does not call for any serious consideration.

Agreeing with the view taken by the Court below we dismiss the appeal with costs.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 63—Mortgage—Sums expended for repairs or improvements—Agreement to pay at time of redemption—Agreement, whether compulsorily registrable—Admissibility of document for collateral purpose.

An agreement to pay "at the time of redemption" all sums expended by the mortgagee on the repair or improvement of the mortgaged property, could not, in view of the provisions of section 63 of the Transfer of Property Act, be considered to be a transaction creating an interest in immoveable property so as to be compulsorily registrable But even if it were so held to be compulsorily registrable, the agreement would, even though unregistered, be admissible in evidence for the collateral purpose of proving the mortgagor's assent. [p. 383, col 1.]

Appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Bhandara, dated the 16th June 1921, in Civil Appeal No. 31 of 1921.

Mr. Erachshah, for the Appellant.

Mr. D. T. Mangalmurti, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—It is, perhaps, fortunate that the appellant has removed what is called the "iron lattice", though it has been held to be incapable of separate possession and enjoyment, from the mortgaged premises, and that the opposite party has agreed to abandon all claim to it. Otherwise, it would have been necessary to discover what manner of thing it is, which it is quite impossible to do from the record at present. The mortgagee's only other complaint is, that the increased rent payable by him on account of the costs of the additions and improvements to the house has been assumed to be equal to the interest of all the money he spent on the house. As a certain amount was spent on repairs which were not improvements or additions this is obviously not right. It is admitted that the increase of rent may fairly be taken as equal to the interest on the money spent on improvements and additions. But the mortgagee is entitled to interest on the sums which he as tenant lent to his landlord for repairs which did not enhance the letting value of the house but merely kept that value at its former level. For the appellant it was stated that he spent Rs. 105 10·0 in four different sums on such repairs and that the interest on them calculated from the dates of expenditure to the date of suit amounts to Rs. 68 8·0. The learned Pleader for the respondents-purchasers admits that, if we assume that the expenditure alleged has been proved at all, which he denies, these details are correct.

2. The cross objection attacks the findings of facts that Exhibit D-2 was executed on the day on which it purports to have been executed and is a genuine document, and that the Rs. 371-0 9 mentioned in that document and a further sum of Rs. 75.8.0 were actually spent on the repairs and improvements of the property. No single valid reason was, however, advanced in argument to support either contention and the two findings must stand. The main contention on behalf of the respondents, however, is that Exhibit D-2 is a document which purports or operates to create, or at least declares, a right to immoveable property of the value of more than Rs. 100 and, therefore, required registration. In its terms it is no more than an agreement to pay "at the time of redemption" all sums expended by the mortgagee on the repair or improvement of the mortgaged property. It neither creates nor declares any right to add those sums to the price of redemption. That right is created and declared by section 63 of the Transfer of Property Act. The assent of which that section speaks may be oral or even tacit, which would be impossible if it could be said to be a transaction creating an interest in immoveable property. In any case, even if the document was compulsorily registrable it could be used for the collateral purpose of proving the mortgagor's assent as was held in Gangabisan v. Tukaram (1).

3. The learned Pleader for the respondents further urged that as the agreement embodied in Exhibit D 2 was between the mortgagor and mortgagee it cannot bind the purchaser of the equity of redemption. As no reason that I could understand was put forward in support of this somewhat startling proposition I am unable to discuss the matter. The decree of the lower Appellate Court will be modified by the addition of Rs. 68·8 0 to the price of redemption stated in it. The plaintiffs-respondents will pay all the costs of their cross-objection and thirteen fifteenths of the total costs of the appeal, the remaining two-fifteenths being paid by the appellants. Costs in both Courts below will be paid as already ordered and the amount payable by the plaintiff respondent to the appellants will be added to the price of redemption. The date for redemption will be the 5th of January 1923.

Appeal from a decision of the Officiating Subordinate Judge, Second Court, Shahabad, dated the 7th April 1919.

BAIJNATH SINGH v. BRIJRAJ KUER.

Messrs. S. M. Mullick M. Prasad, L. K. Jha and S. Dayal, for the Appellants.

Messrs. S. O. Mitter and S. Saran, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, O. J.—This is an appeal by some of the defendants from a decree of the Officiating Subordinate Judge of Shahabad pronouncing in favour of the plaintiffs' title under a deed dated the 14th March 1917 executed by their mother Musammat Bhagela Kuer, conveying a half share in her property to the plaintiffs and declaring an earlier gift by Bhagela Kuer under an instrument dated the 7th January 1908, conveying the bulk of her property to her grandsons, null and void.

The plaintiffs, who are the respondents in this appeal, are the two younger daughters of the late Babu Raghunath Charan Singh and his widow Bhagela Kuer. The principal defendants in the suit are Musammat Dharamraj Kuer and Musammat Chhabi Raj Kuer (defendants Nos. 1 and 2) who are sisters of the plaintiffs, Mahadeo Singh, Inderdeo Singh and Tilakdhari Singh (defendants Nos. 3 to 5) who are sons of Dharamraj Kuer, and Baijnath Singh, (defendant No. 10) the husband of Dharamraj and Chhabi Raj.

The defendants Nos. 6 to 9 are other sons of Baijnath Singh. The defendant No. 11, Musammat Kowla Kuer, is the sister-in-law of the plaintiffs and the first two defendants, being the widow of their deceased brother, Bachu Singh. The defendants Nos. 12 to 18 are transferees of some of the property in suit from the defendants Nos. 3 to 5 and the defendant No. 19 Musammat Bhagela Kuer is the mother of the plaintiffs and the first two defendants.

The plaintiffs do not deny that the earlier gift of 1908 was executed by their mother, Bhagela Kuer, but contend that she signed the same under the impression that it was a gift of her property in favour of her four daughters in equal shares, and that her signature was obtained by the fraud of Baij Nath Singh, the husband of their sister Dharamraj, who falsely represented that the document was a gift in favour of her four daughters in equal shares in accordance with her expressed intention, whereas in fact it was a gift of the bulk of the property to the three sons of Baijnath Singh and Dharamraj, his wife, a small portion only being conveyed to the other three daughters and to the daughter-in-law, Kowla Kuer. They claim that the gift of January 1908 be declared void and inoperative and that they may be given possession over a half share of the property in accordance with the instrument of the 14th March 1917.

The appellants deny the alleged fraud and contend that the instrument of 1908 in fact carried out the expressed wishes of their mother and was read over to and understood by her before execution. They further contend that in any case the gift of 1908 was not void, even if it did not express the intentions of the donor, but voidable only, and that the plaintiffs cannot maintain an action on the later deed until the earlier one is set aside, and as the donor, Bhagela Kuer, was not a plaintiff and had not sued to have it set aside, the suit should be dismissed. They have raised a further point in this appeal which does not appear to have been specifically raised before the Trial Court, namely, that the instrument of the 14th March 1917, relied on by the plaintiffs, was a gift, requiring attestation by two witnesses, and is not admissible in evidence as none of the alleged attesting witnesses had been called to prove it as required by section 68 of the Evidence Act, and further that even if admitted as evidence the document itself did not purport to be and was not properly attested. They further raised a question of estoppel.

The learned Officiating Subordinate Judge before whom the case came for trial held that, if the facts alleged in the plaint were proved, the gift of 1908 would be void ab initio and that it would not be necessary in such circumstances to have it set aside before the plaintiffs could assert their title under the later instrument. He further found that the signature of Bhagela Kuer was obtained by the fraud of her son-in-law, Baijnath Singh, and did not express her intentions and that she never consented thereto. He further found that Musammat Bhagela Kuer between 1908 and 1917 had no knowledge of the real contents of the earlier document, and that no circumstances had been made out which would operate as a bar to the suit by way of estoppel arising from the conduct of Bhagela Kuer. He accordingly found in favour of the plaintiffs and awarded them possession of a half share in the property under the deed of 1917 together with mesne profits subject to certain maintenance charges and subject to a conveyance of Mouza Ghanti to the defendants Nos. 12 to 18 under a deed of sale dated the 29th March 1914 which was found to be for legal necessity.

From this decision Baijnath Singh, his wife Dharamraj, his sons Iderdeo and Tilakdhari and his grandson Rajeswar Prasad, the son of the defendant Mahadeo Singh, deceased, have appealed.

Babu Raghunath Charan Singh, the husband of Musammat Bhagela Kuer, died in the month of July 1907 leaving property in some 20 villages the income from which is alleged to about Rs. 8,000 per annum. He also left debts amounting to over Rs. 30,000. His only son Bachu Singh had died some 18 months before his father but in addition to his widow he left surviving him the four daughters already referred to. Raghunath Charan Singh was greatly afflicted and suffered much mental distress by the death of his only son and there can be no doubt that his death was hastened if not directly due to his bereavement. His widow says that it was the cause of his death. The deceased son left a widow Musammat Kowla Kuer who has been added as one of the defendants in the suit. Bhagela Kuer, as next heir to her husband, succeeded to his property taking a Hindu widow's estate. The eldest daughter, Dharamraj, was at the time of her father's death the only married daughter, her husband being Baijnath Singh, the defendant No. 10. She and Baijnath had at that time three sons Mahadeo Singh deceased, Inderdeo and Tilakdhari, but other sons were born to them before the institution of this suit and were made defendants. On the death of Raghunath Charan Singh, Baijnath Singh with his wife and three children left their home in the United Provinces and went to live with the widow Bhagela Kuer at Barauna, and at her request, Baijnath took over the management of the estate and transacted all business on her behalf, she being a pardanashin lady. Before this, however, it appears that Dharamraj did from time to time after her brother Bachu's death live with her children in her father's house at Barauna and her third son Tilakhdari was born there in 1907 during her father's lifetime.

It is the appellants' case that Raghunath Singh had a great affection for his grandsons and after his sons's death frequently expressed a desire to make over his property to them after making some provision by way of maintenance for his three younger daughters and his daughter-in law. He was anxious that his debts should be discharged before his death but was not in a fit condition to attend to business and the grandsons were to be charged with the liquidation of his debts out of the estate in their hands, and thus he would be relieved from the burden of debt which unless discharged would militate against his happiness in the next world. It is also suggested that Raghunath was not on good terms with his gotias and was afraid that they might endeavour to obtain the property and involve the estate in litigation after his death if no settlement was made, which was another reason for wishing his property to be settled upon his male descendants. Raghunath himself had made this suggestion to Baijnath about three months after his son's death and had sent his nephew Bhuneshwar Singh to take him and his family to Barauna. His wife and his two sons did in fact go to Barauna at that time and the third son Tilakdhari was, as stated, born there. Baijnath himself went there three or four months later. Raghunath made no secret of his desire that the property should be given to the three grandsons and according to the appellants he named the Mouzas to be given to each daughter for their maintenance and expressed a desire also that something should be given to the daughter in law but no document was executed in his lifetime. In January 1908, about six months after Raghunath's death, a draft deed was prepared by a Pleader named Narsingh Sahai who went to Barauna to take instructions from the widow for that purpose. According to the appellants, both the draft and the fair copy prepared by the scribe, Shyam Charan Lal, were read over and explained to Bhagela Kuer who approved them and the document was executed in the presence of four attesting witnesses on the 7th January 1908. The document recites that the disposition made therein was in accordance with the wishes of the donor's deceased husband who, during his lifetime, had expressed a wish that property yielding an annual income of Rs. 300 should be given to his daughter in law, Musammat Kowla Kuer, for her maintenance during her life, and that property yielding an annual income of Rs. 600 should be given to each of his three unmarried daughters and the remainder to his three grandsons Mahadeo, Inderdeo and Tilakdhari and adds "that as my husband Babu Raghunath Charan Singh died without executing any deed in the above terms as desired by him, he at the time of his death instructed me to execute a deed in the terms desired by him." It further recites that the donor is confident that her said grandsons and daughters will properly serve and maintain her and remain obedient to her during her lifetime and at her death will perform her funeral ceremony in a fitting manner. It then gives a life interest in Mouza Ismailpore, Kalan II, to her daughter-in-law, Musammat Kowla Kuer, and to her daughter Chhabiraj a life interest in Muza Parbatpur with remainder to her sons and grandsons, if any, to her daughter Brij Raj a similar interest in Mouza Ismailpore, Kalan I, and to her daughter Girj Raj a similar interest in Mouzas Kota and Jagdispore. The balance of the estate is given to her eldest daughter Dharamraj and her three sons Mahadeo, Inderdeo and Tilakdhari Singh. The grandsons are charged with the obligation to pay up immediately all debts which are at present standing or which would be contracted hereafter, by sale or by any other transaction or by any other possible means so that the whole of the estate left by her husband may after liquidation of the debts remain free and unencumbered. They are also charged with the expenses connected with the marriages of the three younger daughters which are to be paid out of the income of all the elaqas. They are further charged with the maintenance of the widow and the expenses of her funeral ceremony and the performance of the Gaya Saradh of her husband in a fitting manner. They are further charged with the completion of a temple which her husband had begun to build at Barauna and with the installation of the image of the deity Sri Sri Sheoji Maharaj and the performance of the puja etc., Bhagela Kuer was illiterate but at her request her name was written by an old servant of the family, Pradhan Ajodhya Prasad, since deceased. It is witnessed by four witnesses, three of whom were called at the trial and is certified by the scribe who was also called as a witness, to have been read out and explained to the executant. It was registered at the residence of Bhagela Kuer on the 12th January in the presence of the Sub-Registrar before the executant who admitted execution and who was identified by her nephew Bhuneshwar Singh, her sister's son. On that occasion her signature was also made by the pen of Ajodhya Prasad and Bhagela Kuer made her thumb impression on the document. On the 26th January an application was made to enter the names of the donees in Register D in the Land Registration Department. An objection was filed by one Rajinder Narain Singh, a gotia of Raghunath Charan Singh, on the 12th March 1908 claiming that he had been adopted by the deceased in January 1907 after the death of his only son and was entitled to have his name registered as the owner of the property. Witnesses were called both on behalf of the applicants and on behalf of the objector in these proceedings. On that occasion the deed of gift was put in evidence and proved by two of the attesting witnesses and by Ajodhya Prasad and the execution of the deed was in fact admitted by the objector. His claim to have been adopted by Raghunath Charan Singh was not supported by any credible evidence and his objection was dismissed and the petitioners' names were entered in the Register. In August 1908 Musammat Bhagela Kuer executed a mukhtarnama constituting Baijnath Singh her general agent. This document recites the gift previously made in January that year to her grandsons and daughters. In September 1910 upon a petition to the District Judge of Arrah Musammat Bhagela Kuer was appointed guardian of her three grandsons Mahadeo, Inderdeo and Tilakdhari, and the properties in the possession of the minors under the deed of gift are therein referred to and set out in detail in the Schedule. In March 1913 Mauza Ghanti Bargawan, one of the properties transferred to the grandsons under the deed of gift, was sold for a sum of Rs. 17,600 in order to pay off certain existing debts. This document was executed by Bhagela Kuer as guardian of her three minor grandsons, she having previously obtained sanction from the District Judge of Arrah to sell the property. In May 1915 the District Judge, not being satisfied with the manner in which the property was being managed by the guardian, deputed Mr. H. T Christian, the Sub-Divisional Officer of Bhabua, to proceed to Barauna and make enquiries and report as to the appointment of another guardian of the minors' properties. Mr. Christian, who has been called as a witness on behalf of the appellants, proceeded to Barauna, his instructions being to enquire into the accounts and to recommend a manager in consultation with Bhagela Kuer. He had an interview with that lady and also with Baijnath Singh. He discussed with Bhagela Kuer the question of appointing a manager of the minors' property and she expressed a desire to have Baijnath Singh appointed manager adding "Yih log ka chiz hai" from which I think it may reasonably be inferred if this evidence is accepted, and I see no reason for rejecting it, that Bhagela Kuer at that time considered the property as belonging to Baijnath's family. Mr. Christian made a report that the income of the estate was about Rs. 4,300 a year exclusive of the rents of villages already assigned to debtors under usufructuary mortgages and made certain suggestions as to reducing expenses and providing for paying off the debts. He states that the late guardian Bhagela Kuer had given a very low estimate of the income from the lands and it seems obvious from this that she must have discussed the income of the property of her grandsons of whom she was the guardian.

It is quite obvious from the facts which I have just stated that if Baijnath Singh wilfully deceived his mother-in-law into making a gift of her property to the grandsons he, at all events, took no measures to conceal the fact. Everything was done openly, the document was registered, servants and members of the family were parties to it including the nephew of Bhagela Kuer. She herself was also appointed guardian of the minor grand-children, and when some of the property was sold to pay off the debts, it was she who had to execute the conveyance in which a recital of the gift appears. It is not disputed by Bhagela Kuer that she executed the documents but she contends that she was entirely ignorant of the contents of any of them. The names of the grandsons were also entered in the register in the Land Registration Department, a fact which could not well be concealed from the gotias and the other members of her family, and indeed this registration was objected to by Rajinder Narain Singh who claimed to have been adopted by Bhagela Kuer's deceased husband and preferred his claim in open Court. When a Hindu landowner dies without male issue and his widow makes a disposition of the property followed by a mutation of names in the Land Registration Department the fact very soon becomes known to the gotias and other kinsman of the deceased, as in fact happened in the present case, and it would appear that if Bhagela Kuer's evidence is true she alone of all her kinsmen and servants was ignorant of the real nature of the transaction. The learned Subordinate Judge, however, has come to the conclusion that a fraud was perpetrated upon her and that she was not aware, until many years afterwards, in 1917 of the contents of the instrument executed by her in 1908 and it will be necessary to consider his reasons for arriving at this conclusion. Before doing so, however, it would be convenient to state how it was that Bhagela Kuer came to make a different disposition of her property in the year 1917. In 1913 Baijnath Singh took as his second wife Chhabi Raj, the sister of his first wife. The two younger girls were at that time unmarried but in 1916 they were married to two brothers, the sons of Babu Raghuraj Singh residing at Narkhoria not far from Barauna where Bhagela Kuer lived. One would expect that before the marriage of his sons Raghuraj Singh would make enquiries as to the property or prospects of his future daughters-in law whose father had died without male issue. Nothing of the sort, however, according to Raghuraj's evidence, appears to have been done, and the marriage of his sons took place in July 1916. The negotiations for the marriage took two or three months before completion and he says that his elder brother conducted the negotiations on his behalf and he knew nothing about them. He further says that he knew no details about the property and its management and did not even know that Musammat Bhagela Kuer had any properties. In February or March 1917 he went on a visit to Bhagela Kuer at her house and was informed by that lady that half the property belonged to her two younger daughters and the other half to the wives of Baijnath. He then asked Baijnath, under whose management the estate was, to partition the properties and explain the accounts, but he refused to do so. Bhagela Kuer also asked him to divide the properties, but upon his refusal a copy of the hibanama of 1908 was sent for, whereupon the Musammat learnt for the first time that the major portion had been given to the sons of Baijnath. She thereupon sent for a Pleader and executed the bainama transferring one-half of her property to her younger daughters Brij Raj and Girj Raj This document is dated the 14th March 1917 and is the foundation of the plaintiffs' title in this suit. It purports to sell and convey the half of the entire estate of her deceased husband in which she has a life-interest and which is said to be worth Rs. 12,000 to her daughters Brij Raj Kuer and Girj Raj Kuer as well as the right of instituting a suit for the cancellation of the previous gift. It then states "whereas in consideration of service and of obedience of the aforesaid daughters as well as in view of their being the reversioners I gave up and remitted the consideration of it, and made them owners in my place and put them in possession of the vended property". It is signed by Musammat Bhagela Kuer by the pen of Babu Rampati Singh and purports to be attested by four witnesses on admission by the executant. It was registered on the 29th March 1917.

The case for the plaintiffs (respondents) rests mainly upon the evidence of Raghuraj Singh, the father in-law of the plaintiffs, and Bhagela Kuer, their mother, and I may say at once that the evidence on both sides is unsatisfactory and open to serious criticism. I have already referred shortly to the evidence of Raghuraj Singh and have pointed out how he professed to be completely ignorant as to the prospects of his daughters-in-law before their marriage. He admits, however, that before he went to see Bhagela Kuer after their marriage, that lady had told him that she had made a gift of the property and he states that he did not ask her anything about possession of it. He says he came to know after the bainama in favour of his daughters in law was executed that the village Ghanti already referred to as having been sold to pay off some of the debts, had been disposed of, but he did not enquire from anybody who was in possession of it before filing the plaint which was verified by himself. The plaint nevertheless impleads as defendants the purchasers of that village. Moreover, after obtaining a copy of the deed of gift of 1908, he says that although he saw the names of the attesting witnesses thereon, he never made any enquiries from them or anybody else as to its execution, nor did he endeavour, as one might expect he would, to verify the story of Bhagela Kuer from those persons. He was asked in cross examination as to the witnesses to the document of 1917 relied on by him, and on being asked whether they had come to give evidence replied that they had not. Bhagela Kuer in her evidence states that her husband did not say anything to her during his lifetime in connection with the disposal of the property. After his death she wanted to give it to all her four daughters and asked Baijnath Singh to get a document prepared. She did not express her desire to anybody else. She states she did not have the document read out to her. She does not in terms say that Baijnath Singh or anybody else ever represented to her what was in the document or that it carried out her wishes, but signed it without having it read out, and, apparenly, without making any enquiries. She denies all knowledge of Pradhan Ajodhya Prasad who wrote her name for her on the document or of the witnesses who signed it although it appears to be clear from the evidence of other witnesses that they were servants or members of her household. She says she does not recollect if the Sub-Registrar questioned her as to whether she had got the hibanama read out to her but she put her thumb impression on it. She admits that Bunnesh war Singh, her nephew, who identified her was present on the occasion, and, although he lived in her house until his death in 1914, she never asked him or apparently anybody else as to what was written in the document. She further says that she does not know she was appointed guardian of her minor grand-children by the District Judge and that Mr. Christian, the Sub-Dvisional Officer, never came to her house or asked her anythibg in connection with the management of the estate. It is impossible to accept this last statement in the face of Mr. Christain's evidence and his report to the District Judge after his visit. She further says that she does not recollect whether the Pleader Narsingh Sahai came to her house in connection with the drafting of the document. After some pressing she admitted that she knew about the sale of Monza Ghanti. There are so many improbabilities in the story of these two witnesses that I cannot but feel great hesitation in accepting the truth of their story. The evidence of the appellant's witnesses, however, is also in many respects open to serious criticism. One reason assigned for questioning the bona-fides of Baijnath Singh is that in the management of the property he seems to have neglected the interests of the plaintiffs and given preference to those of his wives and children. Although the Mouzas transferred to the plaintiffs under the deed of gift were entered in their names, and suits, when necessary, were instituted in their names, no separate accounts were kept and some of the proceeds of the property sold were used in paying off the charge upon Parbatpur, the property of Obhabi Rai, whilst that of the plaintiffs was left encumbered. It also appears that in the list of debts due from the estate entered in the Schedule, when the certificate of guardianship was applied for in 1910 there is an item of Rs. 1,600 due to Rajdari Singh, one of the younger sons of Baijnath. This is said to be due under an unregistered hand-note dated the 22nd March 1906. Baijnath explains this by saying that it was a debt due to his wife, Dharamraj, but stood in the name of his son who could scarcely have been a year old in 1310 and was not born in 1906. It is difficult, however, to believe that Raghunath Charan Singh in 1906 would borrow money from his daughter, Dharamraj, on a hand-note. It is just possible that the money borrowed was really that of Baijnath, her husband, and that the transaction took place in her name. Unfortunately, however, the matter was not further enquired into in cross examination and, although it may be capable of explanation, it is a matter of some suspicion. It also appears that the properties given to the plaintiffs under the hibanama were mortgaged before the document was executed and a further sum of Rs. 700 was subsequently raised under a zarpeshgi of Mouza Jagdishpur belonging to Brij Raj, the money being used to pay the costs of survey not only of that village but of other villages awarded by the deed of gift to the appellants. I think it may fairly be assumed that the whole of the property was dealt with by Baijnath indiscriminately as if the parties were a joint family and not entitled to separate possession. This in itself, however, would be no ground for treating the deed of gift as procured by deliberate fraud on the part of Baijnath, nor do I think it necessarily follows from the unsatisfactory state in which the evidence was left, that the debt of Rs. 1,600 said to be due to his wife was a fictitious transaction. These matters greatly influenced the learned Judge in coming to a conclusion in favour of the respondents. Another matter, and one about which the learned Judge appears to have been in error, also influenced him in arriving at his conclusions. It appears that a copy of Register D showing the transmutation of names in respect of all the villages of the estate was put in evidence at the trial. From this the learned Judge considered that the villages granted to the plaintiffs had been entered in the names of Baijnath's sons. This does not appear to be the case, however, upon reference to the document in question. Another reason which influenced the learned Judge in arriving at his conclusion was, that some of the appellants' witnesses in giving details of the wish expressed by Raghunath during his life-time to divide his property amongst his grandsons had mentioned the name of Tilakdhari as one of them. The learned Judge appears to have been under the impression that Tilakdhari was not born until after Raghunath's death. In this respect, however, the learned Judge was in error, as Tilakdhari was born in February 1907, some five months before, his grandfather's death as appears from Exhibit 9, the petition for obtaining certificate of guardianship, and he was born in his grandfather's house. The learned Judge's mistake arises apparently from a passage in Baijnath's evidence in which he stated that he did not recollect the month or year of Tilakdhari's birth but that it was about a year after Asrar (June) in which his wife and children came to Barauna. As a matter of fact it was about 8 months later, assuming that his wife and children went there in June.

Three of the attesting witnesses to the document of 1903 as well as the scribe were called. Lachman Lal, one of the witnesses, who was a mutsaddi in the family, deposed that the draft was prepared by the Pleader Narsingh Sahai after consulting Bhagela Kuer, and that the draft was read out to and approved by her, that a fair copy was afterwards made by the scribe and was also read out and explained to Bhagela Kuer in his presence and that he and other witnesses attested it at Bhagela Kuer's request. This witness also gave some evidence as to what happened before the Sub-Registrar when the deed was executed. He also states that Bhagela Kuer told the Pleader what her husband's wishes had been and that the draft was prepared accordingly. He deposed in detail to various facts to which I have referred earlier and upon which the appellants rely. He was confronted with an account-book of his own from which it would appear that he was not at Baranna on the day the document was registered and in stating what took place before the Sub-Registrar he must have been drawing on his imagination. The account book in question shows that certain fees were paid to Narsingh Sahai, the Pleader who drafted the hibanama, and to this extent it corroborates the appellants' story as to Narsing Sahai's part in the matter. This witness like many others of his class appears to have been prepared to give evidence beyond that which his recollection justified. Mahadeo Sahu, a Deorhi servant of the family and an attesting witness, also speak to the execution of the document and the reading out and explanation of it to the executant. His impression was that no property had been given under the hibanama to Dharamraj Kuer and he says that if she acquired anything it would not be in accordance with the directions of Raghunath, her father. He also says that at the time of reading over the document, paragraph 6 which related to the gift to Dharamraj and her children was not explained in his hearing but that both the draft and the fair copy were read out in his presence. Deoki Tewari, another witness, says he became a witness to the document on the day it was registered and when the Sub-Registrar was present, and that the other witnesses were also present but he does not say that they signed it at that time Sham Saran Lal, the scribe, says he read and explained the contents to the executant. He says he read out the document to her on two occasions, once before copying it fair, and the second time at the time of registration, and that the witnesses put their signatures on the document the day he copied it fair. He further says that the Musammat's name was written on it by Pradhan Ajodhya Prasad on the day the document was registered and on being asked by the Court he stated positively that Pradhanji wrote the name of the Musammat on the margin inside the document on the day of registration before the Sub-Registrar, that he did not write the name anywhere else on that day before the Sub-Registrar. From the document itself it appears that the name of Bhagela Kuer was written three times by the pen of Pradhan Ajodhya Prasad, once at the alleged time of execution on the 7th January where the name appears in the margin and twice on the back at the time of registration on the 12th January. The first of the latter signatures is apparently to show that it was presented by her at her residence for registration and the second one to show that execution was admitted by her after identification by Bhuneshwar Singh. It also contains her thumb impression at the back. The fourth attesting witness was not called.

From this evidence it seems clear that Deoki Tewari, one of the witnesses, did not sign until the day of registration and it is not unlikely that Ambika Prasad Tewari who has not been called also signed the document on that day. It is obvious from the document itself that a good deal of the scribe's evidence cannot be accepted as the document appears to have been signed by Adjodhya Prasad twice at the time of registration on the back, although the scribe himself says that on that day Ajodhya Prasad wrote the name of the Musammat on the margin inside the document and nowhere else. The fact that one, at all events, and perhaps two, of the attesting witnesses did not sign it until the day of registration would account for his evidence where he says that the witness signed it on that day. From the evidence of Lachman Lal and Mahadeo Sahu, the other two attesting witnesses, it would appear that they did sign it before the Musammat at the time of execution on the 7th January and this is the conclusion at which I have arrived after considering the evidence. The learned Subordinate Judge does not appear to have dealt with this aspect of the case and probably it was not forcibly drawn to his attention but he rejected the evidence of these witnesses as to the document being read over and explained to Bhagela Kuer. His reasons for arriving at this conclusion and discarding the whole of the appellants' evidence were, as I have already pointed out, based to some extent upon a misapprehension of the effect of the evidence, and although the appellants' witnesses gave evidence, which might not have commended itself to the learned Subordinate Judge, the evidence on behalf of the respondents seems equally open to criticism. There can be no doubt that witnesses of this class frequently attempt to bolster up their case, even when it would appear unnecessary to do so, by deposing to facts which happened many years ago by drawing upon their imagination and what they have learnt from others. But having regard to all the probabilities of the case I feel utterly unable to believe that Musammat Bhagela Kuer was unaware of the contents of the document which she executed in 1908. What was done by Baijnath Singh on that occasion was done without any attempt at concealment so far as the other persons were concerned. The document was registered and the names of the transferees were entered in the Registration Department. Bhagela Kuer herself was constituted the guardian of the property of her minor grandsons under the control of the District Judge. Apparently within a very short time everybody, except the lady herself, was well aware of how the property had been disposed of and a few months after the transaction we find one of the gotias objecting to the registration and endeavouring to obtain possession of the estate on the ground that he was an adopted son of Raghunath. On that occasion the transfer in favour of the appellants was produced and proved in open Court and when everybody else must have known about it it is impossible to believe that Bhagela Kuer alone remained in ignorance. I am further satisfied by Mr. Christian's evidence that she was aware of her grandson's interest in the property and if in fact the gift of 1908 was properly attested by two witnesses and I think it was, it follows that the later disposition of the property in 1917 must fail.

There is another matter which is not without significance in assisting one to come to a conclusion as to the knowledge of Bhagela Kuer of the contents of the earlier gift. The Pleader Narsingh Sahai, who was alleged by the appellants to have prepared the draft on her instructions, was briefed in the case on behalf of the respondents, although he was not the Senior Pleader and does not appear to have taken a leading part at the trial. As he had been engaged on behalf of the respondents, the appellants not unnaturally refrained from calling him as a witness. His evidence as to the instructions he received from Bhagela Kuer and the preparation of the draft would have been of the greatest assistance to the Court and would practically have settled the dispute as to Bhagela Kuer's knowledge of the contents of the deed. I cannot help regretting that the learned Subordinate Judge did not insist upon this witness being called to give evidence. There was perhaps some excuse for the appellants' failure to call him but I can see no reason why the respondents should not have put him in the witness-box if his evidence could support their case. It is impossible to believe that they did not ask him about it and their failure to call him as a witness is not without significance.

There is, however, a further point taken by the appellants before us in this appeal which is fatal to the respondents' case. The document of 1917 relied upon by them, although it purports to be a sale, is, in my opinion undoubtedly a gift as no consideration passed or was ever intended to. It, therefore, required to be attested by at least two witnesses under section 123 of the Transfer of Property Act. Such attestation can only be effectually performed by those who are actually present at the execution of the document, and an attestation made merely on the acknowledgment of the executant is not a compliance with the section. After some difference of opinion in the Courts in India upon this question it was finally set at rest by the decision of the Privy Council in Shamu Patter v. Abdul Kadir (1), in the sense which I have just indicated. Again in Ganga Pershad Singh v. Ishri Pershad Singh (2) the actual witnessing of the signature of the executant was insisted on. In the document relied on by the respondents the attestation by each of the attesting witnesses is said to be on admission by the executant and none of the attesting witnesses was called to prove the document as required by section 68 of the Indian Evidence Act. It appears, however, that this document was admitted without objection at the trial. It was contended on behalf of the appellants that, even so, it could not be received in evidence unless one at least of the attesting witnesses was called to prove it, and the recent case of Shib Chandra Singha [Sudhanya Kumar Singha] v. Gour Chandra Pal (3) was relied on in support of this contention. I am not prepared, however, to go to the length of that case. It seems to me that, formal proof of a document even when it is required to be proved in a certain way may be waived by any of the parties whose interests it may affect, and this seems to me to be in accordance with section 58 of the Evidence Act. But, although proof of the document may be waived this does not affect the legal character of the document or its validity as a gift. As in the case of the mortgages under section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act so in the case of gifts of immoveable property, under section 123 of that Act, they can only be effected by a registered instrument signed by the mortgagor or the donor and attested by at least two witnesses. As already pointed out, their Lordships of the Privy Council have decided that under section 59 which in this respect is couched in similar terms to section 123, attestation, to be valid, must be an attestation of the execution of the document seen by the attestor and not merely an attestation of the executant's acknowledgment or admission of its execution. The attestation in the present case is merely of the executant's admission of its execution and there is no evidence on the record that any of the witnesses were present and saw the execution of the document. It is true that no direct issue upon this point was specifically taken in the written statement or framed at the trial and no argument appears from the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge to have been addressed to him upon this question. It was, therefore, urged that we should not allow the point to be taken at this late stage or at least that we should remand the case for a finding upon an issue specially framed giving leave to the parties to call evidence as to whether the witnesses were actually present and witnessed the execution. In Shamu Patter v. Abdul Kadir (1), already referred to, a somewhat similar situation arose. The question for decision there was under section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act. No direct issue upon the point was taken in the pleadings nor was the issue raised at the trial but the Trial Judge after the evidence had been taken and after the arguments were concluded framed a special issue and decided the case upon it. Their Lordships held that this was permissible under section 149 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 corresponding to O. XIV, r. 5 of the present Code, and further stated that even had there been no such express provision in the Code every Court trying civil causes has inherent jurisdiction to take cognizance of questions which cut at the root of the subject matter of controversy between the parties. In Ganga Pershad Singh v. Ishri Pershad Singh (2) again the precise point was not raised in the pleadings nor in the issues framed at the trial but arose incidentally in connection with an issue framed relating to limitation. In both those cases an application to remand the case for further evidence was rejected. In the present case both in the pleadings and in the issues framed before the trial the validity of the document of 1917 was challenged and it was for the respondents, as plaintiffs, to satisfy the Court as to its validity. At an early stage of the trial during the cross-examination of the plaintiffs' father-in law, who was their first witness, questions were asked as to whether the attesting witnesses were present to give evidence. It was admitted that they were not and no attempt was afterwards made to procure their attendance. After the evidence closed it would certainly have been open to the appellants' Pleader to have argued that the document was not properly attested and, therefore, invalid. It is true there was no argument on the question before the Trial Court but neither was there in Shamu Patter's case (1) and the mere fact that the Trial Court did not itself decide this point does not preclude us from doing so. I had some doubt during the argument as to whether we should remand the case to the Court of the Subordinate Judge framing an issue for him to determine upon further evidence. In my opinion it would be useless for us to do so. The attestation of the witnesses purports to be on the admission of the executant and even should one or more of the attesting witnesses be called and depose that the document was executed in their presence such evidence would be open to the gravest suspicion in face of the document itself. The attestation of a witness on the acknowledgment or admission of the executant of the document is permissible in the case of Wills and the expression is well understood in this country. It is hardly conceivable that those whose interest it is to get the document attested would take the signatures of witnesses upon the acknowledgment of the executant only if the witnesses had in fact been present at its execution. The respondents, whose attention was called to the absence of the attesting witnesses, had every opportunity of proving, if they could have proved it, that the document which purported to be attested merely on the admission of the executant was in fact signed by the executant in the presence of the witnesses. They have refrained from giving evidence upon this essential point in the case and, in my opinion, should not now be allowed to endeavour to prove a case which is in conflict with the document itself.

A further point was taken on behalf of the appellants which, in view of the findings arrived at, it is not necessary to decide, viz, that the deed of gift of 1908 was not void but voidable only and must be treated as valid until set aside in a suit properly framed for that purpose. If the gift were merely voidable it could only be set aside at the option of Bhagela Kuer and she could not transfer her right to sue for this purpose. The point was argued before us and I may state my opinion upon it shortly. Section 19 of the Contract Act was relied on. That section provides that when consent to an agreement is caused by coercion, fraud or misrepresentation the agreement is a contract voidable at the option of the party whose consent was so caused and by section 126 of the Transfer of Property Act it is provided that a gift may also be revoked in any of the cases "save one of failure of consideration" in which, if it were a contract, it might be rescinded. I agree that if this were a voidable contract and not void ab initio it would have to be set aside before a suit for possession could be maintained, and further that Bhagela Kuer could not transfer the mere right to sue but the answer to the appellants' argument appears to me to be that, if the facts alleged by the respondents should be made out, there was never any consent at all to the gift within the meaning of section 19 of the Indian Contract Act, and although Bhagela Kuer may have permitted her signature to be written on the document in question she never in fact consented thereto. This, I think, is the effect of the well known rule laid down in Foster v. Mackinnon (4).

Although, in my opinion, this point should be decided against the appellants it follows on the earlier findings arrived at that the appeal should be allowed, the judgment and decree of the Officiating Subordinate Judge should be set aside, and the suit dismissed with costs, here and in the Court below.

Lala BEHARI LAL—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

Musammat ACHRAJ KUNWAR—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Hindu Law—Concubine—Right of residence—Maintenance.

Under the Hindu Law, the concubine of a deceased Hindu has no right of residence in a co-parcenary house, but the person who succeeds to the house is bound to maintain her, the amount of the maintenance being a charge upon the house.

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Hoshangabad, dated the 29th July 1921 in Civil Appeal No. 54 of 1921.

Mr. G. L. Subhedar, for the Appellant.

Mr. J. Sen, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiff has succeeded as heir to a house that was purchased by his cousin, the deceased Ramcharanlal. At the time of Ramcharanlal's death the defendant-respondent, Musammat Achraj Kunwar, was living in the house. She is not the widow of Ramcharanlal but his concubine, and it has been found that she has been for many years his concubine and was his permanent concubine at the time of his death.

The plaintiff sues to eject the defendant from the house. The First Court decreed that the plaintiff was entitled to inherit the house but could not eject the defendant during her lifetime as she was entitled to maintenance and residence in the house. This decree was confirmed in appeal by the District Judge.

The plaintiff in appeal does not deny the defendant's right to maintenance to the extent of the property inherited by him from Rameharanlal, so that the question as to whether or not, in these Provinces, the defendant, as a permanent concubine, is entitled to maintenance does not arise in this appeal. The appellant, however, disputes the right of the defendant to be kept as the sole resident or resident of the house. No case has been shown to me by the learned Pleader for the respondent in which a concubine has been given the full rights of residence which are allowed to a Hindu widow in a co-parcenary to reside in the family house. The case appears to be on all fours with the case reported in Ningareddi v. Lakshmawa (1) and Vrandavandas Ramdas v. Yamuna Bai (2). It was held there that a concubine has no right of residence in the house, as the person who had succeeded to the house was bound to maintain the woman to the extent of the property he received by inheritance it was ordered that, before he was given possession, provision should be made for her maintenance. A similar course may be adopted in this case. During Rameharanlal's lifetime his concubine could not have occupied the whole of his house and it cannot, therefore, be said that her right of maintenance corresponds to the full value of the house. There is no finding and there has been no inquiry as to what amount of maintenance she is entitled to. This inquiry should now be made, the amount of her maintenance should be fixed and should be made a charge upon the house. On this being done, the plaintiff should be given a decree for possession of the house subject to the above charge. The parties will bear their own costs in this Court.

Hindu Law—Widow—Alienation, validity of—Reversionary heir, rights of—Consent of immediate reversioner—More remote reversioners, right of, to impugn alienation—Inaction of reversioner, effect of—Gift by Hindu widow, validity of, against reversioner—Zarpeshgi—Lease or mortgage.

KESHO PRASAD SINGH v. CHANDRIKA PRASAD SINGH.

nullity it subsists as against every one else. [p. 398, col. 2.]

A Hindu widow is not a tenant for life, but is owner of her husband's property subject to certain restrictions on alienation and subject to its devolving upon her husband's heirs upon her death. But she may alienate it subject to certain conditions being complied with. Her alienation is not, therefore, absolutely void, but it is prima facie voidable at the election of the reversionary heir. He may think fit to affirm it, or he may, at his pleasure, treat it as a nullity without the intervention of any Court, and he shows his election to do the latter by commencing an action to recover possession of the property. [p. 398, col. 2; p. 399, col. 1.]

The consent of the immediate reversioner to a gift by a Hindu widow does not bar the right of a more remote reversioner to challenge the transaction. [p. 399, cols. 1 & 2.]

Bakhtawar v. Bhagwana, 5 Ind. Cas. 270; 32 A. 176; 7 A. L. J. 125, Ramphal Rai v. Tula Kuari, 6 A. 116; A. W. N. (1883) 243; 3 Ind. Dec. (N. s.) 707, Bajrangi Singh v. Manokarnika Bakhsh Singh, 30 A. 1; 9 Bom. L. R. 1348; 12 C. W. N. 74; 17 M. L. J. 605; 6 C. L. J. 766; 5 A. L. J. 1; 35 I. A. 1; 3 M. L. T. 1; 11 O. C. 78 (P. C.), referred to.

A gift of the whole of her husband's property made by a Hindu widow, not challenged by the reversioners during her lifetime and acquiesced in by those who would take a vested interest after her death, can be challenged by the reversioners alone and by no one else. If they choose not to challenge it, and the donee remains in possession under a claim of right for 12 years, he will acquire an indefeasible title even against the reversioners. [p. 399, col. 2; p. 400, col. 1.]

In considering the validity, as against the reversioner, of a gift by a Hindu widow, the true view is that it is not binding upon him and he can elect to treat it as a nullity and sue for possession at any time within 12 years of his interest becoming vested without first suing to have the gift set aside, notwithstanding Art. 91 of the Limitation Act. He may, on the other hand, elect to treat it as valid but no third person can claim this option or set up the plea that such a gift is void merely because it may have been but was not so treated by the reversioner [p. 400, col. 1.]

In determining whether a zarpeshgi is a lease or a mortgage, the test is whether there is a secured debt and a right to redeem, if there is, the transaction has the essential characteristics of a mortgage, otherwise it is a lease. [p. 400, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Shahabad.

Messrs. K. Sahai and N. N. Sinha, for the Appellant.

Messrs. S. M. Mullick, H. Sahai, S. Saran and S. S. Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—These appeals arise out of two suits, numbered 3 and 8 of 1914, which were tried before the Subordinate Judge of Shahabad. They were instituted by the appellant, as plaintiff, claiming to redeem two zarpeshgi mortgages or leases of Mauzas Singhanpura and Magazpura respectively of which he claims to be proprietor to the extent of two-thirds of the interest. The proprietors of the other one third share are some of the defendants in the suit. Amongst the defendants are also the representatives of the original zarpeshgidars who have acquired their interest either by survivorship or purchase from those interested. The villages in question formerly belonged to Sheo Dayal Singh who died childless many years ago leaving two widows who succeeded to his estate. The elder of the two died in 1872 leaving the younger, Bahuria Rikeba Kuer, in sole possession of the estate. On the 11th October 1875 Rikeba Kuer executed a deed of gift of the two villages in question, together with other property formerly belonging to her husband, in favour of Sheo Lochan Singh, a relative of her deceased husband who had lived with, and been brought up by her since infancy. The plaintiff's interest in the two-thirds share of the two villages in question is derived by purchase from Sheo Lochan Singh under a deed of sale dated the 11th April 1890. The gift by Rikeba Kuer to Sheo Lochan appears to have been made with the sanction and approval of most, if not all, of the members of the family. It is further stated in the plaint and in the verbal evidence that two of the three reversioners of Sheo Dayal Singh, namely, Thakur Dayal Singh and Raj Nath Singh, executed a deed of relinquishment of their shares of the inheritance in favour of Sheo Lochan in the year 1877 during the widow's lifetime. This deed, however, was not produced and was not strictly proved. However that may be, it is not disputed that from the time when Rikeba made the gift in 1877 up to the present moment, neither of the two reversioners named whose interest vested on Rikeba Kuer's death in 1880 has made any attempt to dispossess Sheo Lochan or the plaintiff who claims through him, and it is too late now to question the validity of the gift to Sheo Lochan to the extent of the two-thirds share in the estate.

The third reversioners, however, Saheb Singh, insisted upon enforcing his right to a third share in the property and for this purpose brought a suit against Sheo Lochan for possession of his third share together with mesne profits which was finally determined in his favour on appeal to His Majesty in Council. The decree so obtained by Saheb Singh was eventually executed by his grandsons, Lachmi Prasad Singh and Chandrika Prasad Singh, after his death and they obtained possession of the respective properties awarded to them under the decree. The two villages mentioned were, however, subject to the zarpeshgi mortgages or leases, the subject of this suit. These zarpeshgis had in fact been in existance since 1873, that is before the gift of 1875 to Sheo Lochan, and were granted by Rikeba Kuer to the zarpeshgidars. Accordingly the gift to Sheo Lochan in 1875 was subject to these zerpeshgis as also is the plaintiff's interest derived from Sheo Lochan. That relating to Singhanpura is dated the 8th July 1873 and was granted to Lal Biswesswar Dayal, Jaiprakash Lal and Beni Prasad whose grandsons now represent them, being the defendants Nos. 5 to 9 in Suit No. 2 of 1919, one of those now under appeal. It recites that the executant has let out in ijara to the zarpeshgidars at the annual rental of Rs. 483 the entire 16 annas of Mauza Singhaunura for a term of 9 years from 1281 to 1289 F. (corresponding to 1873 to 1882) and that she has taken from the lessees Rs. 3,701 bearing interest at 1 per cent. per month, and it provides that the zarpeshgidars should deduct from the annual rent Rs. 444 on account of interest on the zarpeshgi and pay the balance, Rs. 39, to the executant her heirs and representatives. It provides also that the executant shall not pay off the zarpeshgi for 9 years, the terms fixed for the lease, and if she fails to pay the zarpeshgi in one lump sum by the end of the terms the ijara settlement shall stand good and remain in force as it is and when she shall pay off the zarpeshgi by the end of Joyth in any year the ijara shall be cancelled.

That relating to Magazpura was of similar import. It is dated the 30th June 1873 and related to Magazpura and one other village called Gharbair. The rental in this case was Rs. 852 and the term was for 15 years from 1281 to 1295 F. The zerpeshgi money advanced was Rs. 6,750 and the interest at 1 per cent. per month amounting to Rs. 810 was to be deducted from the rent by the zarpeshgidars and the balance of Rs. 42 was to be paid annually to the executant. The zarpeshgidars in this case were Thakur Singh, Dabi Dayal Singh and Sham Behari Singh, who are now represented by their descendants, the defendants Nos. 4 to 11 in Suit No. 3 of 1919, the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 in that suit being purchasers from the other defendants.

After obtaining their decree in the Privy Council and after the death of Saheb Singh his grandsons, Lachmi Prasad and Chandrika Prasad Singh, also instituted suits against the zarpeshgidars of both villages for a declaration that the zarpeshgis were not binding upon their grandfather, Saheb Singh, to the extent of his one-third share and for possession and mesne profits. In these suits they were successful and got the zarpeshgis annulled as to their third share and obtained possession in or about the year 1894. In 1898 they also acquired the remaining two-thirds interest in the zarpeshgi of Magazpura at a sale in execution of a decree against the zarpeshgidars. It is further the case of the plaintiff that Lachmi and Chandrika also acquired out of the remaining two-thirds share in the zarpeshgi of Singhanpura the interest of Beni Prasad, one of the zarpeshgidars, from his grandson and representative Ambika Prasad, the defendant No. 9 in Suit No. 3. This is denied by the defendants Nos. 1 to 3. Lachmi Prasad Singh died before the present suits were instituted but Chandrika, the defendant No. 1 in both suits and the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 in both suits, with whom he was joint in estate, are his legal representatives. It would appear, therefore, that the whole body of zarpeshgidars are represented as defendants in the suits whether the interest of Beni Prasad Singh was transferred to Lachmi and Chandrika or not, the representatives of the other zarpeshgidars, Lal Biswesswar Dayal and Lal Jaiprakash Lalla being the defendants Nos. 4 to 7 in Suit No. 3. It was contended, however, by the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 that Beni Prasad's interest in Singhanpura was purchased by one Janki Prasad Singh and that as he is not a party the suit for redemption is bad for non-joinder. Janki is admittedly a near relation of Chandrika, the first defendant, and it is suggested that if Beni Prasad's share was purchased in the name of Janki it was a benami transaction on behalf of Chandrika and his co sharers. The only point about which we can be certain is that Chandrika has been in possession all along. No document has been produced showing the alleged sale. Verbal evidence as to the sale is conflicting and unsatisactory on both sides and it is impossible to say whether Beni Parasad's interest has been transferred at all. The probabilities point in favour of the plaintiff's version as the defendant Chandrika has been in possession. It is unnecessary to decide this point because it is clear that for much more than 12 years before the suit was instituted the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 have been in possession of Beni Prasad's interest which was that of a zarpeshgidar and have acquired an indefeasible title thereto. They must accordingly be regarded as such.

The learned Subordinate Judge who tried the suit dismissed it upon various grounds. He considered that the zarpeshgi deeds having been declared, by a Court of competent jurisdiction, invalid as against the reversioner, Saheb Singh, as they were executed by Rikeba Kuer without legal necessity, they must be considered invalid for all purposes. He further held, by a chain of reasoning, which I am unable to follow, that the conveyance to the plaintiff by Sheo Lochan in 1890 of the two-thirds interest in the Mauzas did not convey the right to redeem the mortgages. The deed purports to transfer "all zemindari rights appertaining to the said mahals, save and except those prohibited by Government, and all arrears due from tenants and ticcadars of the said mahals up to this day, together with the decrees passed by the Court, the kasht lands, orchards and houses purchased at auction-sale by me (the vendor) in satisfaction of my decrees, as also the houses and orchards situate in the said mahals, etc. etc., as per boundaries given below." The learned Judge apparently interpreted the words "and all arrears due from tenants and ticcadars of the said mahals up to this day" as being governed by the words "save and except" which from the context would not appear to be justified, but even assuming the arrears of rent, etc., from tenants and ticcadars up to the date of sale were excluded I am unable to follow his reason for holding that the right of redemption would not pass with the proprietary interest to the purchaser. The learned Judge said that the words quoted were a clear indication that the right now claimed was never meant to be conveyed. He further considered that the conveyance to the plaintiff by Sheo Lochan was a sham transaction. He based this conclusion upon certain remarks appearing in a judgment of the District Judge of Shahabad in 1895 in which the present plaintiff was appellant and one Nand Lal Sahu, a creditor of Sheo Lochan, who held a decree against the latter at the date of the sale, was the respondent. The question for decision was apparently whether the sale to the Maharaja who had undertaken to pay off Sheo Lochan's creditors out of the purchase money, the bulk of which was retained for that purpose, had undertaken to pay Nand Lal Sahu, and, if not, whether the sale was made to defeat Sheo Lochan's creditors. It was found in that case that Nand Lal had an express promise from the Maharaja to pay off his debt and apparently had taken no steps to execute his decree at the time of the purchase and further that the purchase was not made in good faith. If I have rightly appreciated that judgment it was based upon an estoppel arising from the conduct of the Maharaja which induced Nand Lal to forego the enforcement of his decree against the estate of Sheo Lochan in course of transfer, with an alternative finding that if the creditors were defeated the purchase was not in good faith. There are no facts proved, however, in the present case upon which such a finding can be arrived at, nor would it be open to the respondents to raise such a plea. These matters, however, need not be discussed further, as the learned Vakil for the respondents admits that he cannot support the judgment on the ground that the sale by Sheo Lochan to the appellant was to defeat creditors or that the conveyance did not pass the right of redemption of the zarpeshgi. It is contended, however, that the gift to Sheo Lochan himself by Rikeba Kuer passed no interest continuing beyond the lifetime of that lady. This question will be considered presently.

The learned Judge also found that the zarpeshgis were not mortgages but leases and that the most that could be claimed against the lessees would be three years' rent,

He did not consider the terms upon which the leases could be redeemed but his previous findings made this unnecessary. He also thought that Suit No. 3 relating to Singhanpura was bad for non-joinder of Janki, to whom reference has already been made. He fell into an extraordinary error in this respect. He said "Exhibit E shows that one Janki purchased certain zarpeshgi interest in 1898. The plaintiff cannot under the law (section 66, Civil Procedure Code) be allowed to assert that this Court-sale was farzi and the real beneficiaries were the defendants Nos. 1 to 3." Exhibit E. is a certified copy of a sale certificate of the zarpeshgi interest not in Singhanpura but in Magazpura which was purchased by Chandrika Prasad Singh, the defendant No. 1 in execution of a decree held by him against the deceedants of the original zarpeshgidar. In addition to the signature of the Subordinate Judge the certificate also bears the signature of the sherestadar of the Court which granted it and his name happens to be Janki Sinha. The learned Judge apparently mistook this for the name of the purchaser. He seems to have misapprehended at the same time both the meaning of the certificate and the scope of section 66 of the Civil Procedure Code.

The respondents place little or no reliance upon the reasons given by the learned Subordinate Judge for his findings but contend that the conclusions arrived at can be supported upon other grounds. Their first contention is that Suit No. 3 of 1919 relating to Singhanpura is bad for defect of parties. They contend that the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 never purchased the interest of Beni Prasad, one of the zarpeshgidars, from his grandson, the defendant No. 9 in that suit, but that one Janki Singh, not the sherishtadar of the Subordinate Judge of Arrab, but another person of the same or a similar name, was the real purchaser. The evidence of this transaction is altogether unsatisfactory and cannot be accepted and, in my opinion, does not prove that Janki was the purchaser. It is admitted, however, that Janki, if indeed he purchased, never got possession of the purchased property but that Chandrika, the first defendant, and his co-sharer, the second and third defendants, took and retained possession of this share. They were well aware of the zarpeshgi, as they themselves had it set aside as to the third share of which they were proprietors through their ancestor, Sahab Singh. They have admittedly collected the rents ever since in the capacity of zarpeshgidars. It was faintly suggested in the course of argument that their possession was adverse to that of the plaintiff but there is nothing to show that they ever asserted a right as proprietors which would be adverse to that of the plaintiff and the right they have acquired either by purchase or long possession must be treated as that of zarpeshgidars. I have already stated that, in my opinion, the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 have acquired the zarpeshgi rights in Beni Prasad's share and the suit is, therefore, not bad for defect of parties.

It is next contended by the respondents that the interest of the plaintiff's vendor, Sheo Lochan, although valid during the lifetime of Rikeba Kuer, terminated on the death of that lady, notwithstanding that the reversioners of the two thirds share have never, from the year 1880 when Rikeba Kuer died up to the present, elected to treat the transfer as void. It is not disputed that a sale or mortgage by Hindu widow which purports to pass or hypothecate the absolute title is valid against every one except the reversioners and that unless the reversioners elect to treat it as a nullity it subsists as against everyone else. In the present case the gift as to the two-third share was never challenged by the reversioners interested in that share. It is argued, however, that a gift stands on a different footing from a sale or mortgage and certain authorities have been relied on in support of this contention. The general rule is clearly laid down by Lord Davey in delivering the judgment of the Judicial Committee in Bijoy Gopal Mukerji v. Krishna Mahishi Debi (1). A Hindu widow is not a tenant for life, but is owner of her husband's property subject to certain restrictions on alienation and subject to its devolving upon her husband's heirs upon her death. But she may alienate it subject to certain conditions being complied with. Her alienation is not, therefore, absolutely void, but it is prima facie voidable at the election of the reversionary heir. He may think fit to affirm it, or he may, at his pleasure, treat it as a nullity without the intervention of any Court, and he shows his election to do the latter by commencing an action to recover possession of the property. The alienation in question in that case was an ijara lease but there is nothing in the judgment to suggest that any other form of alienation would not come within the doctrine applied, and it is difficult to see upon what principle a distinction can be drawn between a gift and any other form of transfer.

In Bakhtawar v. Bhagwana (2), which was relied on by the respondents, the question for decision was whether a gift made by a Hindu widow with the consent of the immediate reversioner could be impeached by a more remote reversioner. The High Court at Allahabad held that it could. They drew a distinction between a gift and other forms of alienation and held that the earlier decision of the Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Ramphal Rai v. Tula Kuari (3), had not been overruled by the decision of the Judicial Committee in Bajrangi Singh v. Manokarnika Bakhsh Singh (4). The restrictions on alienation laid down by the Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Ramphal Rai v. Tula Kuari (3), had been dissented from by their Lordships in the case last mentioned. It is unnecessary, however, to express an opinion upon the authority of the two cases decided by the Allahabad High Court, for, assuming that they were rightly decided, they go no further than this that the consent of the immediate reversioner to a gift by a Hindu widow does not bar the right of a more remote reversioner to challenge the transaction. They do not afford any authority for the proposition now contended for that such a gift is void beyond the lifetime of the widow even if it remains unchallenged by any of the reversioners during her lifetime or after her death. In the later case of Abdulla v. Ram Lal (5) decided in 1911 the ruling in Bajrangi Singh v. Manokarnika Bakhsh Singh (4), was again discussed by the Allahabad High Court. The view there taken was that the consent of the immediate reversioners to an alienation by a Hindu widow was merely evidence from which legal necessity could be presumed, and unless rebutted it would bind the more remote reversioners. The consent raising such a presumption must necessarily be limited to transfers for consideration. It could not be extended to gifts where there was no room for the theory of legal necessity. This also was the view expressed by the Bombay High Court in 1909 in the case of Pilu Appa Nalwade v. Babaji Naru Mang (6). The whole subject of the powers of a Hindu widow to deal with her deceased husband's property was discussed by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in 1918 in the case of Rangasami Gounden v. Nachiappa Gounden (7), and the result of the decided cases was there summarised. A distinction is drawn between a surrender of the widow's interest in the whole estate in favour of the nearest reversioner, where the question of necessity does not fall to be considered, and the case of an alienation of the whole or a part of the estate where the consent of such reversioners as might fairly be expected to be interested to dispute the transaction will afford presumptive proof of its validity. None of these cases, however, in my opinion, form a guide to the determination of the exact question we are now called upon to decide. It is not a question between presumptive and remote reversioners. The question is, whether a gift of the whole of her husband's property made by a Hindu widow, not challenged by the reversioners during her lifetime and acquiesced in by those who would take a vested interest after her death can be challenged by any one else. In my opinion, there can be only one answer to this question. It is the reversioners and the reversioners alone who can dispute the gift. If they choose to allow the property to which they are entitled, to remain in the possession of the donee that is their affair and no one else can object. If the donee remains in possession under a claim of a right for 12 years he will acquire an indefeasible title even against the reversioner. There are certain cases, however, which have been drawn to our attention where expressions have been used to the effect that a gift by a Hindu widow is void and not merely voidable on her death. Nabakrishna Roy v. Hem Lal Roy (8), is an instance amongst others which need not be discussed in detail in which such expressions occur. In all those cases the question was one of the rights of reversioners and in most of them the point arose in connection with limitation where it was contended that the alienation must first be set aside before the reversioner could sue for possession. Such expressions must be regarded in connection with the context and the subject-matter of the suit. It is, in a sense, permissible, though perhaps not strictly accurate, to say that the gift is void when considering its validity as against the reversioner. He may treat it as a nullity and need not sue to have it set aside before claiming possession. The true view appears to be that it is not binding upon him and he can elect to treat it as a nullity and sue for possession at any time within 12 years of his interest becoming vested without first suing to have it set aside notwithstanding Art. 91 of the Limitation Act. He may, on the other hand, elect to treat it as valid but no third person can claim this option or set up the plea that such a gift is void merely because it may have been but was not so treated by the reversioner. The judgment of the Calcutta High Court in Kishori Pal v. Bhushai Bhuiya (9) is, I think, an authority for this view. In my opinion the respondents' plea that the gift was void cannot be supported.

The next question to be determined is, whether the zarpeshgis which it is sought to redeem are mortgages or leases. Certain cases have been cited during the argument upon this question. I do not propose to go through them in detail. I think the result of the authorities as well as of the text books is that the test in such cases must be whether there is a secured debt and a right of redemption. In a zarpeshgi lease properly so called there is an advance to the lessor in consideration of which the lessee is given possession of the land for a term during which he recoups himself for the sum advanced and interest out of the profits of the land of which he is put in possession. There is no question of redemption upon paying off an advance. The lease terminates at the expiration of the term and the lessor may re-enter as on the termination on any other lease. The re-entry does not depend upon the re-payment of the advance nor can the property be held after the determination of the lease to secure re payment as there is nothing to re pay. The transaction is really one in which rent is paid in a lump sum in advance instead of by instalments during the term. Where, however, the interest created in the lessee continues after the expiration of the term until the advance, which is essentially a loan and not an advance of rent, is re-paid, the transaction, in my opinion, has the essential characteristics of a mortgage. It is the mortgage of a leasehold interest in the land and can be redeemed by the mortgagee upon re-payment of the advance with interest, if any is due, upon the termination of the lease, or at any time thereafter within the limitation period, just as in the case of any other mortgage, the leasehold interest in such a case being held as security for re-payment.

In my opinion, the appeals should be allowed with costs here and in the Trial Court and a decree should be passed in favour of the appellant declaring him entitled to redeem the two-thirds share of the properties in suit upon payment of whatever may be found due upon an account being taken between the parties. The suits will be remitted to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Arrah for the taking of the account.

HAYAT AND ANOTHER—CONVICTS—APPELLANTS

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Confession by co-accused, value of—Co-accused not intending to implicate himself.

A confession made by one of several accused persons by which he does not intend to implicate himself, although he actually does so, may be taken into account as against the accused making the confession, but should not be taken into account as against his co-accused. [p. 402, col. 1.]

Appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Jhelum, dated the 31st March 1921.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Appellants.

Diwan Khalindi Ram, R. S., Public Prosecutor, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Four men, Hayat, Habib, Nawab and Jafar, have been convicted of murdering Hazar on the night of the 29th November 1920 and sentenced to death. They appeal and the sentences are also before us for confirmation under section 374, Criminal Procedure Code.

The story told is that the principal accused, Hayat, was betrothed to a girl Musammat Jehan Begam, daughter of Muhammad, Lohar, (P. W. No. 7), she being about 15 years of age and he 35. He saw her in a most compromising situation with Hazar, a young man of 18, and instead of taking action at once he took counsel with his friends and on the 28th November he collected Fatta, approver, Jafar, Nawab and Habib at the house of Jafar, his brother; and arranged that Hazar was to be murdered at the Khajurwala well. On the following night Hayat left his house saying that he was going to see Muhammad, Lohar, who was ill. He arrived at Muhammad's house with Hazar and left it shortly afterwards still with Hazar. They then called Fatta and went on to the Khajurwala well where they found the other three conspirators already assembled. All five then fell upon Hazar, and Hayat cut his throat and neck with a knife so that it hung to the body by two small pieces of skin only. He then gashed Hazar's nose and cut off his penis, and the body was then thrown into the well.

On the following morning Musammat Sharfan (P. W. No. 6), the widow of Hazar, told Musammat Sardaran (P. W. No. 8) that he had not returned, and they both went to enquire at Muhammad's house. They were told that he had come the previous night with Hayat and had left the house with him. They searched the village without success and soon afterwards Jafar called them to the well where Hazar's shoe and pagri were seen floating in the water. The ground near the well was stained with blood and showed signs of a body having been dragged to the well. The mutilated body was then recovered. A report was made the same day by one Nadar, in which four barbers were named as being suspected of the murder. The fact that Hayat was the last man who had been seen with Hazar and that Jafar, his brother, had found the body turned the attention of the Police to those accused, and in the course of the investigation Hayat produced a knife, Exhibit P. 4, from his house, and a chadar was taken from his person. A chadar and a kurta were taken from Fatta and a chadar from Habib. These with the knife and the parings of the finger nails of the three men were all sent to the Imperial Seralogist. All the clothes and nails of Habib were found to be stained with human blood. A pardon was given to Fatta and he has been produced as an approver.

It is fully established by the evidence of Musammat Sardaran and Musammat Sharfan that the conduct of Hazar and Musammat Jehan Begam was highly suspicious and that Hayat knew of it, and the motive for this brutal murder is, therefore, clearly established. The statement of the approver has been attacked on several grounds. It is true there are small discrepancies but we do not consider these of any importance, and it is also both true and unfortunate that a whole month was allowed to elapse between his offering to make a confession and a pardon being given to him, and this because the Superintendent of Police was awaiting a report from the Imperial Serologist. In spite of the discrepancies, which are mainly due to the approver's trying to remember too much, and to his confusing what he had heard with what he had actually seen, we think that his statement is worthy of belief, and so far as it is corroborated in material particulars against the individual accused, it may be treated as valuable evidence against them.

So far as Hayat is concerned, in addition to the approver's statement there are the damning facts that the last time Hazar was seen alive he was in company with Hayat and that they came together to Muhammad's house and left it together on the night of the murder. Though it is true that Muhammad tried to withdraw a part of this statement in the Sessions Court, he subsequently corrected himself and adhered to what he had originally said before the Committing Magistrate. It is proved that Hayat produced a knife, Exhibit P. 4, from his own house, that his chadar was found to be stained with human blood, and that he had strongest motive for avenging himself on Hazar.

Taking all these facts together, which strongly corroborate the approver's statement, we are of opinion that it is proved beyond all manner of doubt that Hayat was one of the actual murderers.

As regards Habib, not only his chadar but also the parings from his finger-nails were found to be stained with human blood. There is the statement of Barkhurdar (P. W. No. 5) that he saw Habib going towards the Khajurwala well on the night of the murder. We attach no importance to this statement as this witness was only discovered at a very late stage of the investigation. There is, however, a very strong additional piece of corroboration in the shape of a confession made by Habib on the 7th of December and subsequently retracted. In this he carefully avoided saying that he took any actual hand in the murder but he did not state that he was one of the original conspirators and that he was present and saw the murder being committed without attempting to interfere. We have not taken this confession into account against any of the co accused, inasmuch as Habib certainly did not intend to implicate himself though he actually did so. Against him, however, the confession which we believe to have been voluntarily made may certainly be taken into account, and in our opinion, it provides further valuable corroboration of the story told by the approver. We find that it is fully proved that Habib also was one of the actual murderers.

So far as Jafar and Nawab are concerned, apart from this retracted confession of Habib, which is of practically no value as against them, there is no corroboration beyond the statement of the witness Barkhurdar. As explained above, we attach no value to it and the approver's statement, therefore, stands uncorroborated in any material particular as against these two accused and we, therefore, accept their appeals and acquit them.

We dismiss the appeals of Hayat and Habib and confirm the sentences of death passed on them.

Appeal dismissed.

JUDGMENT.—This application is directed against an order of the learned Deputy Commissioner of Hazaribagh, stating that unless a civil suit has been instituted by a certain date, the land which had been attached in proceedings under section 145 would be released from attachment and made over to the second party in the proceedings.
